Cohasset lighted yachts in Boston Harbor parade

Above, Max and Evening Star in the Boston Harbor Hotel lagoon.

Colonial flag and Cohasset Yacht Club burgee are about to be hoisted up the Evening Star mast.

Saturday, Aug. 16, four Cohasset boats participated in a parade of lighted yachts organized by Dick Dray of Conventures, Inc., in conjunction with the Boston Harbor Hotel. The event coincided with the 10th anniversary of the Boston Harbor Hotel on Rowes Wharf. At the invitation of the hotel's manager Francois Nivaud of Cohasset, Cohasset Yacht Club members joined representative boats from Boston, charter companies, marinas and harbor tour companies. Leading the parade were two Boston fireboats and creatively lighted boats were the 100 foot schooner Liberty and the luxury cruise ship Odyssey. The Cohasset contingent, representing the only area yacht club participating in the event, was well-represented by the cruising boats Nisse, Max, Jester and Evening Star. Evening Star's crew took top honors for their resplendent yachting attire and top mast festooned with a full-sided colonial American flag and CYC burgee.

The parade route started at the Reserve Channel in South Boston and passed cheering spectators at Castle Island, East Boston, the Charlestown Navy Yard and ended at the Boston Harbor Hotel. Post parade activities included a reception in the viewing gazebo at the Boston Harbor Hotel and entertainment at Constitution Wharf in Charlestown. Overnight accommodations were arranged for the Cohasset boats in the hotel's lagoon.

Thanks go to Cohasset's Robin Lawrence who worked with Conventures to arrange for lights and generators for the yacht club entries and overnight accommodations for the Cohasset boats in the hotel's lagoon. July 25, 1998, Conventures will organize the 200th anniversary of the sailing of the Constitution which promises to be a larger event and will feature the Second Annual Boston Harbor Parade of Lights.

Non-emergencies can hang-up 911 system

By Aleisa Fleming
CORRESPONDENT

The town's 911 system receives an average of 120 calls per month, but not all of them are for emergencies.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said that is one of the challenges of the system — getting people to use it for the right purpose.

"Not all of them are considered emergencies," Noonan said. "We'll get calls asking what time the dump opens, or what time it is or if schools are open during a snowstorm."

(For non-emergencies, callers should dial 383-1212 or 383-1055.)

With the simple push of a button, a NYNEX special recording can cutoff non-emergency calls to the dispatcher. The message reminds callers to use the 911 line for emergencies only and to call the regular business line," he said.

Cohasset civilian dispatcher David Weeks answers a 911 call at the police department.

"We access the call before pressing a button that disconnects the caller from the dispatcher," said dispatcher David Weeks.

Noonan said calls will come in from people who are lost driving in the area or from a resident demanding services. He said the calls are filtered through and have not posed a major problem.

Weeks said some of the most stressful calls come from parents whose child is not breathing.

"House fires can be stressful as well," he said.

"I don't think my job is stressful, it's more important to remain calm and get accurate information to be relayed to either the police or fire departments," Weeks said.

There are times when situations get frantic and the dispatchers are scrambling to answer the 911 line. If too many calls come through at one time, the calls from Cohasset are re-routed to the Scituate dispatch center.

"We handle the overflow of calls from Hull and Scituate," Noonan said.

Dispatcher Sasha Geddes said during the winter months when snow storms cause problems she gets a lot of calls asking if the schools are open.

"People do not realize that ... small town when there is a ... everything gets hectic," ... said.

Geddes recalls her most unusual call she received during a winter storm two years ago.

The storm had caused the lights in town to out. "All of the lights were out, our radios were down, until we got the generator up and running. This caused fire alarms to go off all over the place. Everything was frantic, it was like total anarchy here," Geddes said.

A woman called the 911 number sounding absolutely desperate. When asked what the emergency was, the woman said that all of the lights were out and wanted to know where she could go for lunch.

"I was so frantic I told her she had to go out of town to eat. I didn't even bother to tell not to use the 911 number for non-emergency calls," laughed Geddes.

The 911 system was installed in the spring of 1995. Hingham and Cohasset use a central dispatching center at the police stations to handle both fire and police calls.

NYNEX paid for the 911 equipment using money charged for directory assistance calls.

The state passed a law in 1990 providing a state-wide enhanced 9-1-1 service and set-up the Statewide Emergency Telecommunications Board (SETB) to oversee the system.

Lobster Lab lease is not a done deal

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The proposed Lobster Lab at the Hagerty house could be back before town meeting voters in October.

The non-profit Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, which plans to raise nearly $600,000 to renovate the Victorian house on Parker Avenue so it can be used as an educational marine research facility, has drafted a citizens petition article for this fall's special town meeting.

CLC president R. Murray Campbell said at this point, the proposed article would reserve a spot on the warrant just in case selectmen decide not to grant the group a lease for the former Cohasset Colonials company building.

Selectmen will take the matter up at their meeting Tuesday.

"The article could be necessary if selectmen behave as they have in the past," Campbell said.

Over objections of all but one selectman, the Lobster Lab won a decisive victory among last spring's town meeting voters after 90 minutes of debate.

But since then, CLC has increased the extent of the renovation project. Plans now include adding a second story to the existing one-story showroom which is attached to the side of the house. Campbell said by raising the roof line slightly and adding dormers, the building gains character as well as additional space for the third floor.

Haddad and advisors clear the air on roles

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Town Manager Mark Haddad wants the advisory committee to stick around.

He delivered that message Tuesday at his first meeting with the board, which had held the purse strings until the town manager form of government took effect July 1.

"You're more important than ever," Haddad said. He explained that a system of checks and balances is important.

What has changed is the way the budget will be handled. Now the town manager and not the advisory board will go over the budget in detail with the various department heads.

"Ultimately, it's my budget you'll be approving," Haddad said.

He explained that he planned to establish a good working relationship with the board so any differences could be worked out before town meeting, which has the final say on the budget.

Advisory committee chairman Roger Whitley said he was re-

It's back to school Sept. 3

By Aleisa Fleming
CORRESPONDENT

For Cohasset's 1,250 students, including kindergartners, school begins Wednesday, Sept. 3. The Jr./Sr. High School is now officially the middle school/high school.

Students will see some new faces this year, replacing teachers and aides who have retired or left the district.

Osgood is welcoming 11 new staff members, including: Julia DeWaal, special education; Kendra Coburn, Grade 2; Jeanne Hanson, Grade 3; Laurel Hickey, activity aide; and Anne O'Leary, library aide. The Osgood adjustment counselor is Margaret Raymond. Mary Henriksen will serve as individual student aide teacher.

Principal Marilee Cantelmo is looking forward to celebrating the final school year at Osgood, which will close when the new elementary school opens next September.

New members sought for water committee

The Water Resource Protection Committee is looking for two interested Cohasset residents to fill two vacancies on the committee.

"The charge of this committee is to investigate potential sources of contamination of our public drinking water supplies," Chairman John McNabb said.

The committee is currently working on a Water Resources Protection Plan for Cohasset, according to McNabb, and is now working on developing emergency plans to protect the water supply. The committee also has investigated many potential sources of contamination, including the Cohasset Heights Landfill, the Hingham Annex hazardous waste site, and the potential restoration of the Greenbush railroad.

Anyone interested in joining the committee should write to McNabb at the committee at Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., or by calling him at 383-6202.

Four-way signs can stop bad intersections

By Aleisa Fleming
CORRESPONDENT

If Police Chief Brian Noonan had his way there would be more four-way stop signs in Cohasset.

He says four-way stop signs help eliminate or reduce the number of accidents at intersections. To illustrate his point, he recalls that six years ago the worst intersection was located at Pleasant Street and Cushing Road.

"We installed a four-way stop sign. This has almost eliminated all of the accidents there," Noonan said.

According to police records, the average number of accidents had been six a year at that intersection. This year records show that no accidents have occurred there.

"I am a big advocate of four-way stop signs. Especially in a community like Cohasset where we only have one major highway (Route 3A) and the rest of the roadways are smaller, less congested," he said.

Department of Public Works superintendent Harold W. Litchfield said after numerous accidents occurred at the intersection of N. Main Street and Forest Street, the DPW installed road islands and stop signs to prevent accidents. This project was completed three years ago.

But despite putting in the islands and sign stops, Noonan said, there were five reported accidents there this year.

On July 28, a two-car accident at Forest Street and N. Main Street sent six people to area hospitals.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said there a criminal charges pending against one of the drivers.

"Thankfully there were no fatalities," Jackson said.

Route 3A and Beechwood Street ranks No. 1 in the most dangerous intersection category with eight reported accidents so far in 1997.

Second on the list is Forest Avenue and N. Main Street with five reported accidents so far in 1997.

"Our worst this year is the intersection of Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A) and Beechwood Street.," Noonan said. "There have been a total of eight accidents at that intersection."

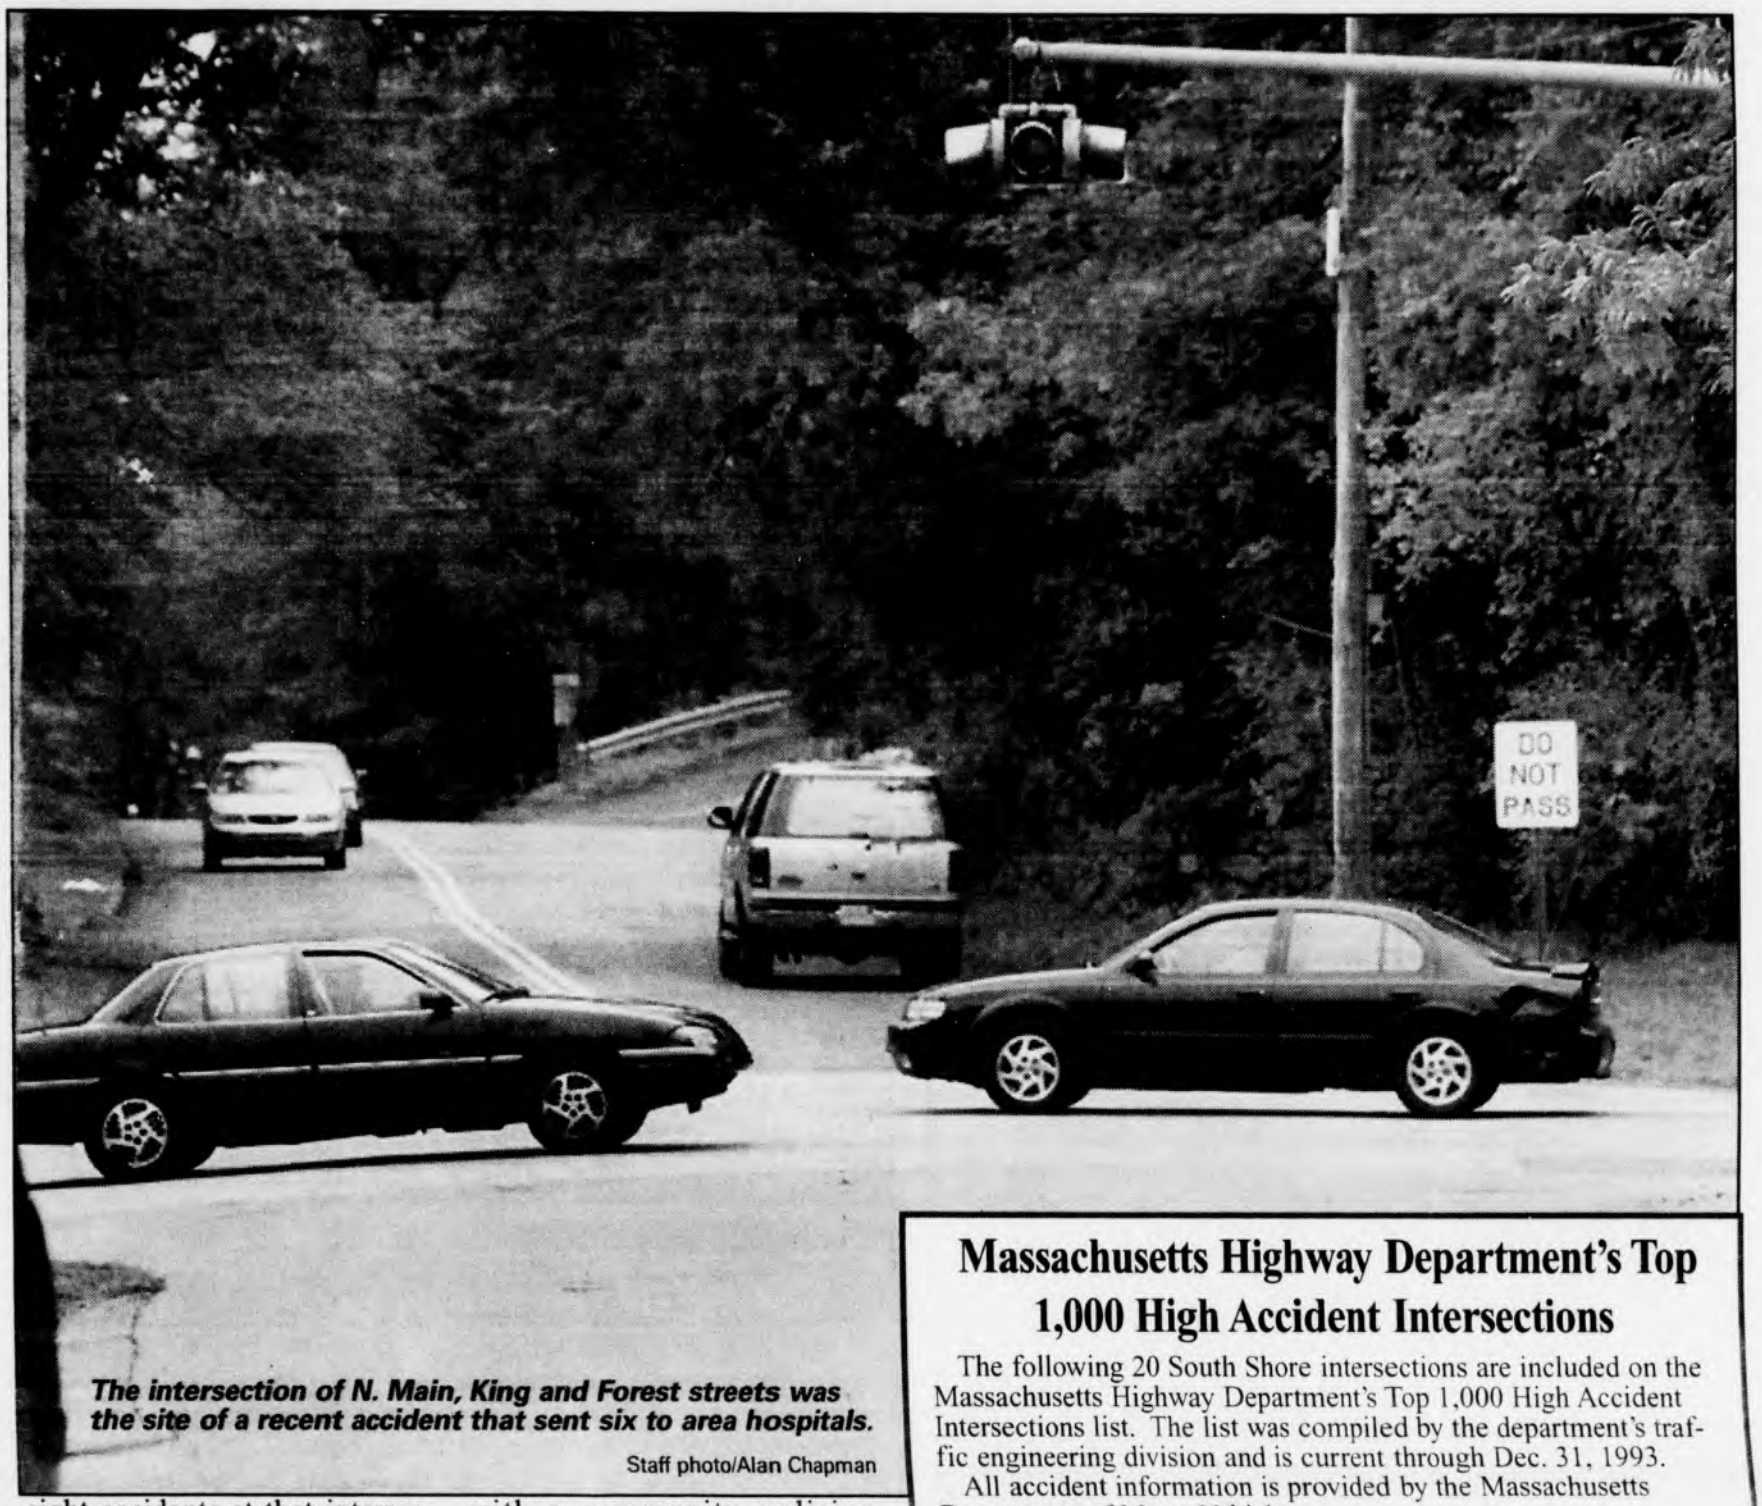
The winter season produces the largest number of accidents, he said.

"The first snow storms of the winter we usually see a rash of accidents."

Noonan said he believes these accidents are caused by young, inexperienced drivers who have not driven in snow storms before. He also cites the increase of summer traffic along Route 3A as troublesome.

To help decrease the number of accidents, the police department purchased a three-by-three foot radar screen that indicates the driver's speed. When the driver approaches the radar screen, it indicates the car's rate of speed.

"This screen was purchased with a community policing grant," Noonan said.



"We are trying to use more police patrols, more radar detectors and community policing to get drivers to slow down."

Police records show there have been a total of 89 reported accidents in Cohasset this year. Twenty-one have occurred at intersections.

Police records show that the average number of accidents at intersections is under three per year.

Unlike Hingham, Cohasset does not have a traffic committee studying traffic problems and looking for solutions.

"I would really like to see one formed," Noonan said.

The intersection of N. Main, King and Forest streets was the site of a recent accident that sent six to area hospitals.

How state picks worst intersections

By Alice C. Coyle
STAFF WRITER

Do you know where the really dangerous intersections are in your town? How about in the communities through which you commute to work each day?

The state does. The Massachusetts Highway Department's engineering division compiles its top 1,000 High Accident Intersection list from information provided by the Registry of Motor Vehicles. And several South Shore communities rank high and appear frequently on that list.

Weymouth is the leader on the South Shore with 18 high accident intersections included on the list. But Braintree and Randolph aren't far behind. According to Mass Highway's most recent list compiled in 1993, 13 Braintree intersections and 12 in Randolph have been the scene of frequent accidents.

To make it on the list, motor vehicle accidents at the intersection in question must have caused at least $1,000 worth of property damage, involved an injury or a fatality, said Kara Viola, assistant to the state highway commissioner.

The ranking of the intersection is based on a weighted average formula, Viola said. Property damages sustained at an intersection are given a weight of one, injuries are weighed by five and fatalities by 10. All three figures are then added together to give the weighted average. The higher the average, the higher the intersection sits on the list.

When looking at accidents, the weighted average formula does not take into account "rate data"— the number of accidents per million entering vehicles, Viola said.

With the current list nearly five years old, Viola acknowledged that updating is needed. Some intersections have been improved already and other projects may be in the works. Viola said the department anticipates releasing an updated list— including rate data information— within six months when a new computer system and data base is up and running.

State says bad intersections are just down the road

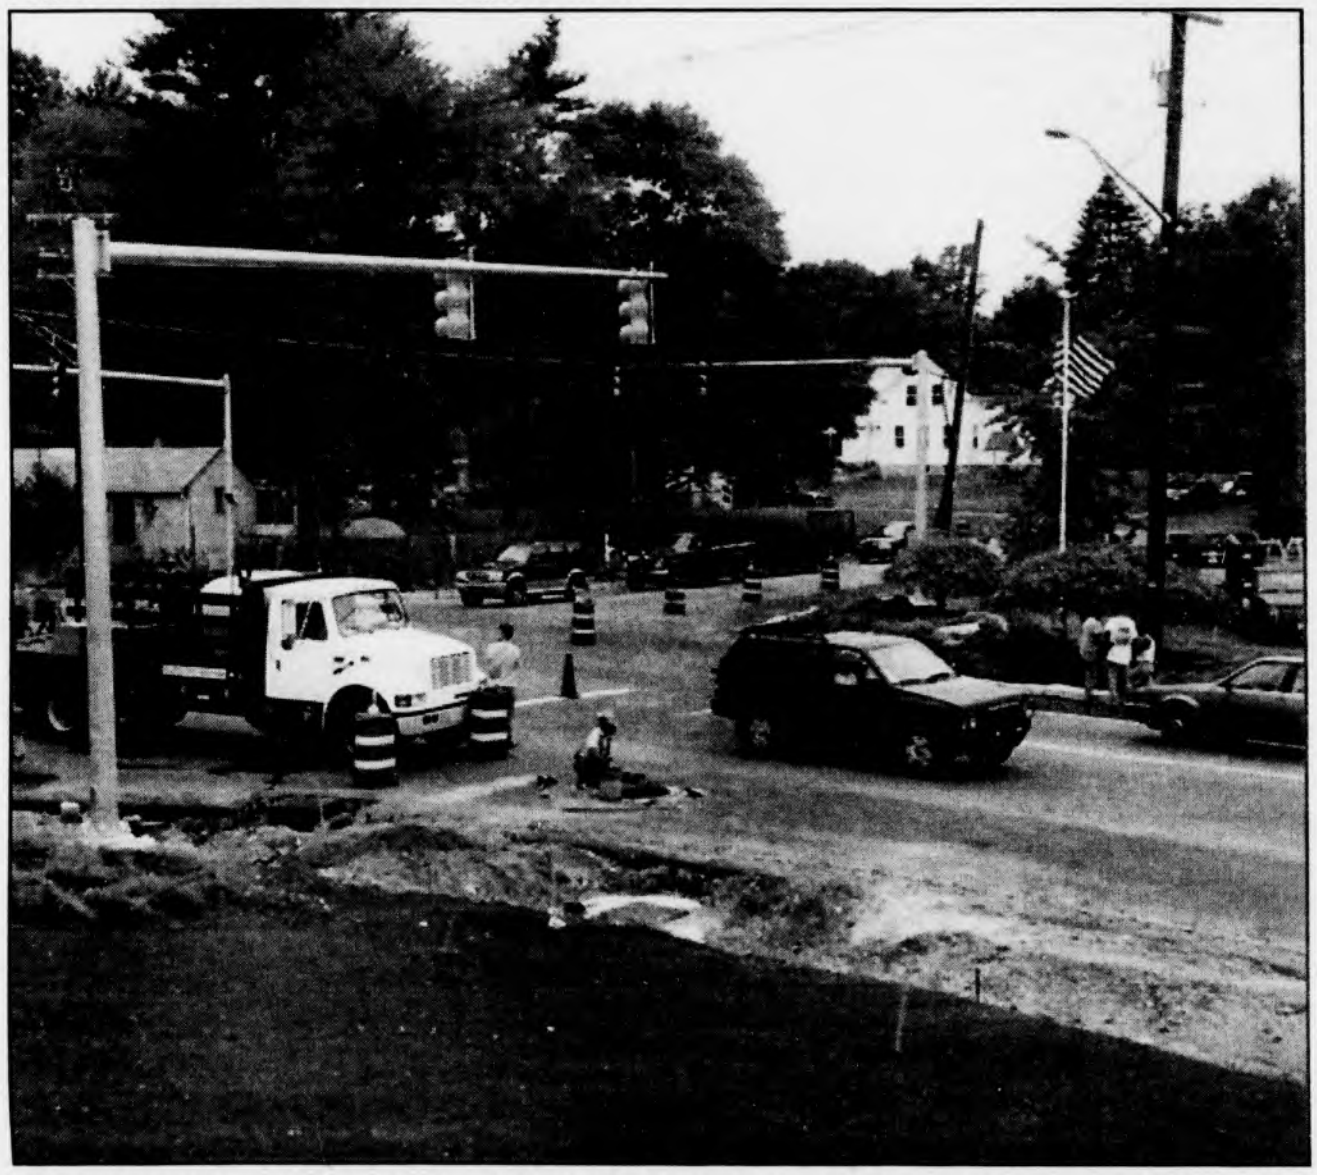
Due to limited state resources, not all intersections that make it onto the top 1,000 list will be addressed by the state, said state Highway Engineer Chuck Sterling. Instead, the top 25 high accident intersections in each district are investigated by the five district offices, and improvements are recommended for some, Sterling said.

Intersections determined to be most in need of work are the department's priorities, Sterling said, usually meaning the worst gets done first.

"Where there is a demonstrated need and a clear accident history, that would be a priority," he said.



Recommended improvements can be major overhauls of intersections including road construction or new signals or minor upgrades involving the trimming of shrubbery to improve visibility and site distance, Viola said.

If the high accident intersection lies on state roadways, the state pays for the project. For intersections on town roads, Sterling said the state and the communities often times work together and split the costs.

"Sometimes a town will come to us and strike a deal. If a community is willing to pay for the engineering, most times we're willing to come through with the construction money," Sterling said.

Chapter 90 funding from the state also assists towns in grappling with dangerous intersections. Sterling said it's up to a community how they use the money earmarked for local road improvements.

Whatever work is recommended, Viola said the department consults with the communities to make sure it is a solution that not only solves the safety problem but is also something the town can live with.

The intersection of Beechwood and Route 3A has been one of the most dangerous in town. It was recently redesigned as part of the Shaw's project.

Olde Salt House up for grabs

The harbor-front Olde Salt House restaurant and dock at 44 Border St. stirred up interest at a public auction at the site last week, according to the auctioneers.

Marianne Sullivan, spokeswoman for Boston-based Paul E. Saperstein Company, said although an acceptable bid was not received, the seller is negotiating with a few of the interested parties.

The property, which is assessed at $296,400, is owned by Thomas S. Eisenstadt of Milton. Eisenstadt could not be reached for comment.

Sullivan explained that in order to bid at the auction, bidders had to present a deposit of $20,000 in cash, certified check or bank cashiers check.

The restaurant, which offers seating inside and outside, is known for its fried clams and chowder.

Sullivan said after the auction, "the main attraction was lunch."

The auction is an alternative forum to market the property, she said. The seller reserves the right to accept or reject any and all bids.

The Olde Salt House, built about 1880, is a two-story, 1,520 square foot commercial building on 5,900 square foot lot. The dock has about seven slips.

Carillon music is a summer tradition on Sundays

By Robert Ziff
CORRESPONDENT

High above the streets of Cohasset at 6 p.m. on a recent Sunday, David W. Johnson, the evening's carillonneur, was just sitting down to play as part of the town's 73rd annual summer carillon recitals, the longest-running carillon series in North America. Johnson, a public relations worker for the University of Minnesota, said that he had taken his Guild of Carillonneurs exam here last summer and had asked Sally Slade Warner, a graduate of The Royal Carillon School in Mechelen, Belgium, and now Cohasset's chief carillonneur, if he could come back and play in the series. With her consent he joined Ulla Laage from Denmark, Carlo Van Ulft from The Netherlands, and Liesbeth Janssens from Belgium, along with others who have played Sunday evenings this summer.

"I used to be an organist," said Johnson, "that's how I originally became interested in playing the carillon. The two instruments are similar in the way they play."

Johnson plays every Sunday as well as holidays and weddings at The House of Hope Presbyterian Church in St. Paul. The pieces that Johnson played Sunday night included Preludio II, Profil Canadien No. 2, A Simple Suite, Asteroids, Londonderry Air, The Lovers' Task, Tryptych, Intermezzo, Variations-Fantasy, Slavic Dance, Serenade I, Campanella, The Bells of Hell, Home on the Range and Preludio V.

If you were in or around Cohasset's town center Sundays between 6 and 7 p.m. this summer, you couldn't miss hearing one of the town's treasures, the Cohasset Carillon, located in the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

Carol Julien enjoys the carillon concert as she relaxes in her lawn chair.

According to the Articles of Incorporation of the Guild of Carillonneurs in North America, "A carillon is a musical instrument consisting of at least two octaves of carillon bells arranged in chromatic series and played from a keyboard permitting control of expression through variation of touch. A carillon is a cast, bronze, cup-shaped bell whose partial tones are in such harmonic relationship as to permit many such bells to be sounded together, in varied chords, with harmonious and concordant effect."

Reclined in comfortable beach chairs and having a picnic by the duck pond, Don and Sonja Nickerson sat with Theodore Bjorn among the chiming bells. From Kingston they had read about the series in the newspaper and had decided to come up to check it out.

"It's our first time here," said Don Nickerson, "and so far we like it a lot. It's nice to be outside, especially after a hot day like today and the bells are relaxing."

Standing directly across the pond, looking at the church, Dick, Karoff, who can hear the bells from his house, says that he comes out to the concerts as often as he can.

At 6:50 p.m. that day, the clouds opened up and unleashed a relatively heavy downpour which sent the numerous members of the audience at the duck pond running for the shelter of their homes, cars or under one of the nearby trees, yet the bells played on. This did not discourage the dozen or so who stayed to the end so they could climb the 47 steps up to the carillon to witness a demonstration of the in-

VISIT THE NETHERLANDS FOR A FALL WEEKEND GETAWAY

England and France are famous for their fabulous formal gardens, but if you truly love to immerse yourself in flora and fauna, a visit to the countryside of the Netherlands could be a dream come true. The eastern rural provinces of the country in particular are packed with both public parks and private manors whose meticulously maintained grounds welcome visitors. On the wilder side, in the province of Gelderland, the forests remain the dense, game-rich hunting country that was once the toast of seventeenth-century European nobility. Many of the area's great manors are still privately owned, although some offer lodging and many offer hours for leisurely strolls around the grounds. Because their country is relatively small, the Dutch have perfected the skill of small pleasures and intimate spaces, and it is reflected in the attention to detail and delightful creativity of their gardens.

Round trip airfares are available from $461.00 per person on the British Airways fall sale to Amsterdam. Call Rosemary at SCITUATE HARBOR TRAVEL, 53 Cole Parkway, Scituate Harbor for a great five day and four night long weekend to visit this beautiful country. She can be reached at 545-4281 or 800-354-2720.

HINT: Most of the Netherlands' castles and country manors are open for visitors from about mid-May through mid-October.

Carillon music is a tradition

strument being conducted by Ms. Warner.

One of the approximately 150 true carillons in North America, St. Stephens is the largest in New England with 57 bells, its largest bell weighing in at 11,280 pounds and smallest at 29 pounds. The carillon itself looks somewhat like an organ with metal rods going up through the ceiling where they are connected to the clappers that ring the bells, the larger of which are about the size of a mini-van standing on end.

Warner, who plays the final concert of every season this Sunday, says she already has been getting requests for her recital.

"It's a great instrument," she says. "It's all done by feel, not like an electronic substitute where you press a key and hear a note. With a real carillon you can actually feel the clappers hitting the bells so you can determine their tone and volume."

Warner will be playing Aug. 31. For more information or to request a particular tune, call (617) 383-1083 or (508) 475-2599.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

IN THE NAME OF SCIENCE

We live in a scientific age in which measured results provide scientists with the proof they require to make conclusive judgments. Those who subscribe to the veracity of purely scientific evidence need more than the word of patients that chiropractic treatment provides relief. This quest for verifiable data may soon come with the help of a grant from the National Institute of Health's Office of Alternative Medicine. The funds have been used by the director of the Vermont Back Research Center at the University of Vermont in Burlington to create a tool that can measure both the force of chiropractic manipulation and the subsequent movement of the spine. This tool will spur future scientific studies of chiropractic manipulation's effectiveness.

At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we encourage research to benefit mankind. Professional chiropractic care can be one of the most effective methods to treat back pain and other musculoskeletal conditions. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we encourage you to boost your overall health by staying active, eating right, and taking time to relax. Isn't it time to call us at 545-7388 to schedule an appointment and start feeling better?

P.S. As it is, chiropractic submits itself to rather extensive study and evaluation, which it is eager to do to prove that chiropractic treatment works.

COHASSET MARINER

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

8 a.m. Friday

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, school bells herald more than the beginning of another school year. For us, it means that all the clubs and organizations that have been on hiatus throughout the summer will soon be back in full swing.

So it's a good time to give you, our readers, a friendly reminder about deadlines as your publicity chairmen get ready with press releases about upcoming meetings, events and fund-raisers.

Here's the scoop.

Copy for all "happenings" and school news must be in by 8 a.m., Friday for the following week's issue. We realize while meeting that deadline can be difficult, most clubs and groups plan their activities well ahead of time.

So we ask you put us on your calendar. Thursday is the day when the Mariner arrives in your mailbox, but Friday morning is the time to get your news items in for the next issue.

Why do we need the early deadline?

Our typesetters and production team are based in Marshfield where 14 of the Cohasset Mariner's sister newspapers are also produced. Getting our copy in early helps streamline the process and prevents typesetting log jams on the day when the paper goes to press.

For the record, we will continue to accept all letters to the editor, obituaries, and sports news (which happens over the weekend) up until noon on Tuesday.

If you forget to drop your news item off by Thursday, please call us. We will make exceptions but we cannot guarantee that a late item will get in that week.

Items can be dropped off at Cohasset News, 3 Brook St., or at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal building at 73 South St. in Hingham Square. For your convenience, we also accept news items by FAX. Our FAX number is 741-2931.

We enjoy being your local paper — that's why we're in the business. So don't be shy. Let us hear from you, your clubs and organizations, and your schools. And we always welcome your opinion whether verbally over the telephone, in person or with a letter to the editor.

Please call us at 383-8139 with questions.

Positive role models at swim center

To the Editor:

In this world of disrespectful attitudes and overall contempt for values, I am happy to report that there is a group of young men and women at the Cohasset Swim Center, who have proven to be very positive role models for our kids.

My husband and I have three young boys who have had their third successful summer of Water Baby and Red Cross swim lessons. Our boys look up to their instructors/guards because "they are cool" — but in a very good way! We hope that the management behind the swim center realizes the enormous value they have within these instructors; and that they don't take their positive influences for granted.

The MacCarthy family would like to thank all the swim center's instructors and Water Baby volunteers for another great summer. We wish you all a successful year at school and hope to see you back at CSC next summer.

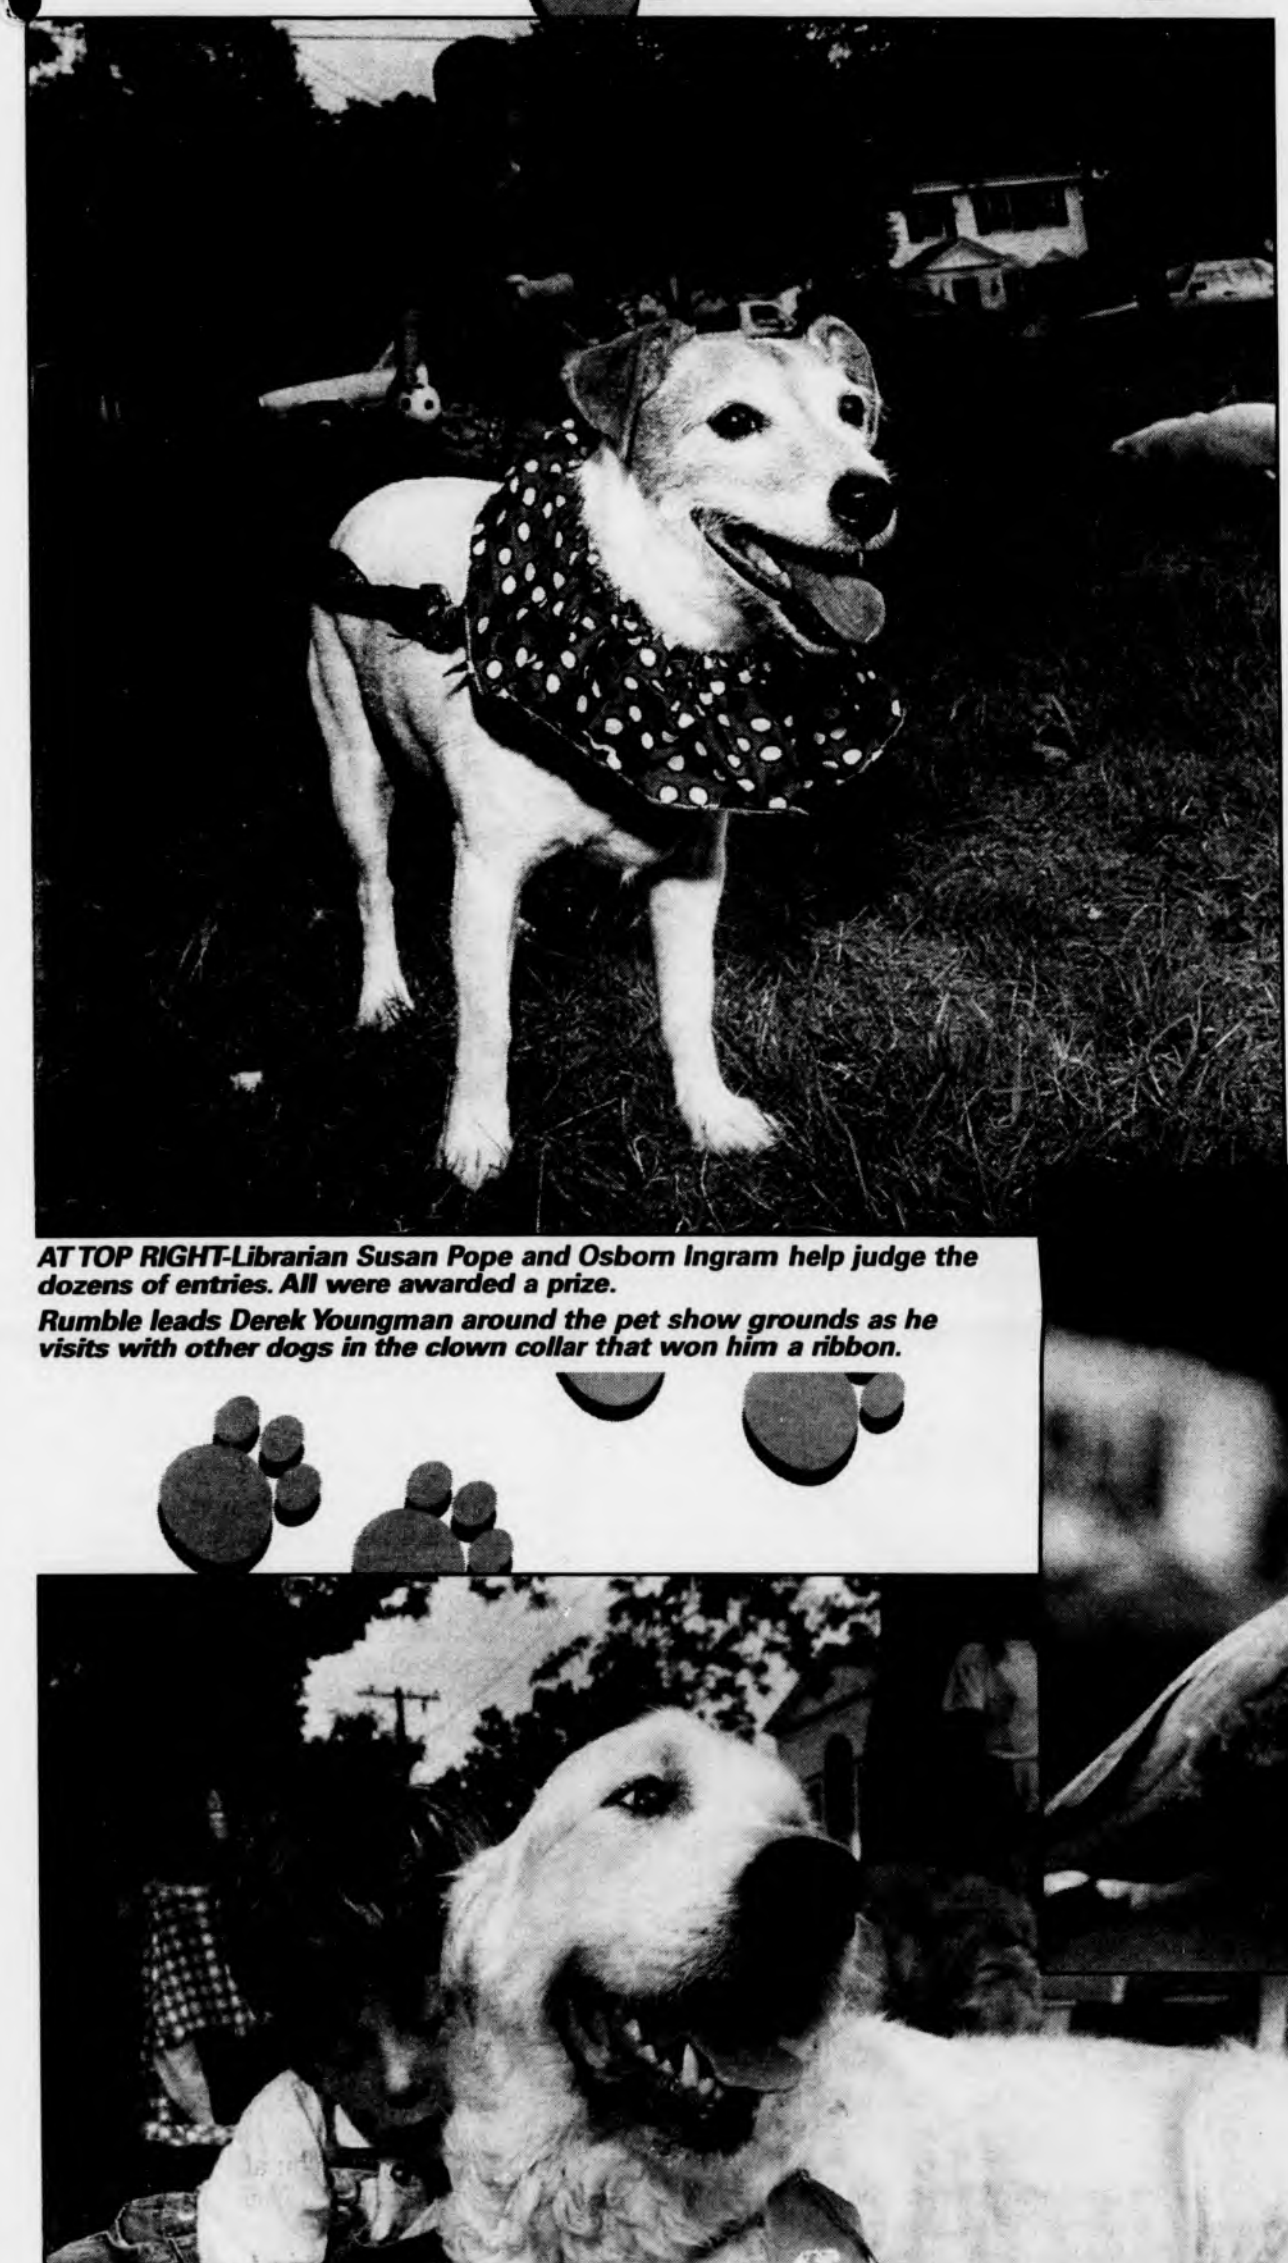
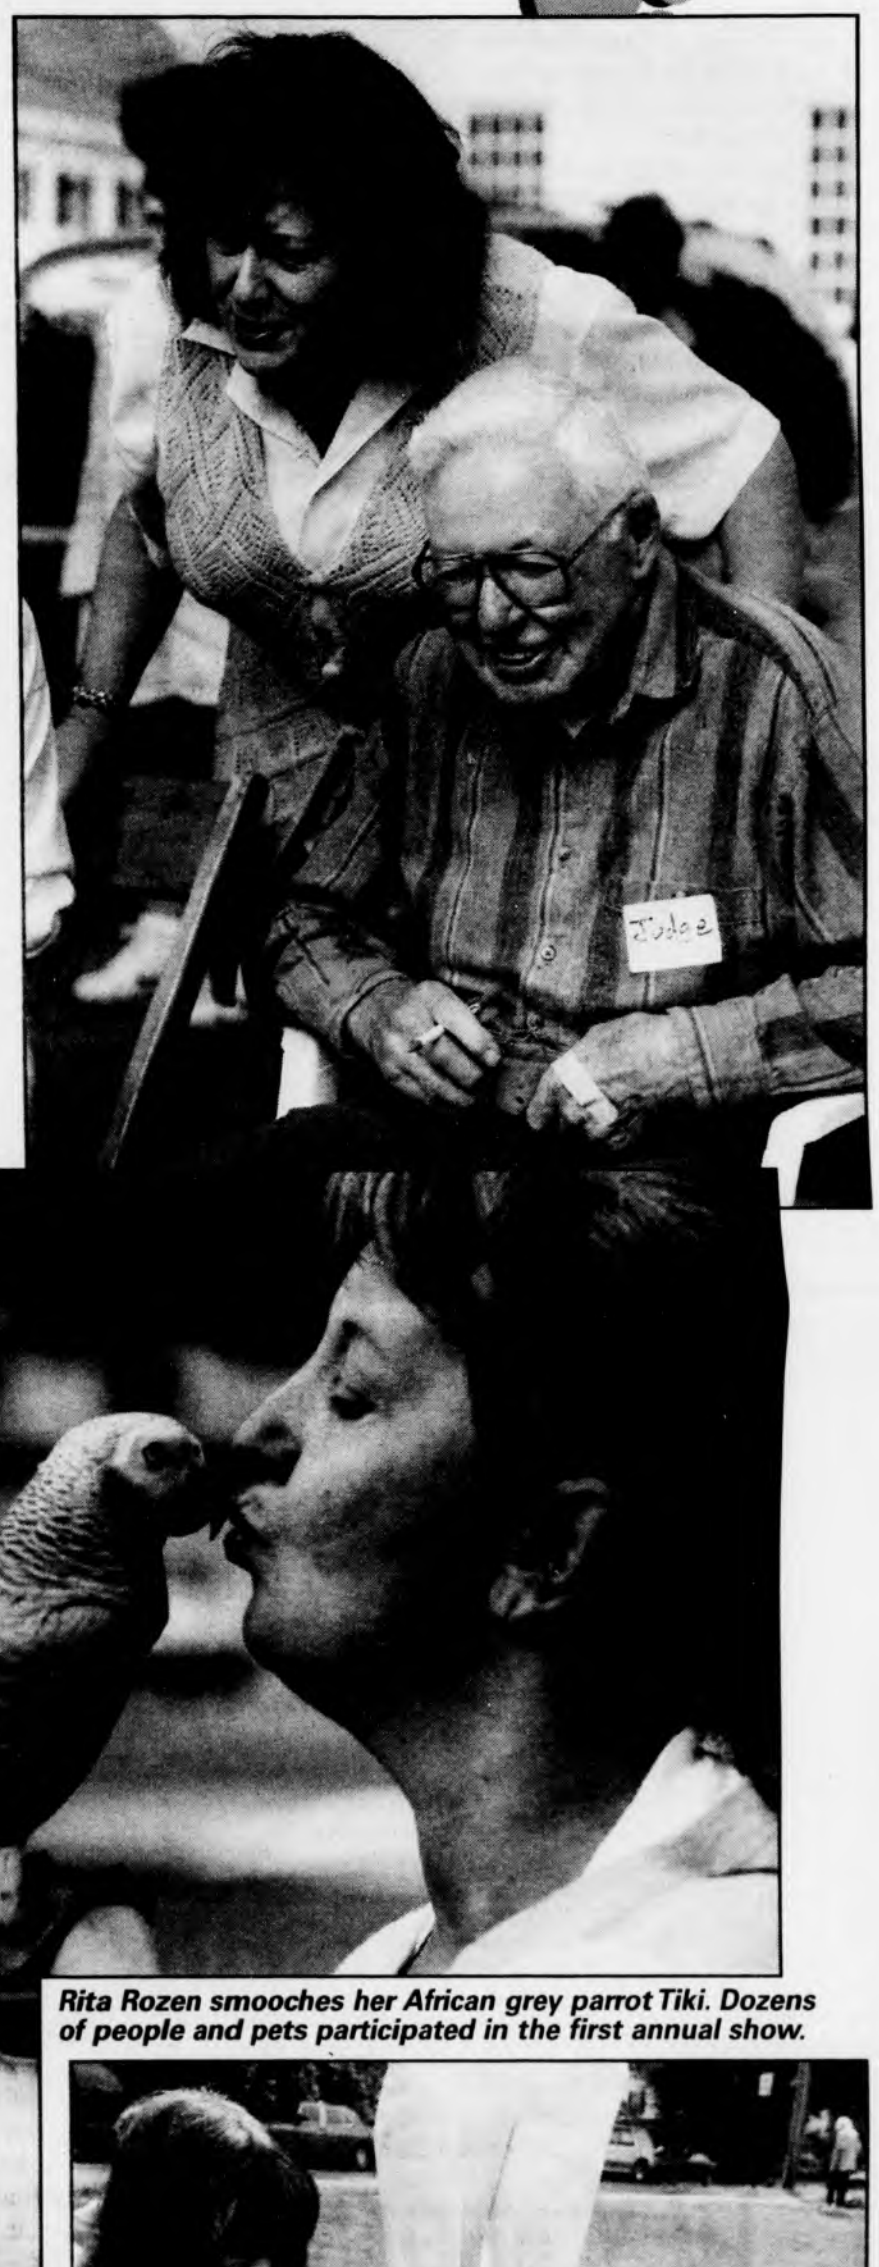
Teen dance was a real hit!



To the Editor:



The first fund-raiser dance for the Drug and Alcohol Committee proved to be a huge success. We did it! We transformed the Town Hall where close to 100 teens danced the night away into a "beachy" dance complete with patio furniture, twinkling lights, floaties, and pink flamingos.

The teen dance committee could not have done this without the support of the following: board of selectmen, Town Manager Mark Haddad, fire department, Curtis Liquors, Stop & Shop, Peter Laugelle, Arthur Lehr, Margo Aikens, Jody Butman, Ann Whiteley, Terse D'Urso and our chaperones, Kate Collins-Wooley, Joanne Green and Pete, Nancy St. John, Martha Cook, Diane and Jack Sullivan, Officer Shelley, and Capt. Jimmy Rooney. Additional thanks to all the families that loaned us their patio furniture and lawn ornaments and to those who donated baked goods. A special thanks to D.J. Jay Fiori for generously donating his talent in support of local teens. We look forward to more successful fund-raisers this fall.

lieved to learn that the role of his committee had not evaporated.

"I wanted to avoid committee members saying 'why be on it,'" he said. "I want to make sure we still have a job to do. We are the go-between the town manager and the taxpayers."

Haddad, who came on board a month ago, said checks and balances in town government are critical.

"If anything your role is more important now than in the past," he said. "You're the board of directors as far as the budget goes. The town needs to see that Haddad is doing the job right."

Haddad assured board members that department heads over large budgets, such as fire and police, could still appear before them to answer questions.

Member Lee Jenkins said that if disagreements occur, it's up to the board to convince Haddad to make the budgetary adjustments.

"If we can't convince him, we can't convince the taxpayers at town meeting," he said.

Haddad said the board would not be getting the budget piecemeal as in the past. He will prepare a complete budget booklet with supporting information and have it ready for the advisory committee to review by the first of February. Town meeting is the last weekend in March.

Haddad also said he is considering asking selectmen to propose amending the by-law eliminating term limits for theadvisory committee. Advisors are limited to two, three year terms.

"It makes no sense to turn a finance committee over," he said.

Haddad explained that it takes years for advisors to become completely versed in the budgetary process.

"It's important to have people in place who know what's going on," he said.

a bittersweet end," said Cantelmo, "but I am looking forward to the opening of the new Osgood school."

Classes at the middle /high school begin at 7:20 a.m. and end at 2:06 p.m. Students at Deer Hill School start at 8:25 a.m. and end at 2:25 p.m. The school day at Osgood runs from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Liz Alpert is the enrichment director for the Osgood and Deer Hill schools, and Mary Beth Butman is the health aide.

This year there will be six sections of kindergarten at Deer Hill, three each in the morning and afternoon sessions.

Three new members are joining the Deer Hill School staff, including kindergarten teacher Christine Hansell; inclusion teacher Diana Littleton; and technology coordinator Suzi Tuttle.

Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan is looking forward to the start of another school year.

"I hope everyone is happy and healthy and ready to get back to work," he said.

Middle school/high school Principal Curtis Collins is excited about the new middle school system.

"We have a separate staff for the seventh- and eighth-grade students," he said. "They will using a team teaching curriculum that is geared toward that age group."

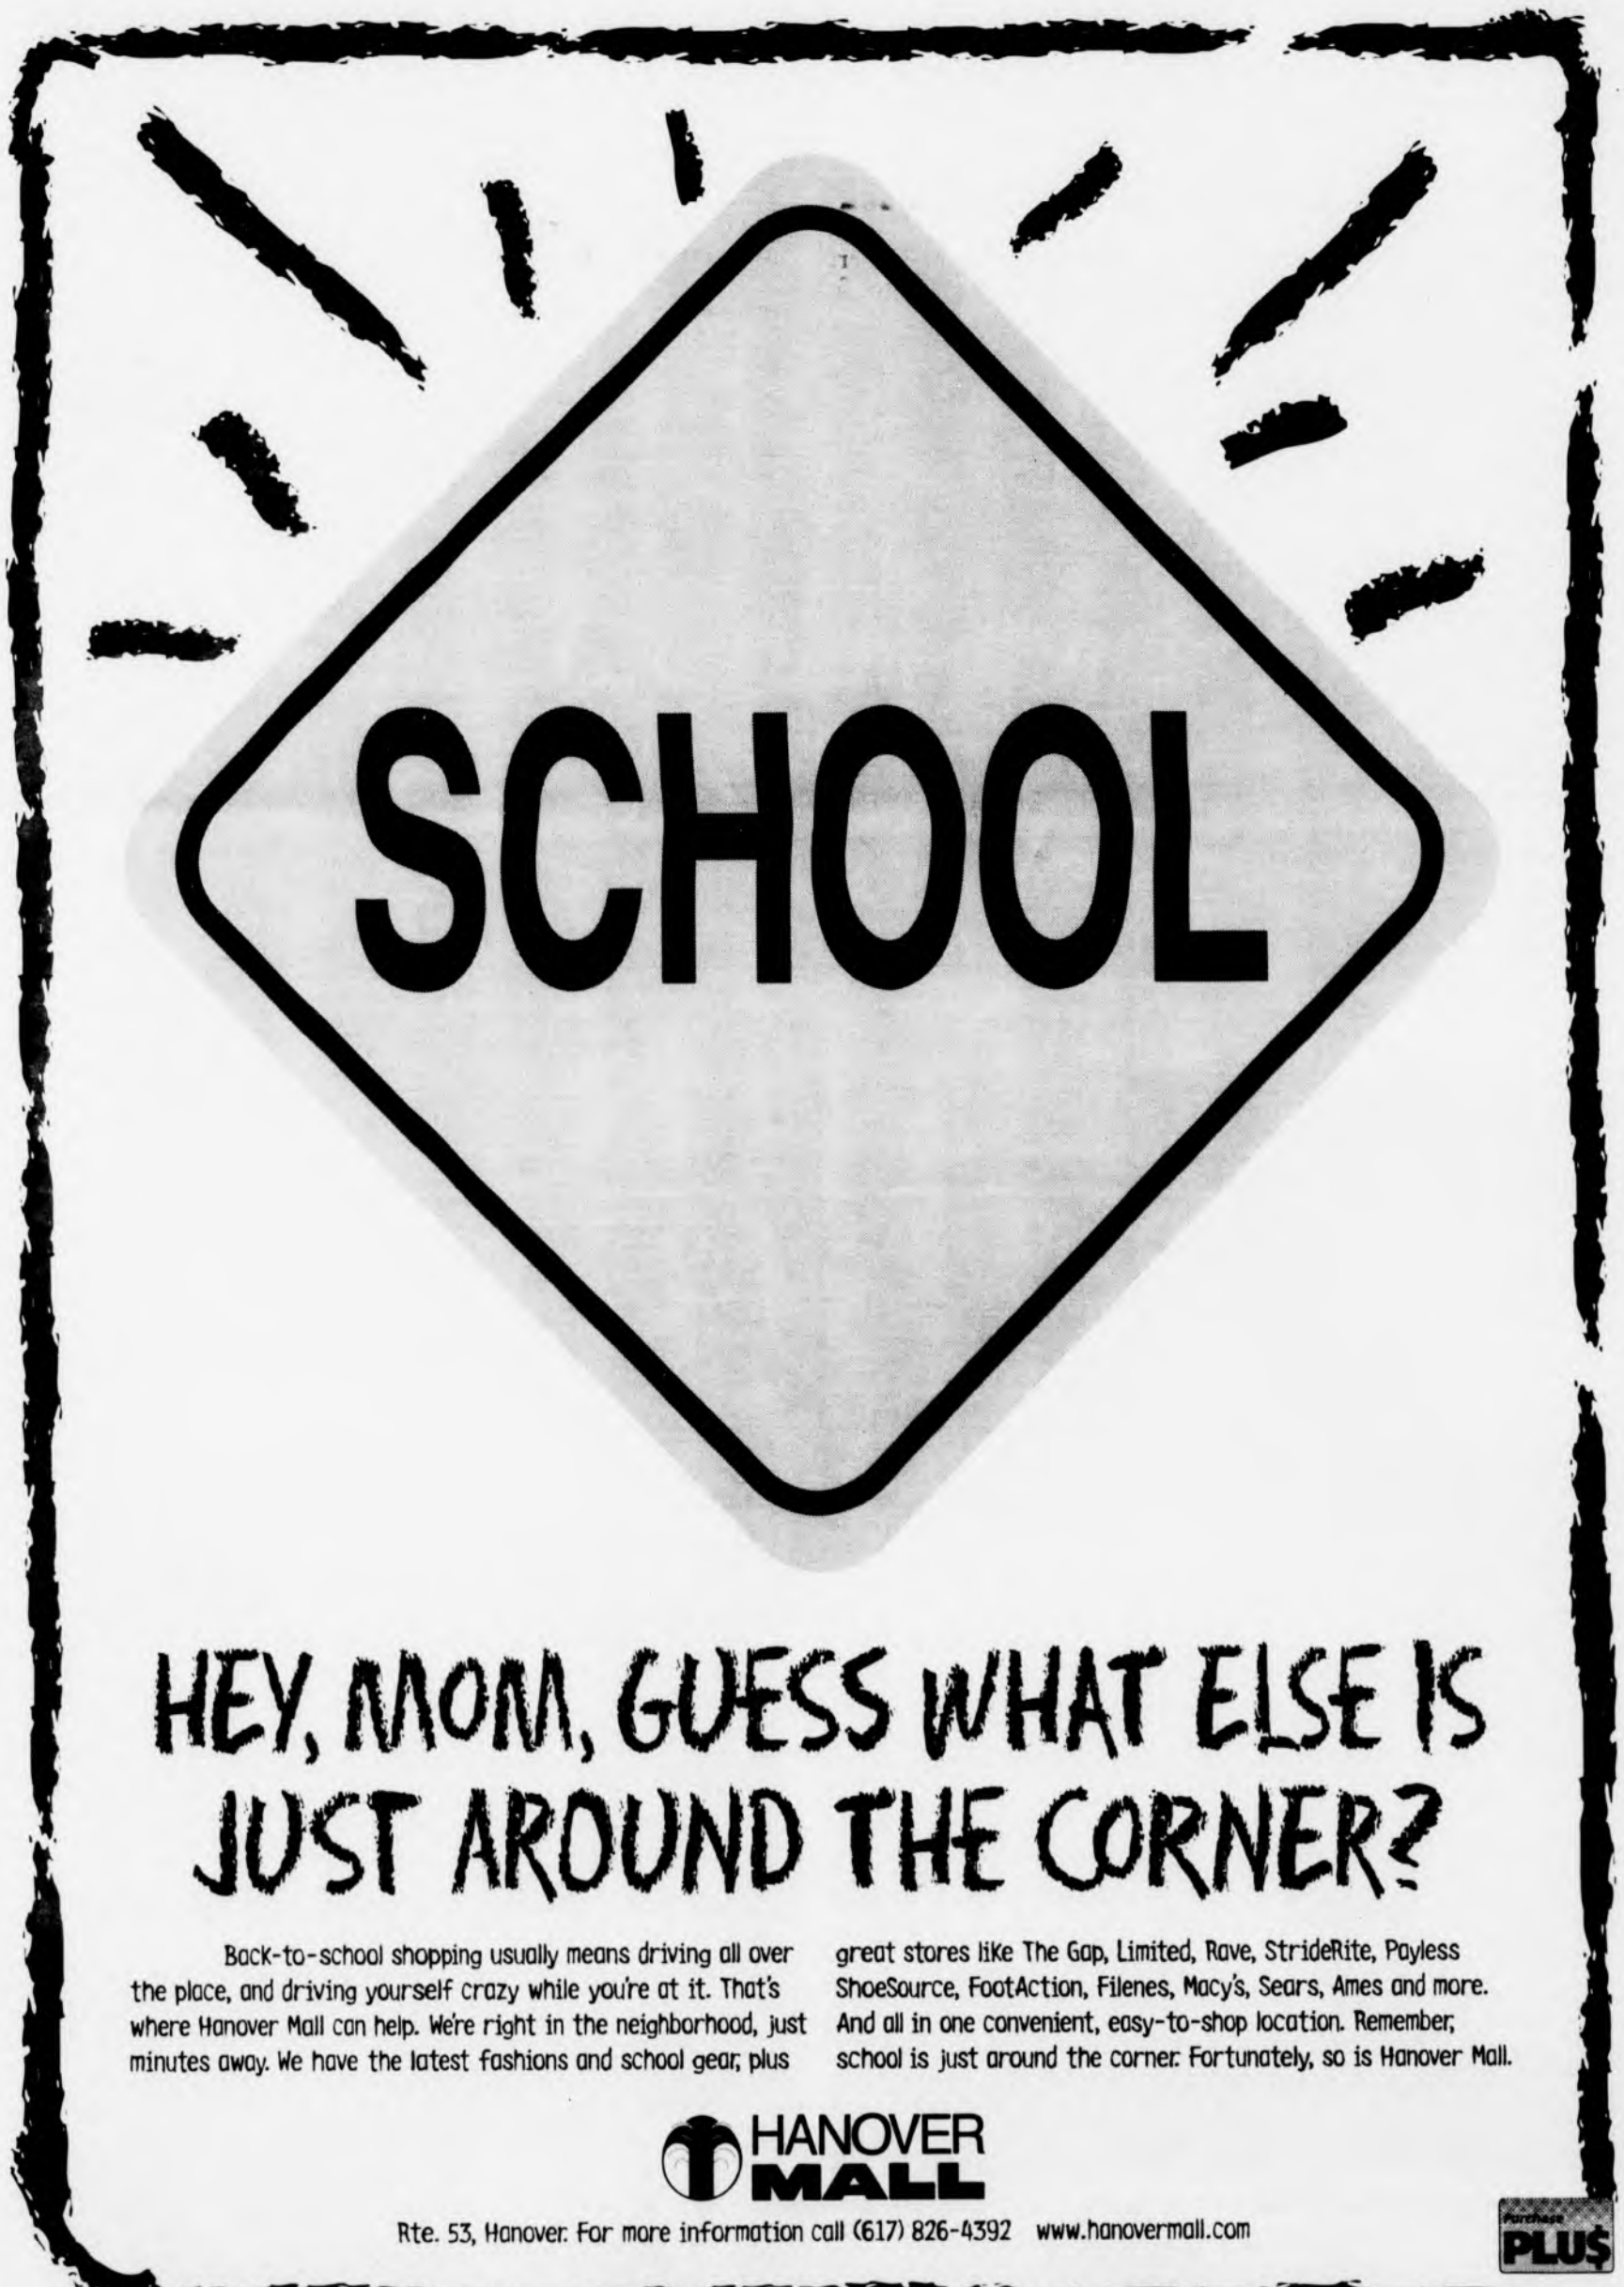
There will be no bells to indicate the beginning or ending of classes at the middle school.

Eight new staff members have been hired at the high school, including: Roger Tait, special education; Christine DeLuca, world language; Mary DeLeon, art; Allen LaFountain, industrial technology; Kim Hurlbut and Sarah Shurtleff, instructional aides; Gina Achin, individual student aide; and Margaret McBride, library aide.

Jeanne Marois will teach reading at the middle school.

As a result of the Education Reform Act, which states that all children must be in school 990 hours a year, there will be no study halls at the middle school/high school.

"All students must be in an instructional classroom while school is in session," said Superintendent Stephen Hart. "Cohasset students will spend 1,080 hours in school this year."



However, students are still allowed time out for lunch.

For those who don't pack a bag lunch, grilled hot dogs and a roll served with oven fries, celery sticks and chocolate pudding will be served on the first day of school.

At Deer Hill and the middle/high school, a la carte menu items are also available.

Lunch prices at Osgood have increased 10 cents to $1.50. At Deer Hill and the middle/high school, the cost is $1.75, up from $1.60 last year.

Milk prices have gone up to 40 cents, an increase of five cents.

Lightkeepers group ready to take on Hagerty project

By Aleisa Fleming
CORRESPONDENT

It's been six years since the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation formed to tackle the $400,000 renovation of the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island.

Now the non-profit group, made up of local citizens, is set to take on an even bigger project: the Hagerty House on Parker Avenue.

Plans are to renovate the structure and turn it into a "Lobster Lab," an educational research facility.

The total project is estimated to cost about $800,000.

CLC president R. Murray Campbell will be before selectmen on Sept. 2 to discuss the proposal.

CLC is seeking a similar arrangement with the town that it has with the Lightkeepers Residence, which it leases for $1 a year.

Here is a little history on how CLC operates the facility that includes a function hall and two apartments.

CLC took over the site in 1991 and has restored it with the help of volunteers and donations. CLC has been able to maintain the site with function hall rentals and the two one-bedroom apartments.

The house opened in May 1994. The renovations were completed in late 1995.

The renovations equipped the building into a function room with a commercial kitchen on the first floor and two one-bedroom apartments on the second floor.

CLC's board of directors control the usage of the facility and collect rent from the two apartments. CLC earns income from the apartment rentals, function room fees, donations, membership fees and events.

The rental rates for the functional hall are $300 plus a $100 security desposit Monday through Thursday, and $500 Friday through Sunday and holidays.

"This includes a four-hour function time plus a two hour set-up and one hour clean-up time," Campbell said. "Residents of Cohasset are given a $100 discount on the function hall rental."

Non-profit groups can use the facility free of charge.

In 1996, CLC collected $21,000 from the apartment rentals, $23,880 from the function hall fees, and $23,072 from donations and membership fees. The total income for 1996 was $67,952.

"This money is used for operating expenses," Campbell said. The net operating income for 1996 was $37,229.

"Any left over money is put into an account to pay for additional upgrades of the property ," he said. "Our net of income over expenses leaves us with a zero balance."

Bancroft Hall which can hold meetings and dinners for 60-80 people, is named after Jane Bancroft Cook, one of the project's benefactors.

All of the fund-raising, planning, and engineering for the Lightkeepers Residence was done by volunteers.

"Most of the renovation work was done by contractors," Campbell said. "We now employ, through a contractor, a part-time custodian and a part-time booking person (for events)."

Except for major repairs, all other work is done by volunteers.

CLC is guided and controlled by an elected board of directors, currently there are 28 members, who serve staggered terms.

To become a board member Campbell said "you need to be a Cohasset resident and be interested in helping preserve the history of Cohasset."

The group's mission is "exclusively for the civic, social, charitable, educational and recreational betterment of the town and to repair, preserve, maintain operate and utilize the former Lightkeepers residence."

To make the building handicap accessible, a ramp, elevator and second staircase would be added and enclosed at the rear of the building.

The proposed layout increases the usable second floor area from 830 to 1,856 square feet and the third floor from 475 to 1,282 square feet.

Selectmen have concerns that as the square footage increases so will the number of parking spaces to be set aside for the Lobster Lab as required under the town by-laws. Parking is already limited at the site which is also doubles the town's only public boat ramp.

And they are not the only ones who are upset. A majority of the Hagerty Property Committee, an appointed board charged with coming up with a recreational plan for the 2.2 acre Hagerty parcel, voted last week against the expansion of the house renovation plans.

But Campbell dismissed parking concerns as being put forth by those who are determined to kill the project.

"What difference does the number of spaces make, when they are not going to be used when another has a need for them?" he asked. CLC said it will not rope the spaces off and the lab won't even be used in the summer and on weekends when the competition for parking would be greatest.

Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan, who has had strong reservations about the entire proposal from the outset, said CLC increased the size of the building without consulting with anyone.

"This is outside the scope presented to town meeting," he said.

The town bought the Hagerty property four years ago for $475,000. Over the years, selectmen have considered leasing, selling, moving or demolishing the house which has fallen into disrepair under the town's ownership. Cohasset Colonials, a furniture kit manufacturer, relocated to Hingham after the town bought the site.

The Lobster Lab is the brainchild of local biologist Kevin Ulmer, who would serve as its volunteer director. Campbell said CLC was intrigued by Ulmer's proposal.

"It was too wonderful a concept to let it drop," Campbell said.

CLC formed six years ago to tackle the renovation of the Lightkeepers Residence which includes a popular function hall (see related story).

Greek Orthodox Church to be consecrated

Through a ceremony originally performed nearly 2,000 years ago, The Nativity of the Virgin Mary Church in Cohasset will be formally consecrated as a church in the Greek Orthodox faith Sunday, Sept. 7. The church, built in 1898 as a Protestant house of worship, became a home to Greek Orthodox worshippers on the South Shore in 1980. Known by many for its annual Greek festival in July, the parish has developed and evolved into a dynamic and progressive congregation under the spiritual leadership and guidance of Father John G. Maheras.

The consecration of the church building is a once in a lifetime event for a parish. The rite, which is performed by an archbishop or bishop, resembles Holy Baptism and Holy Chrismation. The word "consecration" in Greek, translated literally, means renewal. Just as an individual is renewed at the time of their baptism and chrismation, a building is "renewed," pledged to Christian worship forever.

Michael McNamara, president of the Board of Stewards of The Nativity of the Virgin Mary Church, attributes this opportunity to the faith and hard work of the entire parish. "Over the years, each of the 250 families who participate in this congregation, have given of themselves to the church and each other. This is an exciting and proud moment for all of us."

Archbishop Spyridon, traveling from New York City, will officiate this, his first consecration of a church in America, along with Bishop Methodios of the Diocese of Boston. The event begins Friday, Sept. 5, with a choral concert presented by the ecumenical community of Cohasset, along with the St. Mark Orthodox Church of Kingston.

Cohasset Library story hour

Registrations are currently being accepted for the fall preschool story hour at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Story hour will be held Thursday afternoons at 1 and Friday mornings at 10, beginning Oct. 2. Each 45-minute program consists of several picture book stories and simple fingerplays, songs and crafts. From high ideals to failure fears

All kinds, all ages of kids are prone to stress

By Lesley Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

In a world and a time when "stressed out" has evolved into a household phrase, the pressure is on at every age, and adults are not the only ones to experience stress.

Jeri Broming, an adjustment counselor at Silver Lake Junior High School in Pembroke, says that adolescents and preadolescents are especially vulnerable to stress.

Beginning in junior high school, Broming says a source of that stress comes when students tend to start separating from their parents and identifying with a particular peer group. It's a time when children and teenagers are trying to figure out who they are and who they want to be, she says.

But Broming says some level of stress is healthy. "I think everyone has some level of stress — natural levels of stress from things that have been going on for generations. From dealing with stringent academics to maintaining high standards, trying to get on a sports team, maybe a student doesn't feel good enough for a parent or teacher, or coping with a disability — physical or mental."

Broming says it's time for concern when stress stems from things like problems at home or problems in a student's community. And without some kind of adult support, she says, students can have a tough time coping.

"Kids don't know when to seek help. They become desperate and find inappropriate ways to deal with conflict," says Broming, citing acting out in the classroom, performing poorly in school, failing classes, dropping out of school physically or emotionally, alcohol and drug use, and crime.

Broming says that at the school, teachers and staff look for the students who have traditionally done well and then things start to change — "kids who were always good who are all of a sudden getting into trouble."

On the flip side, Broming says students who haven't done particularly well in school and don't appear to be making any progress are also the ones to target.

She says there are all kinds of physical signs that a student might be stressed out — falling asleep in class, coming to class unprepared, lack of energy and poor hygiene.

Leaders of the pack

High achievers' stress stems from too much pressure to do too many things, Broming says, "when students are spread too thin or when they are just at a point they don't feel like they can rally."

Terri Rakauskas, health educator at Silver Lake Junior High, describes the high-achievers as "very intense, kids who want to do very well in school, in everything. They're involved in so many different things."

> "Dealing with a child approaching adolescence is like flying a kite. You have to figure out how much to hold on to and how much to let out. There's a danger when they don't have enough guidance and too much freedom. That's when students make poor decisions. That's when major stress begins. They don't have any mentors. That's when they become victims of peer pressure."

These are the ones who are the "classically great students" in elementary school. Broming says junior high might find them overwhelmed or confused. She says sometimes dealing with that is simply a matter of saying, "I can't do this," and recognizing the need for some extra space.

If they can't seem to do that, Broming says high achieving students will tend to internalize that sense of being overwhelmed. "They will turn a lot of that inward and are likely to develop severe depression, eating disorders or drop out," she says.

Low-achievers, on the other hand, will act out. "They don't like being low-achievers. They act out, get in trouble, disrupt the class," Rakauskas says.

As far as the "middle-of-the-road kid," Rakauskas says that's "usually the kind of kid who kicks back, knows the role, plays the role. Usually, they are the least stressed, or seem to be. They are probably the most ignored."

She says it's important for parents to recognized when their child might be stressed.

And Broming says oftentimes students will mirror their parents' stress. "The students say they are worried about coming to school when the parents are really the ones who are worried about junior high," she says.

Rakauskas says each student needs to be dealt with differently — encourage the low achievers to work harder, let the high achievers know they don't have to be perfect, and don't ignore the middle-of-the-road students.

In addition, Broming points out that "not all kids are dealt with the same deck (of cards)." Learning to deal with the hand that's dealt is a part of coping.

Broming says students at SLJH — who come from Plympton, Halifax, Kingston and Pembroke — are from an array of backgrounds. While she says that there is not such a diversity of race, students come from different economic backgrounds with diverse cultural and educational levels of parents.

"I think it's an issue for kids — they are very into how they dress and how they look, where they're from and what neighborhood," she says. "Some parents are professionals, some are unemployed, some are blue collar, some have no work ethic."

A hand to guide them

Regardless of background, Broming says having a mentor makes all the difference. "Usually the kids who are successful have some sort of mentor. They have learned along the way to be resilient."

Parents, teachers, friends and neighbors are all people an adolescent can look to for guidance. Before junior high school, many children are used to being taken care of. Then all of a sudden it's time for them to make more choices on their own, Broming says.

Acting as a mentor for one's child is one way parents can strike a balance between letting their children break away and become their own people while offering a hand to guide them, Broming adds.

"Dealing with a child approaching adolescence is like flying a kite. You have to figure out how much to hold on to and how much to let out," she says. "There's a danger when they don't have enough guidance and too much freedom. That's when students make poor decisions. That's when major stress begins. They don't have any mentors. That's when they become victims of peer pressure."

While she says all students face peer pressure, those who have someone to look to for guidance will fare better.

A matter of perspective

Broming defines stress as adopting a way to deal with disappointment. "There will always be setbacks and disappointments. Maybe a relative level of stress is a way to deal with disappointment," she says.

Rakauskas, who includes a unit on stress in her seventh grade health education class, says at the beginning of the unit 95 percent of the students in the class raised their hands when asked if they suffered from headaches.

"They are all stress-related (headaches)," says Rakauskas.

Rakauskas says junior high school students are more stressed than anyone else. "From the moment they come in, they're all uptight. They want to please so badly," she says.

The desire to please is coupled with having "a zillion rules they have to try and remember to do exactly right. It's amazing they make it through the first few weeks."

But Rakauskas says some people have the misconception that all stress is bad. "Stress is very positive is you use it in a positive way," she says.

Rakauskas, who coaches boys tennis and previously coached girls field hockey, says exercise and talking about one's feeling is one of the best ways to deal with stress.

A balancing act

Dealing with stress in the formative years is all about learning to balance.

Broming says it's a matter of balancing one's own needs with the needs of others — "peers, academics, certain adults. I think maybe some people don't realize how tough adolescence is. The first stage is dealing with all these needs and conflicting interests. All these things were dealt with for them as a child."

The same kinds of issues crop up again when students enter college. Those who learn coping skills early on will fare better later, Broming says.

The bottom line?

"It's about creating a balance and having outlets and mentors — someone to talk things through with. And knowing that some sense of stress and turmoil is normal," Broming says. "Life is not completely even — it has its ups and downs."

Three who balance their act

Jennifer Arthur, who graduated second in her Duxbury Junior/Senior High School class in June and is getting ready to enter Yale University, has learned to create the balance that reduces stress. She says one of the keys to her success has a lot to do with planning.

"It was a lot of foresight," Arthur says, explaining that if she knew chemistry homework would take a while, she would start working on it a few days early.

It was through foresight that she avoided what could have been a lot of stress given her busy schedule: She played field hockey for four years, golf freshmen year and lacrosse sophomore and junior year. Senior year, Arthur opted to work instead of playing lacrosse in the spring. She also participated in the academic decathlon and drama for four years.

"If it's something you particularly enjoy, it's easier," she says.

Arthur says she always made sure she had enough time for homework — about three hours per night.

Through it all, Arthur says she is her strongest critic. "If I'm not doing something up to my potential, I push myself."

Very real

Jana Whiting, a ninth-grader from Halifax, is also successful in creating a balance — despite a long list of extracurricular activities, she says she did not have that much stress at Silver Lake Junior High.

On the eve of entering Silver Lake Regional High School, she reflects on her junior high years. "My teachers were really helpful. They gave a lot of homework but not an overload," says Whiting, who also credits her parents and older brothers.

But at the same time, Whiting recognizes that stress can be a very real thing for junior high school students. Through her involvement as a mediator with the peer mediation program in junior high, she has seen first-hand the kinds of issues students face.

"A lot of stress comes from friendships, gossip and social groups," Whiting says. "People don't think it's a big deal to walk down the hall by yourself. But some kids feel like they don't fit in. Being in the corner of a classroom can be a big deal."

Whiting admits that it's stressful to write speeches and get up in front of people to deliver them. She also says she's a bit nervous for high school soccer try-outs. But, she adds, that's all positive stress.

"My mom just tells me to try my hardest, and if I couldn't score the winning goal at a soccer game or I mess up a speech, she says that's OK."

One thing at a time

Like Whiting, 14-year-old Patrick Flight, of Pembroke, just completed eighth grade at SLJHS and is getting ready for ninth grade at SLRHS.

Patrick says he thought junior high school would be a lot more stressful than it actually was. "You hear on TV about kids getting stuffed in lockers. That doesn't happen," he says.

Patrick considers himself fortunate that most of his friends from elementary school were carried over to some of his classes in junior high and that he was able to make new friends quickly.

Patrick says he thinks the best way to deal with stress is to take one thing at a time.

"I think the best way to deal with it is not to worry too much. If you just work through everything separately, then eventually the work will get done."

IT'S CHILD'S PLAY TO YOU.
BUT IT'S ROCKET SCIENCE TO HIM.

Research shows that during the early years, fun and learning are one and the same...and that young children who are allowed to learn through play actually become better students later on. That's why Gymboree Play Programs are creatively designed to help infants, toddlers, and preschoolers explore and learn about themselves and their world through developmentally appropriate play.

Gymboree is fun with a purpose -- children explore their growing abilities, from motor skills and socialization to the seeds of intellect that can take them to the stars. Parents are actively involved in the fun, making it even more satisfying and fruitful.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS

Learn to identify signs of underachievers

By Caron Golden
CORRESPONDENT

He's lazy, she's bored; he's unmotivated, she's not reaching her potential.

Sound familiar? It's a common lament among parents and teachers. Your child daydreams during class and doesn't do homework. He seems undisturbed by low grades. She cuts classes.

They are, in a word, underachievers. But that word, overused and not exactly specific, can mean a variety of things to different parents and educators. Basically, however, we understand it as the big gap between a child's potential and performance. But that covers the difference between high IQ and low grades; it doesn't cover the potential causes such as family environment, relationships with peers, health, emotional issues, learning disabilities, cultural differences, drug use and the school environment.

We also have perhaps an unrealistic expectation of performance. We expect excellence in all subjects on a consistent basis. But, in reality, your child may excel in some subjects and be challenged in others. And there are expected slumps in certain grades when the work becomes more challenging — grades four through six, in particular, can be times when students are expected to take on more sophisticated responsibilities and activities that require some adjustment time with even the most stable home and school environments.

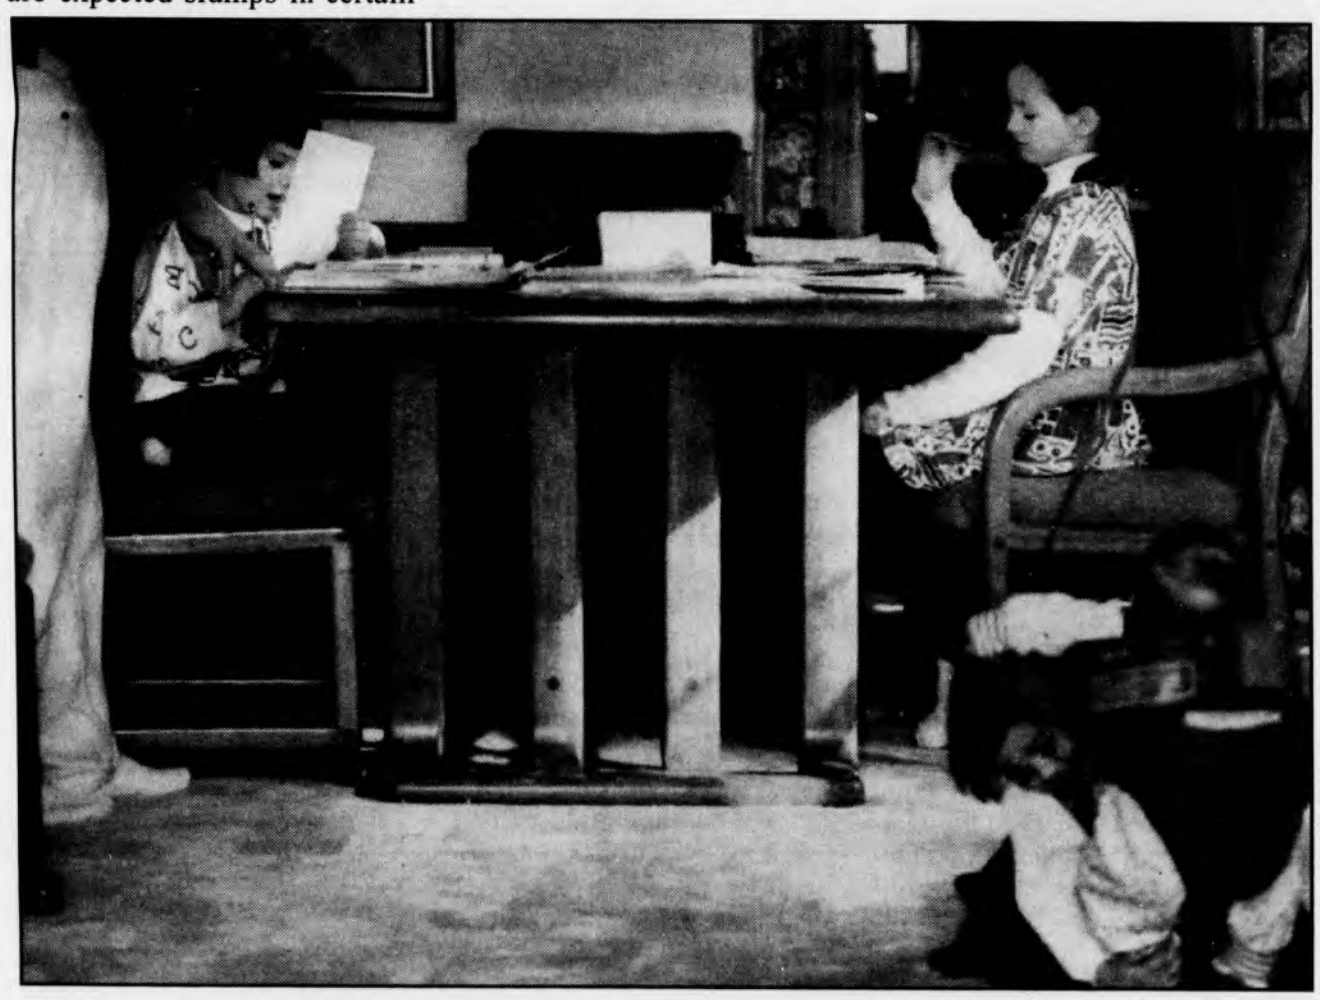
And, don't forget, grade six is also a time when puberty sets in, often throwing off even the most responsible and motivated child. For parents who understand what to expect, this unusual blip can be just that, but they will still need to help their child through the transitions caused by their bodies, new social experiences and teachers' higher expectations.

Parents need as well to understand that not all underachievers are alike, requiring different approaches to change their patterns. Working through the difficulty takes time, patience and extra work on the part of the child and the parent. That means that the parent, as the older and more mature party, has to take the long view to keep from frustrating the child and adding to an already tense situation.

Underachieving types

According to Harvey P. Mandel and Sander I. Marcus in their book, "Could Do Better" (Wiley), all the cajoling, tutoring, punishing, rewarding and course-switching won't do a thing to motivate your underachieving child — unless you understand what kind of underachiever he or she is.

The authors, who are clinical psychologists, have identified six typical underachiever styles:



• Coasters: The ultimate procrastinators, they are usually described as easy-going and unmotivated.

• Anxious underachievers: They want to do better, but are too tense and uptight to work effectively.

• Identity-searchers: They are so wrapped up in trying to figure out who they are that they become distracted from their schoolwork.

• Wheeler-dealers: They are impulsive, charming or intimidating, manipulative, self-seeking and so intent on instant gratification that they see no benefit in doing well at school.

• Sad underachievers: Their depressed mood, low self-esteem and difficulty making decisions rob them of the energy they need to concentrate on schoolwork.

Take a look at home as well as school to see if there are reasons the underachiever is distracted or unable to concentrate.

• Defiant underachievers: They underachieve as an act of rebellion.

Of course, these prototypes can be complicated by mixes and matches of the above styles, learning disabilities and being gifted. And some children, the authors admit, don't seem identifiable by any of these traits. Depending on which of these prototypes fits your child, you'll have to take the appropriate action.

The authors of "Could Do Better" describe in detail what that is in respect to each style. The same techniques that apply to a child who procrastinates and has poor work habits may not be right for another child who lies, disappears from home or is too terrified of failure to act.

Motivating your child

There are a number of things that parents can do for their child to turn around an achievement problem. These can go hand-in-hand with the suggestions that Mandel and Marcus offer.

Ruth Peters, a Florida-based child and family psychologist affiliated with Sylvan Learning Centers, has developed a list of tips for parents who are trying to find ways to motivate their child:

• Identify motivators and motivational barriers. Take a look at the school and the home. Is a family problem such as a divorce or sibling competition or peer pressure at school interfering with your child's ability to concentrate? Can you identify rewards or privileges that would be incentives to your child? Have you had your child tested for learning disabilities like attention deficit disorder?

Parents need as well to understand that not all underachievers are alike, requiring different approaches to change their patterns.

• Help evolve behavior and attitudes about school. Develop a study routine and implement a daily assignment sheet with columns for homework assignments, quizzes/tests, long-term projects and behavior ratings. Your child should complete the columns and get his/her teacher's signature.

• Reward your child with praise, encouragement and prizes. Take advantage of casual time during meals, riding in the car or doing errands to talk to your child about school. Congratulate him or her on accomplishments and establish rewards, such as privileges or small tokens, to reinforce the behavior.

• Implement negative consequences. When your child does an unsatisfactory job due to lack of effort, take something of value away. Help your child understand the other side of rewards are negative consequences.

• Seek outside counsel. Meet with your child's teacher and/or guidance counselor periodically to ensure that you are all working toward the same goal.

While Peters suggests that a supplemental education provider, such as Sylvan, may be useful, Marcus and Mandel also advise that counseling or other services might be appropriate, depending on the problem. And, they point out, that given the obvious tension that underachieving creates between parent and child, a third party can help diffuse the emotional aspect and allow the child to focus on the issue at hand.

Go with the flow

Joseph O'Neil, director of guidance at Duxbury Junior/Senior High School, thinks pressure is a real issue for teenagers.

"There is a lot on their plates," he says.

On the other hand, O'Neil doesn't think the level of stress has gone up in his 12 years at the school.

Yet O'Neil thinks students who live in "high achieving communities" feel more pressure than those in not-so-high-achieving communities.

"Very successful, high achieving parents tend to trickle down to the kids.

"They expect the same of themselves."

O'Neil says students' stress could be the result of the "world moving at a very fast pace and trickling down at a very young age. It's hard for kids to be kids."

Wherever the pressure stems from, O'Neil says the students he deals with seem to handle these expectations well "because they've grown up with it, because they have to manage it..."

He adds, "On the other hand, you can see spill-over at times — when students are besides themselves during exams.

"They become very, very intense almost to the point of frazzling themselves."

It is important to have a lot of talks with students about accepting themselves as they are, O'Neil says.

"I think it's just about talking with kids and their parents about liking themselves and being proud of who they are.

"That helps, because we all do a lot of things to compare ourselves to the next person."

Strike a balance between structured/free time

By John Godfrey
CORRESPONDENT

In today's rush to make ends meet, parents tend to find their date books crammed with important lunch meetings, hurry-up-and-wait appointments and last-minute errands to run on the way home from work.

We've grown accustomed to living in a hectic world, rushing from one place to the next without a moment's rest or the slightest bit of self-pity.

But how does this lifestyle affect our children? Some parents spend so much time managing their own schedules that they forget about their child's need for structure and stimulation.

Other parents subconsciously impose their busy lifestyle on their kids, penciling them in for one after-school activity after another and leaving them little time to be, well, kids.

Parenting expert Dr. T. Berry Brazelton suggests striking a balance between the stultifying world of afternoon television and the go-go rush of resume-building activity mania.

"Parents should know that they can overload a child just as easily as they can bore them," Brazelton says. "You have to hit in the middle somewhere. You have to plan each child's schedule according to the child's needs. But that means you've got to know the child and you've got to know what they can take."

And that means taking some time out from your busy schedule to map out your child's before-school, after-school and weekend activities. Understimulated kids are a particular concern to parenting experts.

"The problems with unsupervised, unstructured children is that they are being left alone with nothing to do," Brazelton says. "They're either turning on the television and getting pumped up and acting out based on what they see. The Academy of Pediatricians published a paper that showed that alcohol usage, drug usage and sexual acting out was much more prevalent in latchkey children between the ages 12 and 17."

The solution for these kids is getting them involved in a variety of endeavors — organized sports, a musical instrument, Boy Scouts or Girl Scouts, that kind of thing. The trick is convincing them to give these different activities a chance.

"Modeling is the most powerful way of teaching there is," Brazelton says. "If a parent models something for a child, they're more likely to follow the parent than they are by pressure from the outside. If I were trying to get my child interested in music I would take him to see some concerts and get him excited about identifying with somebody on the stage. Small children are very open about identifying with other people."

"Parents should know that they can overload a child just as easily as they can bore them. You have to hit in the middle somewhere. You have to plan each child's schedule according to the child's needs. But that means you've got to know the child and you've got to know what they can take."

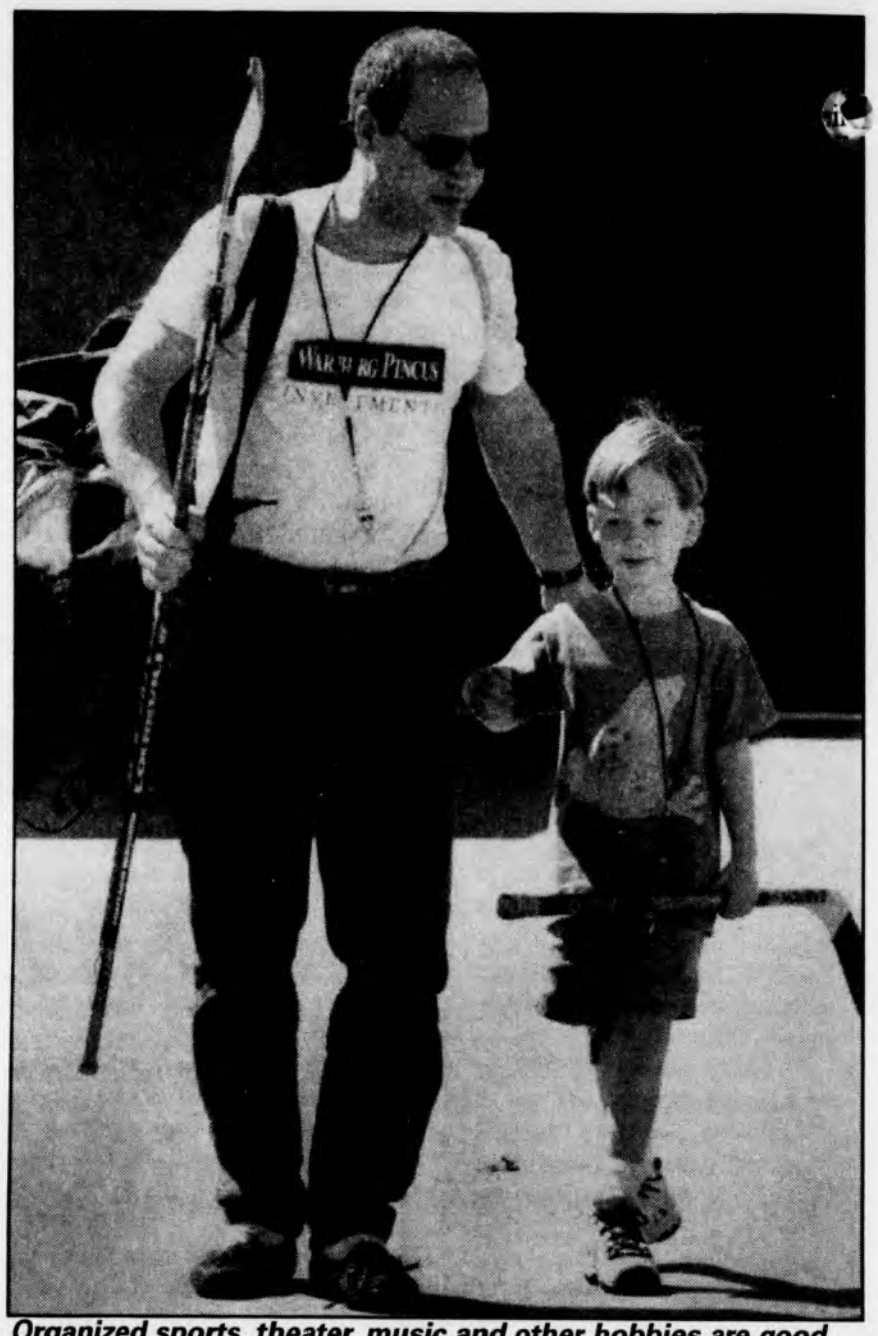
Steve Bennett and his wife, Ruth, have co-authored a number of books, notably "365 TV-Free Activities You Can Do With Your Child" and "365 Outdoor Activities You Can Do With Your Child." He is a big proponent of getting your child involved in structured activities, but he is also aware that some parents go overboard.

"Organized sports, theater, music, other hobbies are really good," Bennett says. "It's really important for kids to take up something they enjoy. They should be able to do it in a concerted way that doesn't feel like school but does give them some structure."



But Bennett also sees the need for unstructured time.

"Too many structured activities, on the other hand, can be problematic," he notes. "Kids need down time. Kids need to be able to kick back and do nothing. It's OK. There's this fear we have that if our kids are just sitting around that something is wrong, they're not motivated. In point of fact, I think adults are just jealous when they see kids taking it easy."

Down time doesn't mean sitting in front of a TV watching Bugs and Daffy reruns or blasting aliens to bits on a Sony PlayStation. Kids need to be reminded of their own resourcefulness and imagination, Bennett says, adding, "It's important for kids to recognize that they are perfectly capable of entertaining themselves and parents need to recognize (that children) have all the creative energy they need right between their ears."

So, is there a key for parents who want to tap into this mindset?

"Sure," Bennett says. "Be a kid. Kick back, clear your mind, watch the clouds, play a goofy game. Your kids will pick up on this and follow your lead. Safety issues aside, the only rules are there are no rules."

Organized sports, theater, music and other hobbies are good ways to provide structure during free time.

Bennett's favorite after-school activities include silly, make-them-up-as-you-go-along diversions that only require household items — toilet paper tubes, milk cartons, toothpicks, rice — and a good attitude. Empower your kids to take charge, he says, and you'll be surprised at how much they benefit from goofing around.

"There are so few walks in life (in which) kids get to make the rules. When you're a child, there is really very little you can negotiate for. When the child can make the rules of the game instead of following the rules on the inside of the box, that's a wonderful opportunity for them."

Sports: Are they stress relievers or stress givers?

By Lesley Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

Bruce Emerson has been coaching sports and teaching on the South Shore for 28 years.

Emerson, who coaches girls basketball at Marshfield High School and girls soccer at Norwell High School, says he sees sports as a stress reliever.

"I see kids really enjoying getting out and coming to sports. I don't think of sports as stressful at all. I think it's great for kids," he says. "Generally, I think they wouldn't come out if they didn't enjoy it."

Emerson, a Marshfield resident, says some level of stress and anxiety is normal before a game. He adds that it's important to strike a balance when it comes to sports as well.

Playing one sport all year long can be too much, he says.

"I totally feel if a kid is going to be a great athlete in sport, that kid is going to be a great athlete in more than one sport," Emerson says.

He says athletes who do this don't feel "the burn-out factor" and "come back rejuvenated, with vigor."

Owen McConville, an orthopedic surgeon who specializes in sports medicine at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth, agrees.

"Single sport specialization at a young age can be a problem particularly if the kid is doing one activity, like pitching," he says. "I think a little of several sports is better than a lot of one."

McConville says the mentality — "If Susie is going to be an Olympic gymnast, she has to do it all the time" — can result in children "paying the price physically and emotionally.

"There is also more emphasis on little kids as big league athletes. Kids get treated as little adults when they are actually very different animals, psychologically and physically," McConville says. "I think if kids are in a competitive environment, make sure they are ready for it."

McConville, a Hingham resident, also says it's important to limit a child's activity when they start to complain. "No pain, no gain works better for adults," he says.

McConville says overuse is usually a result of well-meaning parents and coaches. A hockey coach for children ages 9 to 12 in Milton, he says it's more important to keep the emphasis on fun and improving skills and put less focus on winning.

Most overuse results in over conditioning while a child is still growing, McConville says, and the tissues are not ready to accept certain kinds of use.

McConville mentions males between the ages of 12 and 14, when they seem out of balance and gawky. He says they are developing and are less flexible — their muscles, tendons and bones are out of balance and their bodies are adjusting to the changing length of the bone.

"He's the one at risk for injury."

Tension and school daze

The first day of school can be stressful for both children and parents. And stress can cause headaches. Of the 45 million Americans who get chronic, recurring headaches, 90 percent are classified as tension headaches. Some tips from the National Headache Foundation for avoiding and alleviating stress:

- Start back-to-school shopping early to avoid the crowds.
- Ease separation anxiety by talking about the experience with your children ahead of time to reassure them that the separation is only temporary.
- Since fatigue and erratic sleep patterns are common headache triggers, get lots of rest.
- Practice your new routine ahead of time, allotting enough time for the morning routine.
- Learn to spot signs of anxiety and tension. Try to avoid stressful situations and control your reactions to them.
- Anticipate your child's fears — acknowledge them and don't be upset if she is unhappy in the beginning.

Cohasset recaptures swimming championship

In an electrifying meet on August 16, Cohasset won the 33rd annual South Shore Swim League Championship, reclaiming the title from last year's winner, the Duxbury AquaDux. Prior to last year, Cohasset had won seven consecutive championships. Cohasset's 453 to 441 win over the Marshfield MASK, this year's closest competitor, was a tremendous victory, bringing the coveted championship trophy back to Cohasset.

According to team officials, this was the closest meeting in league history. Marshfield led at almost every checkpoint, with Cohasset trailing by only a few points. The Cohasset crowd roared with encouragement for our team throughout the meet, as the two leading teams battled it out.

Going into the last two events MASK and Cohasset were tied. With relays worth 16 points, the meet came down to the last event, the 17-and-under Girls Relay. The team of Kate O'Brien, Hillary Habershaw, Allison Berg and Gemma O'Brien pulled it out for Cohasset, breaking away from Marshfield in the last two yards of the meet.

The team swam hard, with every ounce of energy they had. Cohasset swimmers broke four all-time league records, and the 12-and-under boys teams were undefeated in every event, and broke meet records in the medley and freestyle relays. The 10-and-under boys team also broke the medley relay record.

Hats off to Cohasset's 1997 South Shore Swim League Champions!

Youth sports make way onto the information highway

Weymouth company puts Little League on the Net

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

The more things change, the more they stay the same

South Shore businessman David Jackson says that when he was a kid growing up in Stoughton he used to find out about the latest Little League standings and who made the All-Star team the same way everyone else did: by reading the crumpled piece of paper attached to the concession stand at the field.

More than twenty years later, Jackson, now 34, attended a youth baseball game and saw a vision from his past: kids huddled around the corner of a concession stand reading a piece of paper filled with league standings and other important information.

Thus was born an inspiration: Little League news and notes on the Internet posted by New England Youth Sports, a Weymouth business venture of Jackson and partner Rob Connella.

"Technology has allowed us to communicate so much better than when I was a kid, so it only seemed natural that something like this be available on the Internet," explained Jackson, a Stoughton native who put in web site into full action only three months ago. "The response has already been great from both the leagues as well as advertisers who want to be part of this web page."

Because of those advertisers, the company is able to keep the web page free to any youth league who wants to take part in the program.

Offerings on the page, which Jackson said will be developed along the lines of an Internet magazine, include league standings, game schedules, a listing of league officials and coaches as well as other news and notes that the league may want to publicize.

As well, the leagues are offered a space for a newsletter.

"That may be the most important part of all this," said Jackson. "The newsletter is straight from the league itself and it is their own voice where they can talk straight to their own people."

As with anyone who decides to put anything out for public consumption on the Internet, Jackson said his company has taken the needed steps to ensure the integrity of their product.

The site is "password protected" according to Jackson, meaning that the leagues themselves will not be posting anything onto their web page. Instead, all of the material will first be screened by New England Youth Sports officials and then posted by them.

As well, Jackson said the page will not include individual statistics such as the leaders in batting averages or home runs. "We don't want to discourage kids," explained Jackson of those omissions.

On the other hand, Jackson said if a league wanted to mention an accomplishment or an outstanding player in their newsletter he saw no problem with that.

To be included in the magazine as well will be columns from a nutritionist, a sports psychologist and another writer who will give tips to high school athletes about what college scouts are looking for in recruits as well as ways to improve their game.

According to Jackson, both advertisers and the sports leagues have quickly taken a liking to this project. Advertisers find the web site part intriguing because of the ability to target potentially profitable markets with children as well as their parents.

"With the exception of alcohol and tobacco companies, almost everything has a fit on this web site," said Jackson. "Clothes, soft drinks or anything else related to sports. It's a great chance to tap into a large and diverse mar[illegible]"

Jackson said that 55 towns in Massachusetts have made a commitment to the project and that the company would be expanding into the other New England states sometime in the near future.

The web site can be reached at www.neyouthsports.com. For more information on the service, call New England Youth Sports at 331-7898.

Osgood School registration

Registration for new students will be held daily to Aug. 29 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Birth certificates are required at time of registration if you were not a resident of Cohasset at the time of your child's birth.

The Osgood School manual, normally mailed to each student prior to school opening, will be sent home with each child the first day of school. Bus routes, usually included in this packet, will be published in the local newspapers.

Alpert appointed Enrichment Program director

Elizabeth Alpert

Alpert is both Elementary School Teacher and Office For Children certified and has worked in all aspects of the Cohasset Enrichment Program during the past three years. She anticipates an easy transition to the director's position. The Cohasset Enrichment Program consists of three separate programs which provides additional services to elementary school students and parents — the Breakfast Club, KEDs (Kindergarten Enriched Day Program), and After-School. Enrollment applications for September are currently being accepted at the Osgood Elementary School's enrichment classroom next to the gym. Questions about the program should be directed to Ms. Alpert at the Osgood School, 35 Ripley Rd., (617) 383-6860.

An open house is scheduled for Sept. 2 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. to register children for any and all programs. Alpert and the enrichment program staff look forward to meeting you.

Stock splits: There's strength in numbers

By Amy K. Barrett
Worth Magazine

Wall Street analysts and finance professors have learned that one plus one doesn't always just equal two, at least not where stock splits are concerned. Stock splits are a signal to investors that a company is doing well and is expected to continue on a good course.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

As a result, when a company says it plans to split, it usually gets an enthusiastic response from investors, boosting the stock price immediately.

What most investors don't realize, however, is that split stocks often have an edge over comparable stocks that don't split - even long after the enthusiasm over the announcement has fizzled. So says a report entitled "What Do Stock Splits Really Signal?," authored by finance professors David Ikenberry, Graeme Rankine and Earl K. Stice. Shareholders not only get more shares as a result of a split, but a long-term increase in the stock's value as well--all for the price of one.

"A split is a seemingly cosmetic corporate event, yet the market reacts favorably to split announcements."

David Ikenberry
Rice University

"A split is a seemingly cosmetic corporate event, yet the market reacts favorably to split announcements," says Ikenberry of Rice University in Houston, TX. Split announcements usually push a stock up 3.4 percent, he says, before the news gets drowned out by other investor concerns.

What's more, a split helps the stock perform better than its peers over the following the three years thanks partly to investor psychology and partly to the fact that exceptional companies tend to do splits.

In fact, Ikenberry's study found that stocks that split in two (the most common type of split) return, on average, 15 percentage points more than comparable stocks over this period. The study looked at 1,275 stock splits on the New York and American stock exchanges between 1975 and 1990.

This finding may not come as a surprise to investors who have watched shares of Intel, Microsoft and Dell Computer soar after stock splits. Dell, for instance, has split four times in the last five years as it stock price blows past the $100 mark.

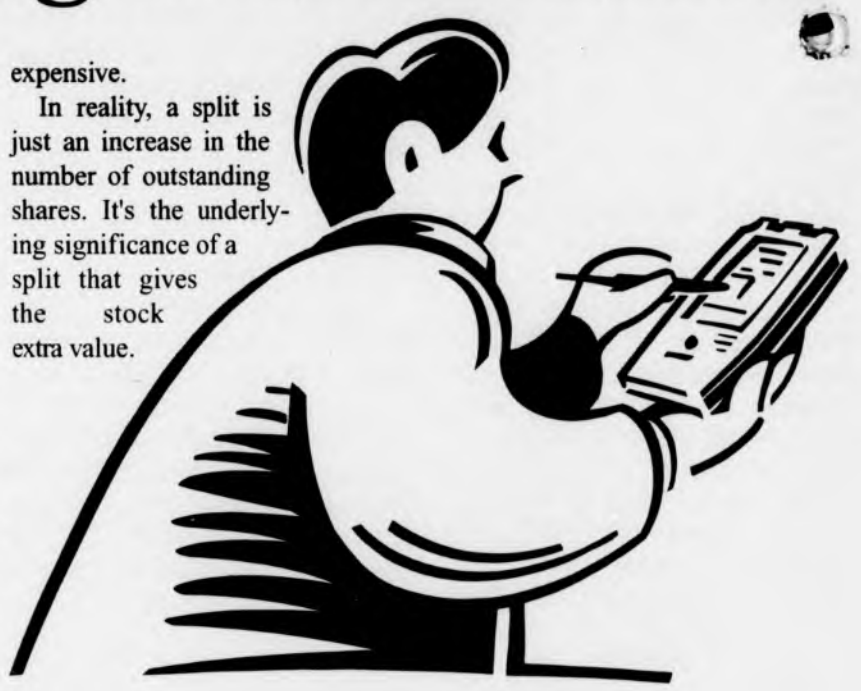
Judy Siegler of Chicago, IL, who acts as the Siegler family money manager, bought shares of Intel when it announced its two-for-one split back in January because she took "(the split) as a vote of confidence from the company." Intel's shares have jumped almost 30 percent since January 14, when it announced its split.

A stock split does indeed reflect a company's optimism for the future. Here's why: companies use stock splits to lower their stock's trading range, but they will only do it if they expect the stock to rise. Ikenberry knows of a Fortune 500 company, for example, whose board likes to keep its share price between $50 and $100. If the stock price goes much over that they begin talking about a doing a split.

Targeting a trading range can be important to a company's image. And it seems that a trading range helps woo a certain kind of shareholder. More expensive stocks, priced at $50 and over, are owned more by institutions, while less expensive stocks tend to be held by more individual investors, says Ikenberry.

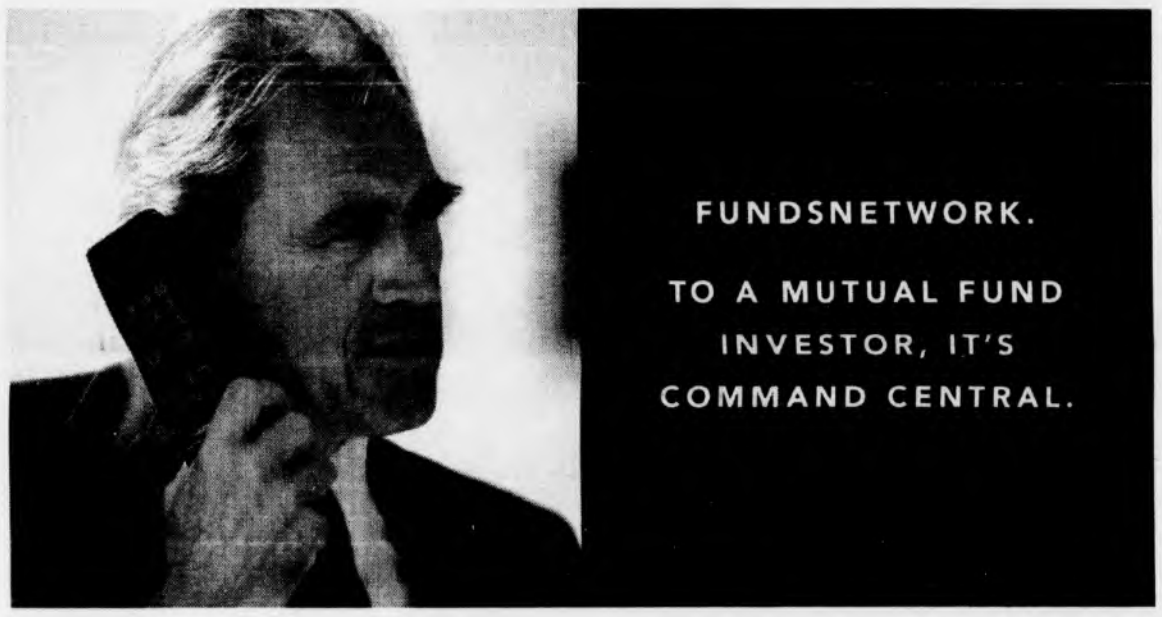
Why? The average individual investor likes less expensive shares, because he can afford to buy them in 100-share increments called round lots. "One reason why companies do splits is to make (their stock) more attractive to retail customers who usually buy 100 or 200 shares," says Tony Howard, director of research at First Michigan Corp. And their preference for round lots can make financial sense; sometimes brokers charge extra for trades made in odd lots.

Therefore, when a stock moves to become a $80 stock from being a $170 stock, it may enter more investors' radar screens. In turn, increased buying by these investors can push up the stock price - responsible, in part, for the typical 3.4 percent jump in price after the announcement.



The other part of the split story is what happens after the honeymoon is over. In the first year after the split, the halved stock has returns of, on average, 8 percentage points more than that of comparable stock, according to Ikenberry's findings. Over the three years following the split, the stock performs, on average, 12 percentage points better than its peers.

The reason split stocks go on to do so well may be because strong and stable companies tend to do stock splits. Part of a company's decision to split (one that usually has to be approved by shareholders) is determining how the company's top executives see the company's future. Is there a chance of a labor strike? Is the business cycle slowing down? If something negative will pop up soon, there's a big possibility that the stock price will fall back into the target trading range on its own. Hence, no need for a split.



A bright future, on the other hand, would necessitate a split so that the stock didn't travel out of orbit. In this way, there is a kind of self-selection process in which, for the most part, only the fittest companies split. "Good firms tend to engage in splits," says Ikenberry. "Splits don't cause good things - they are indicative of good things."

Stock splits can be a two-pronged success. The fact of the split can attest to a company's Darwinian superiority. And the lower stock price can give it a psychological advantage - many investors make the assumption that lower-priced stocks have faster gains and that a $100 price tag means a stock is too expensive.

In reality, a split is just an increase in the number of outstanding shares. It's the underlying significance of a split that gives the stock extra value.

COHASSET BUSINESS

Future of former Webb-Norfolk site still in limbo

By Dave Rogers
CORRESPONDENT

Some Cohasset residents are beginning to eye the former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor site on Route 3A.

Glenn Pratt, of the town cemetery committee, said would like to see a well-coordinated town effort to utilize the 62-acre site as a multi-purpose parcel.

Mario Susi & Sons Construction bought the property, which sits across from Jonathan Livingston Plaza, in May 1995 for $1.3 million. The land, which is currently assessed at $1,895,600, has an estimated price-tag over $3 million. Susi & Sons could not be reached for comment.

Pratt thinks that it would provide ample room for a water tower, athletic fields and additional cemetery space.

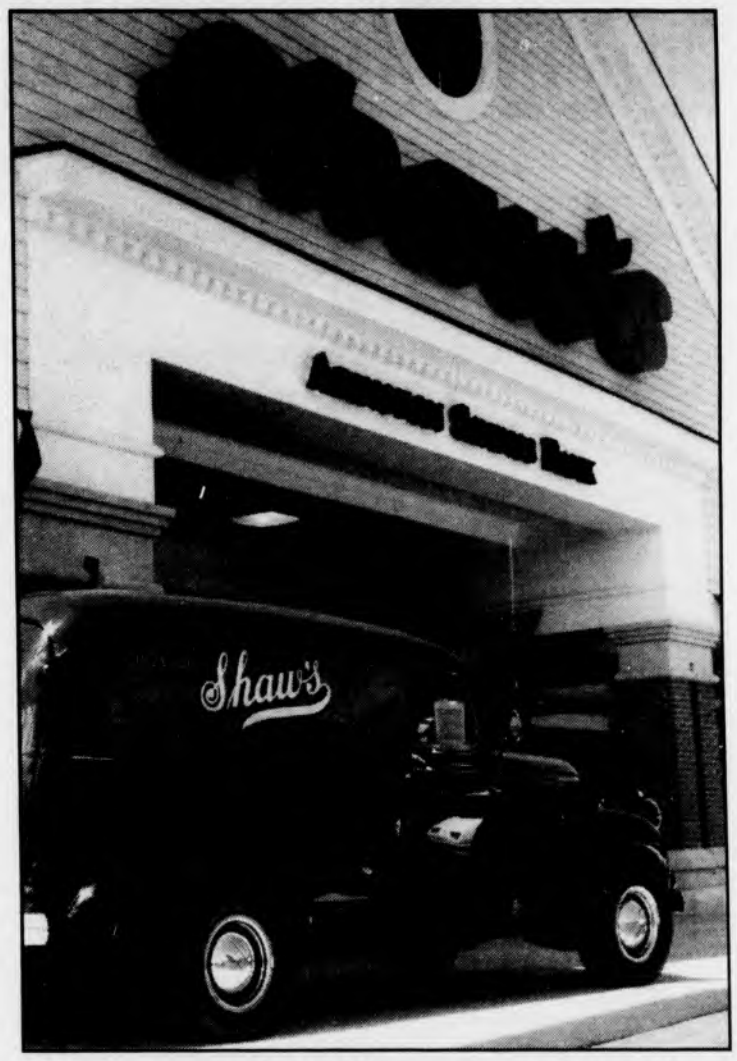
Cemetery Committee Chairman Joseph Jerz recently said that perhaps the town could buy the entire property and then sell half to offset the cost.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said he was unaware of any town efforts to purchase the parcel. Sullivan said the tract is too pricey to justify its entire purchase.

Wayne Sawchuk, who is developing a 62-unit assisted living center near the property as well as a 20 acre site for office use on 3A, said that he may be interested in the property when the price deflates.

"Undoubtedly they're going to sell it for more than they paid," said Sawchuk. "But that's a pretty hefty price."

Sawchuk said that with a residential variance from the town (the site is currently industrial) as well as a connection to town sewerage, the site could be a gold mine. Besides residential housing, Sawchuk said that a golf course would be possible.



The site was formerly owned by the Jervis B. Webb Company, which for 30 years operated the Webb-Norfolk Conveyer plant, a company that produced motor-driven conveyers used by airports to move luggage and other industries to move product lines. Webb-Norfolk closed its doors in December 1994, laying off more than 50 employees and relocating others to its Michigan headquarters.

Part of the land may be taken by the town for the purpose of erecting a second $1.4 million town water tank, according to Water Commission Chairman Rob Kasameyer .

A second tank is needed in the town to increase fire-flow capacity town wide and to enable a tank to be taken off for periodic cleaning.

The Webb-Norfolk site is being considered because the original Bear Hill location raised aesthetics concerns with neighbors. Kasameyer, however, is wary of the land taking costs the town faces with Webb-Norfolk because they could be too high to justify choosing this site over Bear Hill.

Shaw's supermarket held its grand opening at the former Cushing Plaza on Route 3A on Sunday.

A local woman checks out the Shaw's prices in the paper.

ASK THE SCHOOL COMMITTEE

ADA compliance and the schools

The Cohasset School Committee is pleased to resume our monthly communication in the Mariner. In this first column of the new year, we will update you on a couple of issues that arose this summer.

The first issue was compliance with the American Disabilities Act (ADA). The requirements of ADA for state and local governments became effective on January 26, 1992. In general, ADA prohibits discrimination against individuals with disabilities and requires that state and local governments "ensure that individuals with disabilities are not excluded from services, programs, and activities because existing buildings are inaccessible." This requirement is called "program accessibility" and may be achieved in a number of ways. For example, an existing facility can be altered to make it accessible, or programs and services held in an inaccessible part of the facility can be moved to an area that is accessible.

Some questions were raised over the summer regarding accessibility at the Cohasset Middle-High School. While the school department has always worked to make its educational programs accessible, that facility, when look at in its entirety, is not a fully accessible building. In addition to use by our students and teachers, this building is an integral part of our community activities (meetings of the school committee, school council, town meetings), and must be made accessible for those uses as well.

Over the summer, work has been done to improve accessibility within the middle-high school. The entrance [illegible] jacent to the auditoriun [illegible] being improved to comply with the width standards of the ADA, the walkway is being lengthened to achieve an appropriate slope, rails have been added to the interior ramp, four restrooms are now fully handicap accessible and additional signage has been added to parking spaces. In early September, with the help of the Massachusetts Office on Disability and our local Disabilities Commission, the school department will conduct a self evaluation and develop a transition plan for making the building fully accessible, as required by the ADA.

The second issue relates to school buses. Two vans used to transport handicapped children came up short during a July State Police inspection. Because we are committed to providing safe and reliable transportation for our students, we believe that failed inspections are unacceptable. A more rigorous system of accountability, aimed at improving several areas of bus management and driver supervision, is being implemented. These areas will be monitored by the superintendent and school committee. All school buses passed inspection as of August 21.

If you have questions or comments regarding the above or any other issues or a topic you would like addressed in this column, please call the superintendent or any of the school committee members. This column will appear on the last Thursday of each month throughout the school year.

More detail sought in Lobster Lab bid

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

It's still not clear if the non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation will be able to lease the Hagerty building on Parker Avenue from the town to develop a "Lobster Lab" there.

Most selectmen made it clear Monday that their problems with the proposal go well beyond limited parking at the site.

"Why should we be put in a position to sign off on something, when we don't really know what you're going to do and how you'll do it," Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said. "We have no idea what the audience is for this. There's a lot of comment but not a lot of substance (in the proposal)."

The now dilapidated Victorian house, which contained the former offices and showroom of Cohasset Colonials, a furniture kit manufacturing company, has been empty for more than four years. At the time, with the backing of town meeting — which agreed that the 2.2 acre waterfront site should benefit all residents — the town bought the property for $475,000. The Hagerty Property Committee continues to work on plans to develop a park there. (Cohasset Colonials subsequently relocated to Hingham).

Teen dance hall plan gets the go-ahead

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The old highway garage in the town parking lot took a step closer to a total metamorphosis Monday.

To the delight of the drug and alcohol committee, selectmen endorsed the concept of turning the building into a teen dance hall.

"It's a good proposal, I'd like to see it go forward," Selectman Merle Brown said.

Tony Bramblett and Jami Butman, who are the two teenagers on the drug and alcohol committee, are the prime movers behind the proposal.

Monday, they got what they were looking for — the okay to keep the momentum going.

The next step is to present selectmen with a proposal containing more detail including a timetable for improvements and how the money would be raised. Organizers will also talk with the sewer commission about hooking the building up to the sewer system.

As Selectman Nan Roth pointed out, it wouldn't be possible to have a dance hall without a bathroom.

The proposal said the building would be transformed into a teen club where one dance would be held per week for grades seven through 12. Other activities will also be planned.

Teens who enjoy politics and debating may find themselves on the board, playing a key role in

Greek Church celebrates consecration this weekend

By Mary Sheppard Earon
CORRESPONDENT

It is said, 'God works in a mysterious fashion.'

It was the accidental drowning of a young 18-year old boy more than 100 years ago that became the first in a series of events leading to the ceremony and celebration this weekend, Sept. 5 to 8, of the Greek Orthodox parish as they consecrate, or "baptize" the beautiful stone church at 811 Jerusalem Rd. in the name of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary Panagia. The consecration represents that the building will be a permanent place of worship for those who practice the Greek Orthodox religion.

"The consecration is a formal service that is conducted in the history of each Greek church. Any structure can be a house of worship, but in order for it to be formalized, you must have a consecration service. It is similar to the Christian belief that in order to be a Christian, you must be baptized," said Father John G. Maheras, pastor of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary Panagia Greek Orthodox Church.

Every Greek church is named after a saint or an event from the life of Christ or the Virgin Mary. Panagia is a name given Brush chipping at the RTF will be conducted from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., Saturday, Sept. 13. No logs under four feet long will be accepted, Selectman Merle Brown said.

Surveys on smoking mailed

Town Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative is sending smoking surveys out this week to a sampling of Cohasset residences.

The survey asks local citizens for their feelings about smoke-free restaurants.

Godzik requests that residents who receive the survey complete and return them promptly.

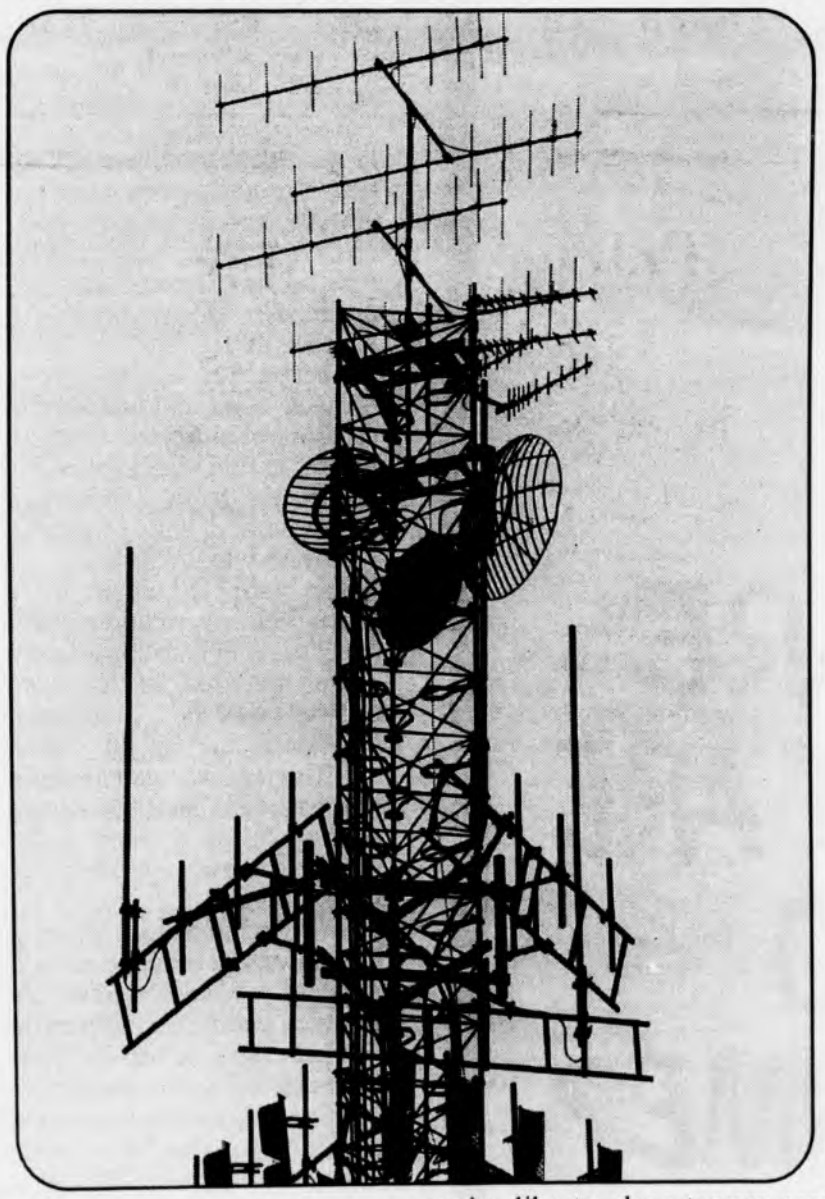
Towns struggle with demand for communications towers

Norwell tried a creative approach, at first approving but later rejecting a plan by AT&T to donate $100,000 for lights at the high school football field in exchange for use of the light poles for antennas.

By David Tibbetts
STAFF WRITER



Few people complain about the benefits of cellular telephones. Portable phones have re-defined the way Americans work, live, and communicate.

Employers can instantly access employees traveling on business. Parents can call in late for a pediatrician's appointment while sitting in a traffic jam. Husbands and wives can make dinner plans from bus stops miles apart.

But the convenience and freedom that comes with wireless communication has come with an unexpected and unsightly price: communications towers, antennas, concrete equipment sheds and chain-link fences. And many people are complaining about these necessary but unwelcome structures.

Several communities on the South Shore have been inundated with requests from wireless service providers to install towers and antennas, while towns just 15 or 20 miles away have received few requests.

Building Inspector Douglas Jeffrey said Rockland has received no requests for new towers since the Telecommunications Act went into effect (see sidebar). Rockland has received just a few requests to place new antennas on existing towers and one request to use the top of the town's water tower on Rice Ave.

Jeffrey said NYNEX received permission to place an array of six antennas on an existing tower at 55 Accord Park on the Norwell line.

The situation is very different in Canton, however. Portions of four major highways— Route 95, Route 93, Route 128 and Route 24— run through the town.

Wireless communications companies like to place towers near highways so callers can continue talking while traveling long distances.

Canton has received a flood of requests from companies seeking to build new towers or to add antennas to existing towers. Uncertain about what to do, town officials have decided to appease communications companies and offer one municipal property for a communications tower.

Selectmen recently issued a request for proposals (RFP) asking interested companies to submit antenna proposals for a town-owned site at the Ponkapoag School on Route 138.

Meanwhile, the local zoning board, backed by the town's 40-foot height restriction, has rejected every tower proposal submitted in the last decade.

In contrast to Canton, Marshfield has tried to embrace wireless communications and associated equipment.

Officials from the zoning board, planning board, conservation commission and selectmen have endorsed a plan allowing wireless service providers access to town-owned land for towers and antennas.

Town officials approved a plan to hire a consultant so Marshfield could collect the most money for leasing public land while controlling the locations of towers and antennas.

Norwell tried a creative approach, at first approving but later rejecting a plan by AT&T to donate $100,000 for lights at the high school football field in exchange for use of the light poles for antennas.

Town officials determined that the proposal would have to go out to bid because AT&T wanted a long-term lease. State laws require towns to obtain bids when leasing town-owned land for 20-years or more.

In Cohasset, members of the zoning board have been fairly open to antenna and tower proposals while expressing concern over the large number of requests.

"We take each application on its own merits," zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said recently. "But I don't want to allow Cohasset to look like a pin cushion," he added.

Sprint Spectrum LP submitted a proposal last June to build a new lattice-type antenna on a new 123-foot-high tower on Route 3A, but withdrew the application at the last minute when the zoning board appeared ready to reject the plan.

Sprint re-submitted its proposal with a single, mono-pole design. The zoning board has not yet reached a decision on the newest design.

Many factors determine where companies will seek to place wireless telecommunications equipment and how many towers are required. Six different communications companies have expressed interest in installing antennas in Canton: AT&T Wireless Services, Sprint PCS, Cellular One, Nextel, Bell Atlantic/NYNEX Mobile Communications, Omnipoint Communications.

AT&T representatives have told town officials in Norwell that they may need 10 towers just in that community to provide adequate service.

Preparing for onslaught

The persistence with which companies seek new towers and antennas has local communities preparing for the onslaught of requests with accurate research and strong zoning regulations.

Telecommunications companies, eager to begin earning profits with their licenses, say they are just responding to the needs of the market.

"This is a consumer-driven process," said Jim Aber, director of northeast operations for Sprint. "We're not building towers and antennas because we have extra money laying around. Consumers want better and cleaner service, and that's what we're trying to deliver."

Currently, more than 40 million Americans use some form of wireless communication, and analysts expect that number to soar to 100 million users by the year 2000.

Technology has also improved drastically during the past several years. Portable, wireless telephones have evolved from clunky, walkie-talkie-like monstrosities into lightweight hand units as small as pocket calculators.

Aber said three factors are behind the proliferation of antenna construction requests on the South Shore: population density, topography and new technologies.

A cellular telephone works on a radio signal, which travels in a straight line but cannot travel over or around objects. If a radio signal hits a hill, it will be deflected in the direction of the hill's plane.

Aber said it is useful to picture a radio signal as something that travels along a line of vision. You can't see over or around a hill, and a radio signal can't travel over or around a hill.

The craggy, hilly terrain of Northeastern Massachusetts requires more antennas than a flat plain in Texas.

Aber said antennas in New England need to be erected every 2.5-5 miles apart for maximum signal coverage. In the plains of Texas, antennas can be placed every 10 miles apart.

Population density also dictates how far apart antennas must be placed, because each antenna and

Act promotes competition, drive to erect more towers

The real push to erect new communications towers began last year when President Clinton signed into law the Telecommunications Act of 1996 to promote competition among telecommunications' companies.

The Telecommunications Act expanded the number of licenses available to companies to provide nationwide cellular telephone service.

Prior to the 1996, the federal government allowed only two providers to compete in several regional markets across the country.

The Telecommunications Act doubled the number of providers permitted in any one market region from two to four. That number is expected to double again to eight providers per market in the near future.

Telecommunications companies spent billions of dollars purchasing the licenses from the Federal Communications Commission with hopes of reaping billions more in profit.

The FCC generally sells the licenses at auctions. The federal government has earned more than $20 billion from the auctions as some companies have paid in excess of $500 million for a single license.

Causing static,

equipment shed can handle only so many calls. In a moderately populated area, antennas can be up to five-miles apart because of the relatively low number of callers.

In a densely populated metropolis like New York City, antennas must be placed on buildings every two blocks apart because millions of potential callers live in the city.

Many wireless service providers are also interested in switching over to new technologies which may also require new equipment.

Several companies are trying to upgrade their service from analog signals to digital signals. Analog signals are not as clear as digital signals, and are also prone to theft from thieves with special equipment. Digital signals cannot be stolen.

"The difference between analog and digital is like the difference between a phonograph record and a compact disc," Aber said. "Also, so many people have cellular phones that the analog channels are becoming clogged. Digital has better capacity."

Technology at a cost

But digital service also requires more antennas placed closer together than cellular service requires.

Aber said Sprint is aware that communities feel they are being inundated with requests or singled out for antennas. He said the demand is huge and telecommunications companies are scrambling to meet that demand.

"This is a mobile society," Aber said. "We're not singling out any one community. Cohasset and Canton are a very nice towns, but people travel highways in those locations and they want to be able to use their cellular phones."

The Telecommunications Act prohibits towns from enacting outright bans on towers and antennas, and forces towns to respond to requests in a reasonable timeframe.

Many communications companies are open to using public land and existing structure for antennas rather than getting locked into time-consuming legal battles.

Companies want to construct networks as quickly as possible, and are willing to work with communities in some cases.

Aber said Sprint has tried to respond to community concerns. He said Sprint first tries to find existing structures for antennas: water towers, existing antennas, high buildings.

Building a new tower from scratch is always a last resort because they are so unpopular, Aber said.

He said many companies, including Sprint, have offered to disguise antennas as flagpoles, church steeples, even artificial trees.

But some towns that don't want towers have also used creative methods to reject proposals.

In Canton, an attorney for Cellular One of Westwood failed to convince the zoning board that the company should be able to place a new antenna on an existing tower without triggering zoning rules.

Cellular One was seeking a waiver from the town's 40-foot height limit to install a new antenna array 124-feet above the ground on an existing 150-foot antenna. The company also proposed a new 12-foot-by-29 foot equipment shed at the base of the antenna.

The proposal called for the antenna array and the shed to be connected by coaxial cable.

Cellular One's attorney, Louis Levine of D'Agostino, Levine and Gordon in Acton, said the antenna was needed to fill a gap in the company's wireless coverage in the area.

"We don't propose to build a new tower, but to affix a new antenna array below the existing array consistent with the town's bylaws," Levine said. "We only propose to put something on there which this board granted in 1984."

The zoning board approved the construction of the tower and the existing antenna array in 1984. Levine said that approval created a precedent for Cellular One to install the new array at a lower height.

"Can you operate that antenna without the equipment shed and the coaxial cable?" zoning board member James Fitzgerald asked. "I'm suggesting that your structure begins on the ground in the shed and is attached by a coaxial cable to an antenna 124-feet of the ground."

Levine also reminded the board that the Federal Communications Commission prevents municipalities from discriminating against telecommunications providers. Levine said the town could not deny antenna requests without good reason.

"We haven't discriminated against anyone," Carroll said. "We've denied everyone for the last 10 years. That's not discrimination."

Another approach gaining popularity with South Shore communities is requiring new antennas to provide capacity for more than one cellular provider. Aber said Sprint tries to build towers that can accommodate at least three competing providers.

Aber said as long as consumers demand more and better service, telecommunications companies will try to find ways to provide that service at a profit. And towns will be inundated with requests for communications antennas.

The National League of Cities (NLC) advises municipalities to enact tower bylaws consistent with community needs and use leverage allowed under the Telecommunications Act.

Cities and towns can require companies to share towers, use public property, maintain the property and remove obsolete equipment.

While communities cannot prohibit towers, it is not necessary for wireless providers to have towers in every community. Sometimes, adequate service can be derived from existing towers nearby.

Telecommunications companies are also aware that forcing a tower into a resistant community can create a great deal of public outrage and damage its reputation.

Citizens advisory groups can be formed to work cooperatively with local governments and wireless service companies so everyone's concerns are heard and understood.

NLC points out that towers and antennas are here to stay, and communities should find ways to proactively derive maximum advantages from wireless service providers.

ZBA to consider five condos at Quonset hut site

By Dave Rogers
CORRESPONDENT

Noel Collins, owner of the Quonset huts buildings at 430 S. Main St., will go ahead with necessary sewerage revision and schematic plans to build five condominiums on his property.

The Quonset huts saga continued at an Aug. 27 zoning board meeting where, because the meeting was not formally advertised, Collins had an "informal discussion" with ZBA officials.

"We're not here to say, 'We don't want Noel here,'" said ZBA Chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "But the point is really that on a lot that is zoned for a single family house — we want to know what this thing will look like."

Collins, who has already gone through three expensive models of the proposed sight and extensive other planning documents, wanted to know if the board would consider five units before he went ahead and spent more money preparing another proposal.

The ZBA realized the hefty costs and agreed to consider a schematic proposal of five units at a Sept. 17 meeting.

Collins initially proposed tearing down the Quonset huts and building ten condominiums but the zoning board rejected his request in Nov. 1996, citing density concerns.

The ZBA subsequently offered four units but Collins said that would be a losing proposition.

The informality of the business meant that the eight or nine residents on-hand, who had endured two-hours of other zoning board affairs, were not able to vocally show their support for Collins.

Corrine Cahill, 413 S. Main St., said that she felt "encouraged" by the fact that the ZBA gave Collins a "ray of hope." Cahill, and the other residents in attendance, said they feel the Quonset huts are an eyesore and welcome Collins' effort to remove them.

Selectmen want more detail in Lobster Lab bid

Most of the factory buildings at the site have been removed. The public ramp is being used by boaters and the parking lot was used to store yacht club floats last winter. The antique boat house is leased to the Cohasset Maritime Institute, a non-profit educational organization, which heads an educational rowing program.

But under the town's stewardship, the house has fallen into disrepair. Hagerty committee chairman Al Moore said the committee has not been able to come up with a good use for the building other than tearing it down.

"Then you got this proposal from a group to do something positive," he said. "Town Meeting said 'don't tear the building down'

"So even if you disagree with the sum of the specifics, the risk to the town is so small and either way the town wins (if the lab succeeds or fails).

"It's not like three or four other projects are waiting in the wings. In the meantime, time is wasting and the weather is getting into the building," he said.

The condition of the building coupled with a concept which they endorse, prompted the Lightkeepers to team up with local biologist Kevin Ulmer to propose turning the harbor-front structure into a marine research facility open to area students.

While Lobster Lab proponents see the proposal as an opportunity to save a building and create an educational center in the process — at Monday's board meeting, most selectmen continued to be skeptical.

The Lightkeepers, which formed six years ago to refurbish the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island, point to town meeting's decisive approval of the concept last March as evidence that the town agrees with them. The organization seeks a similar town agreement which it has with the Lightkeepers residence: a10-year lease for $1 a year.

They said they are confident special town meeting will back them if necessary and have reserved space on the warrant just in case selectmen refuse to grant them a lease.

A majority of selectmen say the proposal, which includes expanding the size of the upper floors and renovating the entire building estimated to cost in the hundreds of thousands of dollars, is too ambitious. Money for the renovations would be raised privately.

After 90 minutes of rancorous debate, selectmen held off demanding another Request for Proposal, a lengthy process, and opted to ask the Lightkeepers to work with Town Manager Mark Haddad over the next two weeks to come to a meeting of the minds. What's at issue is how much information selectmen should have or have a right to know about the future of the project.

Selectmen Michael Sullivan, Nan Roth and Ronnie McMorris were highly critical of the proposal submitted by the Lightkeepers as being too vague and lacking sufficient detail.

For starters, they want information on who the Lightkeepers would get the money from, precise details on permitting, and information about the Lightkeepers' board.

Campbell and Ulmer said they have provided selectmen with pages of information but some specifics would have to wait until plans were underway.

"I can't reveal the names of people who give funds...but we have 60 proposals out to foundations," he said.

Selectman Diane Sullivan backs the proposal as is. Selectman Merle Brown, who is a member of the Lightkeepers, recused himself from the discussion.

Diane Sullivan said she could find no negative impact on the town by approving the proposal.

"The town left this in the hands of the board of selectmen to implement," she said. "There is no harm in letting it go forward to see if it flies"

Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Rd., said a majority of the board was being biased and claimed that the project was being held to a different standard than the Lightkeepers Residence was.

"Volunteers are willing to work to make this another jewel in our crown," she said. "What does the town have to lose?"

Teen dance hall plan

the development and upkeep of the dance club, the proposal said.

It will also be open around exam times as an alternative study location.

A "mostly teen" board of directors would govern the club. At this time, it is not clear how the board would be selected.

Bramblett agreed to talk with Town Manager Mark Haddad to keep him abreast of the proposal's progress.

In a related matter, Selectman Diane Sullivan said the teen beach dance, sponsored by the drug and alcohol committee, held at town hall two weeks ago was a big success. She said about 75 teens attended.

"The decor was outstanding and the kids enjoyed themselves," she said. "They left town hall immaculate and behaved admirably."

She suggested the group plan a Halloween party.

"I think that's a good idea and I think the police department would like it too," she said.

Last Halloween, groups of unruly teens in the village attacked police officers with dozens of eggs.

BELATED BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

We send Norman Swain Happy Belated Birthday greetings, his big day was Aug. 31. Hope it is a good one indeed, Norm.

FOOTBALL REUNION

As we reported quite some time ago, Clark Chatterton is planning a football reunion for the winning team of 40 years ago. He has contacted most of the members, and has had many responses already (all affirmative). The night the event will take place has been tentatively set for the Friday after Thanksgiving — he is planning to send a letter to everyone within a few weeks. The one person they are unable to locate is Jeff Cocoran. If anyone knows of his whereabouts, please give Clark a call!

Lane Forrer of Cohasset receives a citation from Secretary of State William F. Galvin. Galvin recently hosted the statehouse Summer Volunteer Luncheon and Anita Smith Scholarship Award Ceremony. The event was an opportunity to recognize student volunteers, like Lane, for their outstanding service as Statehouse Tour Guides this summer.

BENEFIT CLAMBAKE SLATED

Sept. 6 is the date to circle for the Christine Burke Clambake. It is an annual event, with all proceeds going to the Christine Burke Scholarship fund. The place is Sandy Beach, noon 'til sunset; the cost is $30 per person. Please call 383-9657 for more information or reservations.

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY

Aug. 26 was an extremely special day for Sally and Dick Wheeler, that's the day they celebrated 58 years of marriage! Or, "matrimonial bliss," as Mr. Wheeler stated it! Isn't that just so nice? Anyway, they had a wonderful celebration with their children and their grandchildren at their home on Pleasant Street (the same house they have lived in since 1953)! Sally and Dick met at Derby Academy, where they were both students, they were married at the First Parish Church in Norwell, and they honeymooned on Chappaquiddick. All of us extend best wishes for many more years together; you are an inspiration to us all!

TYING THE KNOT

On the subject of weddings, Aug. 31 is the day that Joanna Fone and her beloved Tommy will tie the knot! They are being married at Ken and Sue's home in Maine (not in their home, but in a nearby church), and everyone is so excited about the event. We will be sure to fill you in on all the details afterwards, you just have to know it will be special — here's to a wonderful life for Tom and Joey, before you know it we'll be writing about your 58th anniversary!

HONORS AT TABOR

Tabor Academy sends us word that two of Cohasset's finest have made the honors list for the spring semester. They are: Junior Ryan L. Staszko, son of Mr. Donald Staszko and Dr. Barbara O'Pray; and freshman Erica S. Dean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Dean.

DEAN'S LIST AT BRYANT

The spring semester dean's list at Bryant College includes Cohasset student Erin E. Devine, a sophomore accounting major, and we congratulate Erin for her efforts!

PLANTINGS AT DPW GARAGE

Hopefully lots have been to see the new Cohasset Department of Public Works garage on Cedar Street — if not, get up there before fall really gets underway, so that you can see what Lynn Eisenhauer and Mary Edmonds did to beautify the place! They "begged, borrowed and bought" plantings to decorate the perimeter of the building, and it looks grand! Be sure to thank them for their time and efforts when you see them — isn't it nice when people take a personal interest in beautifying town sites?

ELDER AFFAIRS NEWS

The Cohasset Elder Affairs fall programs are all listed in a new brochure you can pick up at their office — it surely is a full schedule, with lots of various things to do! Just some samples to "wet your whistle:" exercise programs (including yoga), bridge classes under the direction of Barbara Elliott (master bridge teacher), a breakfast club for just men (the Chanticleers), bowling, knitting, a gourmet cooking club under the instruction of Anna Abbruzzese; shopping tours, morning nature walks, computer programs, Mary McElroy instructor; a Journal workshop, America's sons and daughters, exploring personal heritage. Sara's Coffee Cafe will be open for business Sept. 19! All classes will start the week of Sept. 8, please call 383-9112/9116 for registration and/or information.

END OF AN ERA

Last week marked the end of an era, so to speak — Phil and Marcia James Carthus sold their parents' home on Ripley Road. Bob and Hazel James bought the house in 1941, and lived there until their passing. Knowing that it is no longer in the James family makes us re-remember how wonderful the James family was, and how much they did for our town. Hopefully Phil and Marcia will still come back for visits once in a while!

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

When to draw the line

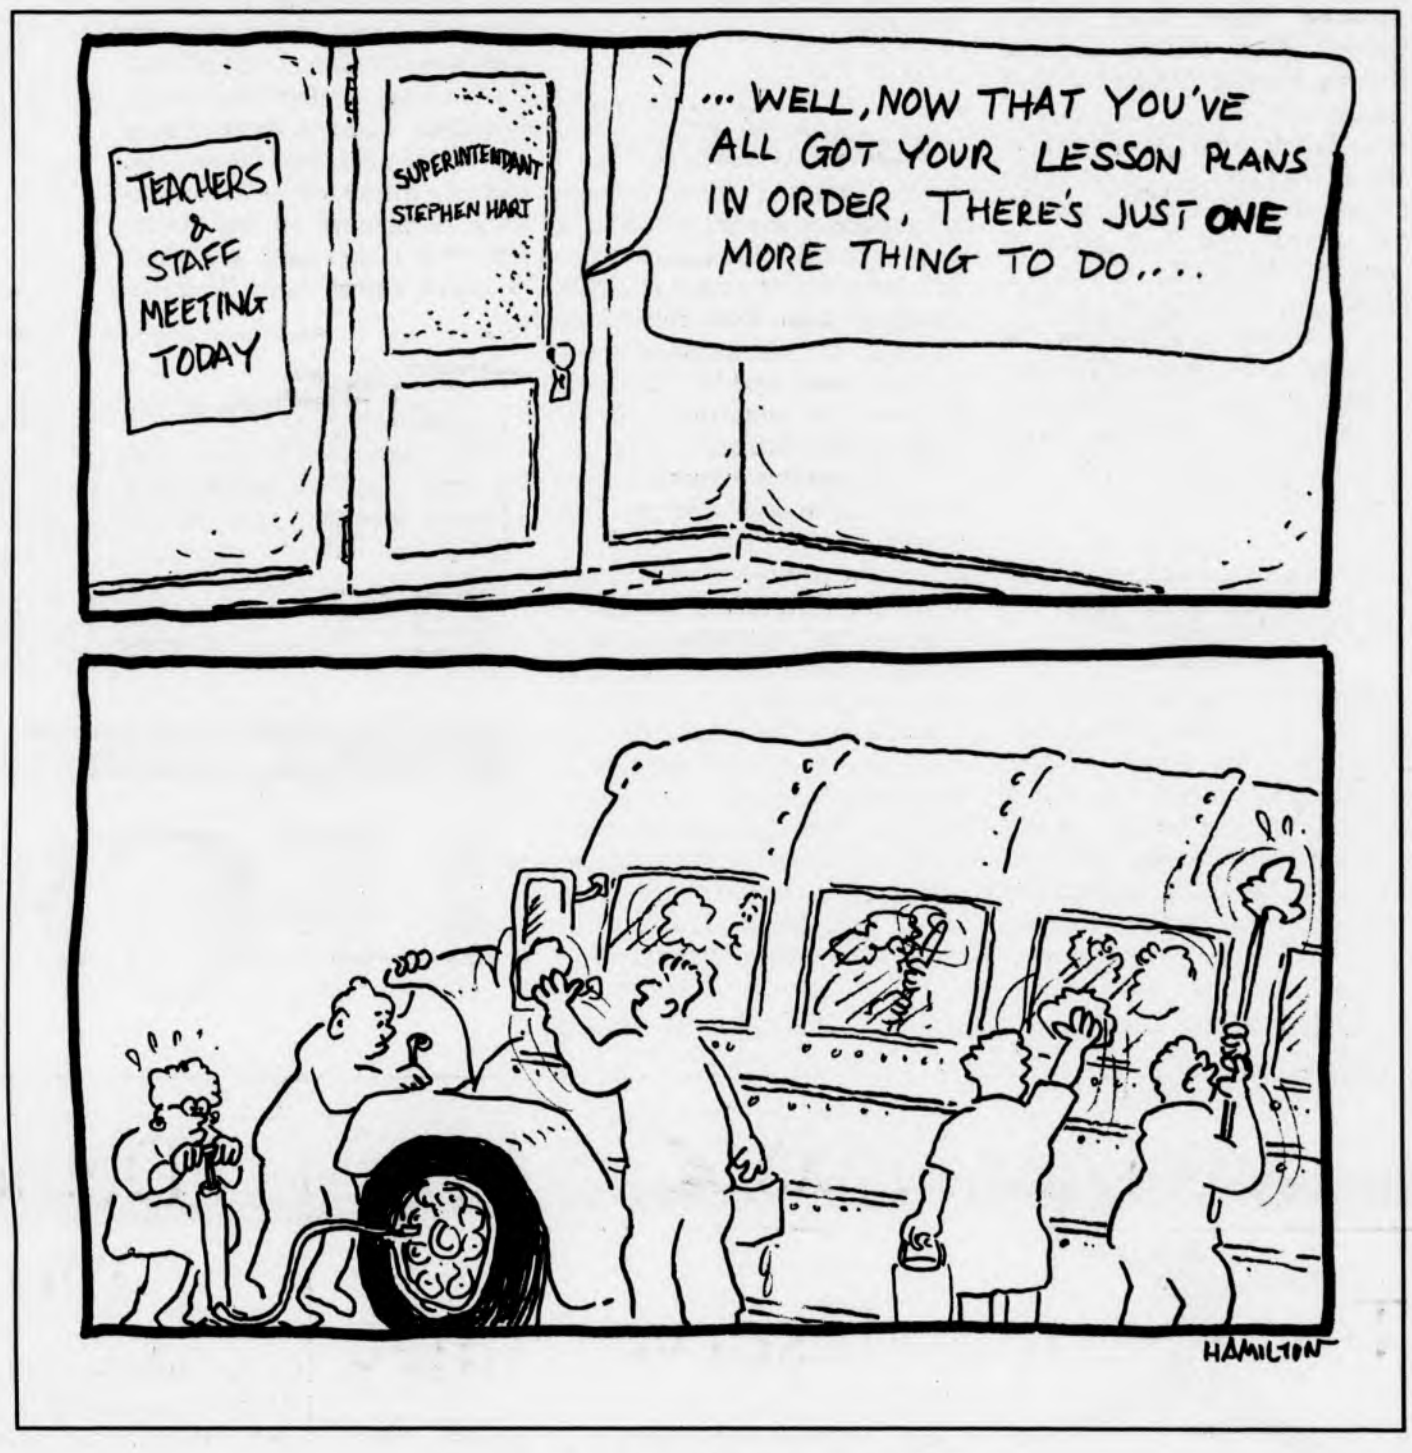
The shocking loss of Britain's Princess Diana, who died in an automobile crash this weekend while being pursued by a group of photographers, must lead to an examination of conscience among those of us charged with reporting the activities of others.

Prosecutors in Paris, where the crash occurred, have not yet determined whether the dogged pursuit of paparazzi photographers contributed to the crash that took the lives of Diana, Harrod's department store heir Dodi Fayed and driver Henri Paul. Paul was reportedly drunk and driving recklessly at the time of the crash.

Nevertheless, the image of a relentless cabal of photographers stalking the world's most beloved public figure in her final moments should lead journalists of all kinds to reconsider the boundaries of their profession.

Just last April, for example, Cohasset police charged Martin Gould, a reporter for The Star, with assault and battery after he allegedly ran Victoria Kennedy, wife of controversial South Shore resident Michael Kennedy, off the road while in pursuit of a story.

Charges of intrusion by the media have not been limited to star-chasing photographers and tabloid magazines. Many local community leaders have argued that aggressive coverage by even hometown newspapers has discouraged qualified, public-spirited residents from participating in public office and has led to mistrust of officials.



Certainly many political leaders and other celebrities thrive on the publicity provided by the media. Stars who complain of being hounded out of their private lives would not be able to command multimillion dollar salaries without widespread media exposure. The hunger of photographers for images of Princess Diana allowed her to use them to publicize causes she was devoted to, such as the danger of unexploded land mines, which otherwise might have received little attention in the press.

And certainly no market for intrusive stories and photos about public figures, crash victims and others stalked by unscrupulous journalists would exist without the insatiable demand of consumers for intimate details and revealing photos. Readers and television viewers must understand that every dollar spent on a lurid tabloid or Nielsen point averaged for a sensational program counts as a vote in favor of lowest common denominator journalism.

Nevertheless, every reporter, editor, photographer should consider, in the wake of this tragedy, the boundary between what the public has a right to know and what constitutes a private life. No one has the right to conceal information that could have a profound impact on the lives of others, and the media has a responsibility to uncover and report that information. At the same time, no one has the right to invade another's private life — however public that person may be — solely to shock, titillate or entertain.

Cohasset Heights expansion, again?

To the Editor:

This is a call to the citizens of Cohasset to respond to the recent request by the owners "our not-so-welcome neighbor," the Cohasset Heights Landfill, to add 15 to 20 vertical feet to its dump in our watershed. This ("minor"?) modification in its permit will add another 50,000 tons of potentially dangerous debris onto its now nearly filled dump off 3A.

CHL's plans for expansion have been rebuffed by the Board of Health in '96, and it has appealed to the courts — a process which takes time and money. In the meantime CHL is filling and the cash flow is running out — so now this end run around the process. This is an affront to public opinion and public safety. This landfill has been declared a public nuisance, a threat to the safety of our water supply and air quality and our quality of life.

I call for all concerned citizens to take the time and write to and voice your opposition to this proposal, demand a detailed review of the potential impact, and demand a moratorium to the expansion plans of this company until a decision is final in the expansion appeal process. Please write or call: Secretary Trudy Coxe Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, 100 Cambridge St., 20th floor Boston, 02202.

Public comments will be accepted until Sept. 15. Act now to voice your concern for our water supply and the quality of life in Cohasset.

New commuter boat service is fine

To the Editor:

I have been visiting my family in Hingham over the summer and have read repeatedly the remarks regarding commuter boat service. I have taken my 7-year-old daughter on several day excursions into Boston. I for one love the new boat service. I was greeted by the most courteous individuals.

I have been on commuter boats all my life and I never felt that my safety or the safety of my 7-year-old daughter was ever in jeopardy on my trips to and from Boston.

It appears that some people are poor losers. Competition is very healthy for business, as is change.

If Nancy Ristuccia and other BRASS members are so unhappy, maybe they would prefer to drive to work on the Southeast Expressway parking lot.

Many more important social issues have been written about in your newspaper over the past seven weeks. Maybe those complaining individuals would be better served to invest their time into youth alcohol problems, drug abuse, teenage pregnancy and lime disease.

I think it is commendable that the Harbor Cruises LLC can offer a high standard of service and save the taxpayers money.

I wish the new commuter boat service well. I think you are offering a terrific service.

LIFE IN COHASSET/ ROBERT ZIFF

Is summer really over?

With Labor Day behind us and the first official day of autumn the 22nd of this month, many people are wondering just how many more warm days are left in the year. Where can one go without putting on long pants and a sweater or a jacket; how many more days can we look out our windows and see the green leaves of summer rather than the barren trees of winter, and how many more days are left to go to Sandy Beach with a blanket and some food and enjoy a picnic, fly a kite, or just relax in the warmth of the sun?

Selene and Doug Eymer, along with their 2-1/2-year-old son Foster, clad in a wool sweater asleep in his carriage, live within walking distance to Sandy Beach and despite the thick blanket of fog that enveloped Cohasset on this past Sunday afternoon, they made their way to the shore.

"The fog makes everything enchanting and surreal," said Selene, "but I don't dread the upcoming winter. After all, fall's beautiful with all the leaves changing color, and then in the winter you have the holidays and the snow which is beautiful too. And I would rather it snowed than just be bleak and cold outside like it was last winter."

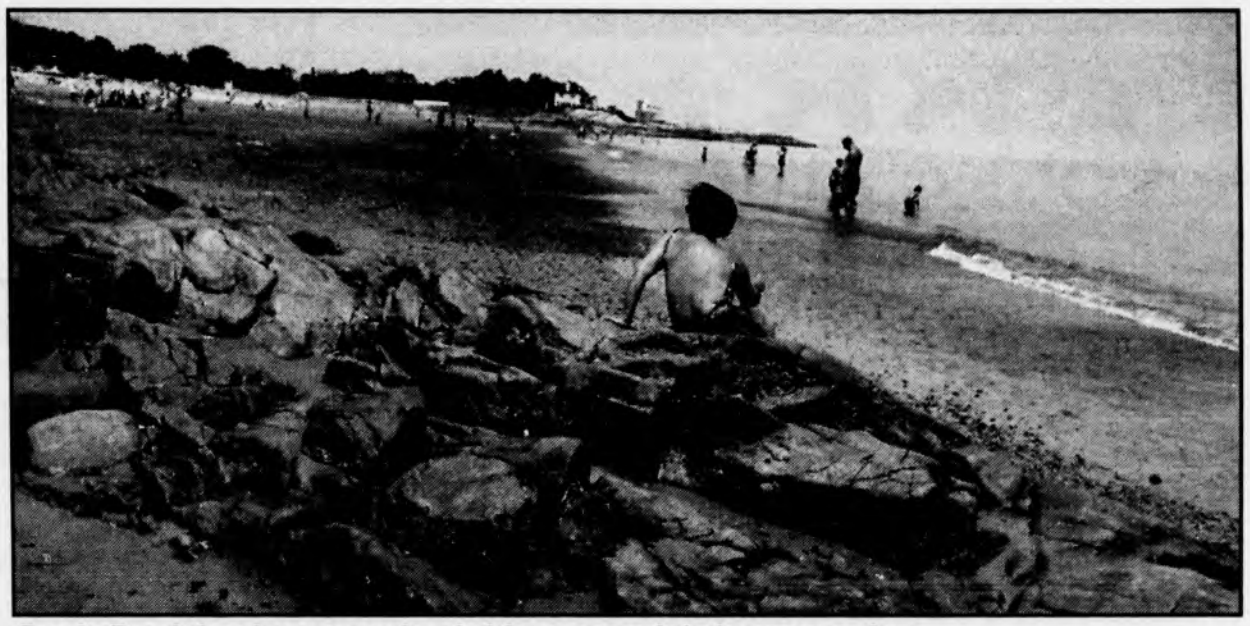
"When they take the Music Circus tent down, that's the sign for me that summer is over," Doug says.

He doesn't mind the winters that much, he says, because every time a snowstorm hits, it turns out he's out of town on business. Selene grimaces at the reminder. Go figure.

Kurt Morley, an avid runner, jogged down from Hingham to enjoy the picturesque scenery of Cohasset and to spend some time with some of his friends and their families.

"I hope this winter will be as mild as it was last year," he said.

However, he still comes down to the beach during the big storms to watch the waves pound the coast line. He finds it "exhilarating!"



Cathy Morley said she considers this her last hoorah for the season.

Whether the winter is mild or brutal with its punishing northeasters, it is still winter and will begin Dec. 21, rain, snow or shine. That may seem like a long way off but in reality it's only a few months from now.

Pat Brendan, who has been coming to Sandy Beach for the last 12 years, was also at the beach Sunday with her family including her grandson, who calls her "Granny Blue Jay." She says she's at the beach three or four times a week during good weather. She likes walking on the beach in September and sometimes in the winter when she can collect sea glass.

Kim Turner from Westport, Conn., part of the Brennan family, was up for the holiday weekend and stated that the two or three times she does make it to Cohasset's beach during the summer months are definitely not enough.

This season could turn into an Indian Summer with warmer weather stretching through September into October, and possibly into November. Unlikely, yes. Impossible, no. The numerous snow removal contractors in the area are keeping their fingers crossed that this doesn't happen. The beach lover in all of us thinks of the summer as much too short. In any event, as the earth makes its way around the sun and one season changes into the next, no single day will be like any other. And it's important to take advantage of each and every day of this season, for tomorrow it may snow.

Sandy Beach is where many local citizens spend their summer days.

Two Scouts deserve praise

Dear Mr. Collins:
Principal
Cohasset High School

This summer two students from the junior high school, Rachel McElroy and Kerry Long, who are members of the Girls Scouts, Cadette Troop 4773, volunteered to work with the Cohasset Elder Affairs. It is my pleasure to tell you they are outstanding girls. They accomplished many tasks and they worked diligently and efficiently. They positively are a credit to their families.

The following is a list of projects they worked on :

Computer flyers for upcoming trips; posters, presentations of summer classes; calls to luncheon participants, helped serve the Tuesday and Thursday luncheons; arranging our CEA programs albums in sequence of years; answered the phone and logged calls; checked in swimmers at the town pool, collected money and documented funds two days a week; designed spreadsheets for computer programs; fashioned handouts for new classes, ran errands to town hall, intercommunication, letter, etc.; developed spreadsheets in Excel; worked on fall brochure for SSCC organizing and inputting of information on programs; assembling information for monthly "Vista," collating, stuffing and mailing.

As you can see, these girls were very busy and productive this summer and they deserve to be recognized. We certainly enjoyed the opportunity to meet Rachel and Kerry and hope they enjoyed their experience with us.

The Board of Directors of the Cohasset Elder Affairs appreciate having young people working with the seniors and it develops a wonderful sense of intergenerational spirit.

Kathy Bryanton, Director
Cohasset Council of Elder Affairs

Ed's note: a copy of the letter was provided to the Mariner for publication.

Thanks for a great summer

To the Editor:

Having completed another successful summer season, the Cohasset Recreation Commission expresses their gratitude for support, interest and efforts to: Cohasset School Department, Department of Public Works, Police Department, Fire Department, Norfolk and Plymouth County Sheriffs Department, State Police, Wire Department and all the individuals, organizations and parents who helped make the summer of 1997 a memorable one.

Special thanks are extended to Mr. Chuck Jaffee who volunteered eight weeks of time and expertise conducting Lacrosse Clinics.

Democratic committee meeting is Sept. 16

Sen. William Keating (D-Sharon), a Democratic candidate for district attorney, will speak to Cohasset Democrats at a meeting of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee at 8 p.m., Tuesday, Sept. 16, at the Unitarian Parish House, 23 Main St.

"Senator Keating is highly qualified to serve Norfolk County as district attorney," said John McNabb, Cohasset coordinator. "He is currently the Senate chair of the Judiciary Committee and the vice-chair of the Criminal Justice Committee, and has a strong record of sponsoring and passing effective criminal justice legislation."

"Keating has always been very good on environmental issues," said McNabb. "He has consistently strongly supported environmental legislation, including bills to protect water supplies. He filed legislation this year to prohibit the siting of landfills over aquifers used as public drinking water supplies."

Cohasset Heights proposes vertical expansion

SAFE urges all Cohasset residents to submit comments on the latest expansion plan of the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill.

CHL is now proposing a vertical expansion of 15-20 feet of their existing landfill, which would allow them to dump another 50,000 tons or more of waste in the landfill and to stay in business for another year.

"This expansion would make CHL the highest structure in Cohasset, and would potentially make the landfill visible from Route 3A," said SAFE President Linda Keller. "Also, CHL would be able to stay in business for another year, instead of closing at the end of this year as projected."

"We need to convince Environmental Secretary Trudy Coxe that this expansion will have significant environmental consequences and to require CHL to submit an Environmental Impact Report," said SAFE Vice-President John McNabb. "Otherwise, we will have no voice in the decision, since the Department of Environmental Protection does not allow public comments for vertical expansion proposals."

Comments should be sent to Secretary Trudy Coxe, Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, 100 Cambridge Street-20th Floor, Boston, MA 02202, Attn: MEPA, EOEA #6290, Cohasset Heights Landfill, or faxed to 727-2754. Comments must be received no later than 5 p.m. on Monday, Sept. 15.

Editor's note: This is a press release from SAFE, a grassroots group opposed to any expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill.

to the Virgin Mary.

According to Father Maheras, the parish of a church must reach a certain level of maturity, a gauge used as proof that it will be ongoing and viable for centuries to come. This gauge is necessary for consecration.

The joy and pride in the hearts of the Greek Orthodox faithful is a far cry from the solemn day on Jerusalem Road when Charles Linder Pope drowned in the river that runs behind the church.

The Pope family, headed by Colonel Albert and Mrs. Abbie Pope, owned 99 acres of land in North Cohasset, including the land that the church stands on, which was then forest and river.

The Pope mansion stands today, divided into condominiums, at the end of Diab Lane off Howe Road. The former Pope stables and servant quarters are also condominiums, while the chicken and pheasant houses, and duckery are now three-bedroom homes.

The Popes spent their summers in Cohasset and their winters in Hartford, Conn. In Hartford, a park is named the Pope Memorial, also for the family.

Colonel Pope was well-known as a bicycle and automobile manufacturer, inventing the "Pope mobile" of which there were a handful made.

His son, Charles' untimely and senseless death deeply saddened the family. It was suggested to the colonel by the pastor at the time of the Bethany Chapel on West Corner that he build a church as a memorial on the land in front of the river where the boy drowned.

The idea appealed to the Colonel and in 1895, he proceeded to build the church, sparing no expense. The roof tiles were imported from Italy. The entire cost of the building was approximately $300,000. On the day of dedication in 1900, Colonel and Mrs. Pope placed a portrait of their son and a handful of gold coins in the cornerstone of the left front entrance of the church. It became the family church and was named the Pope Memorial.

Although the church at the time was non-denominational, it was eventually turned over to the Methodists as a church. When they could not keep up the expenses of it, the Pope family began renting it out.

The Greek Orthodox faithful used it Saturdays to serve the growing Greek population who came to the South Shore during the summers, beginning in the 1920s and 1930s. In Hull, they sold hot dogs and hamburgers to the thousands of summer visitors and residents.

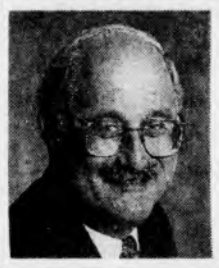
Before and after World War II, the Greeks saw this area, Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate and Hull as a viable place to live and raise their children. It lacked the hectic pace of Boston. They became established and opened businesses here such as shoe repair shops, hotels and restaurants, barber shops and vegetables stands.

Through the 1940s-'50s, bonds formed between those who faithfully worshipped at the Pope Memorial Church, and it became evident in the 1970s, that many more Greek Orthodox faithful were moving to the South Shore, even though they were still obligated to go to Boston and Quincy for baptisms, marriages and funerals.

When the Pope family, now scattered, put the building and surrounding grounds on the market to sell, the Greek Orthodox faithful had already begun to feel the need for a home of their own, a parish and community where they could gather to share their religious heritage and their culture.

Upon word of the sale, remembering the past when they had worshipped so frequently in this structure for many years, these people quickly responded to the call to purchase the church.

"It was providential, not coincidental," said Father John Maheras.



In 1980, the church became the property of the Greek Orthodox faithful and in April, 1981, the church was formally incorporated and given the name then of the "Nativity-Assumption of the Mother of God."

Maheras was the pastor of a church in Manchester, N.H., in 1985. When he was asked to come to Cohasset and pastor this new church, he obliged, and since says, he enjoys being near the water.

According to Maheras, the parish has grown in leaps and bounds in the past 10 years. A ch[illegible]h choir was established, ch[illegible]n school was expanded, the youth program enhanced.

"People, in particular young ones, are feeling a strong sense of the Holy in their lives. Many have a sense of 'having it all,' yet feeling that something is missing. They are trying to rediscover in their lives the point of reference for the Holy. Many times, they find it by coming to church. It fills a void."

Maheras discussed the close relationship he has with the leaders of the other Christian churches in Cohasset. He said that they get together on a regular basis and talk and share the joys and needs of the community.

"The annual village fair in Cohasset is sponsored by the churches, something many people don't know. It's been done for the past 50 years or so, and is always held the first Saturday in December."

A reflection of the cooperative effort and support for each other by the church leaders is the Friday evening of consecration weekend when the choral concert will be the voices of the choirs of all Cohasset churches.

"That will be a moving moment. It is an expression of the town's church acknowledgment of the importance of our consecration," he said.

A youth walk Saturday morning for children and teenagers will begin at the church and end six miles later in North Scituate. Maheras refers to it as "a walk of faith."

Saturday afternoon at 5 will be a reception for the Archbishop Spyridon, who will be coming from New York City. The reception will be hosted by the church ladies.

Consecration services will begin Saturday evening at 7:30 with the vespers services, in which the inaugural prayers of the consecration of the church building will be said.

A children's dance troupe will also be performing Greek dances that evening.

Sunday morning, the service will involve preparing the embedding of religious relics from centuries past and setting them for eternity. The Archbishop will arrive with relics of saints and Father Maheras will bring his relics from Greek churches from the fourth, ninth, 18th and 20th centuries.

There will be an elaborate holy ceremony outside the church before entering and conducting a ceremony of embedding, washing and decorating the altar table with a Bible, candlesticks and a cross. The annointment of the four walls with holy mire and a Eucharist service will then follow.

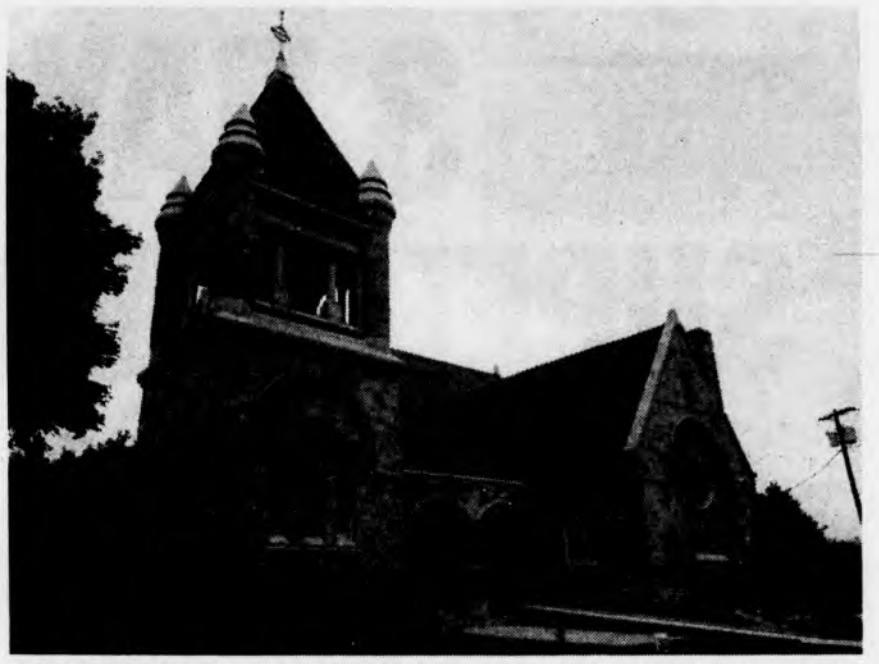
"The ceremony of embedding the relics represents the continuity of the Holy in the church building," Maheras said.

Sunday afternoon will be a consecration luncheon at the Barker Tavern in Scituate at 2 p.m. Parishioners have been formally invited, as have been the other church leaders in Cohasset.

"There will be speeches of gratitude and acknowledgment to all of the many people who helped us get this far," he said.

Monday, Sept. 8, will be the final consecration ceremony. It is the day of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary, which was how the date for the consecration was chosen.

Maheras said that not everyone who belongs to the church is Greek. The president of the Board of Stewards is Irish.



"The parish is comprised of many different ethnic groups. Some are from Roman Catholic background, who have become disenchanted with their religion's changing beliefs. The Greek Orthodox religion has remained constant is its beliefs from 1,000 years ago. That's important to the faithful who aren't comfortable with change," he said.

Maheras said that currently there are 200 families in the parish from the surrounding towns.

On promoting the Greek culture and heritage, Maheras said that their church does it as much as they can because "it contributes to the diversity that exists on the South Shore and shows that we can all live together."

Maheras referred to the Greek Taverna held each year on the July 4 weekend, which offers culture exposure and entertainment for the surrounding towns, and projects the faith and the Greek heritage as well.

According to church literature, the Nativity of the Virgin Mary Panagia Greek Orthodox Church is enjoying an average growth of a new family every six weeks.

The Nativity of the Virgin Mary Panagia Church, 811 Jerusalem Rd.

"This is a very important weekend for our church. We want to share our history and culture, and we invite the general public to join us in this most meaningful celebration. We invite public support and ask that everyone pray for us and with us," Maheras said. "We are very grateful for the Providence, and will never forget how it evolved."

Senior Center clerk to work 25 hours a week

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The "Senior Center" will have the services of a 25-hour per week employee over the objections of Selectman Diane Sullivan.

Sullivan is concerned that the hours of the position, which will be funded by a grant this year, have expanded making the employee eligible for benefits.

It is not clear if grants will be available in future years. If not, the town will pay for the position.

Marguerite Ritterhaus, 80, who was paid for 12 hours per week and held the job for about 10 years, recently retired.

Members of the Council on Elder Affairs, which governs the Senior Center, said Ritterhaus worked more hours than she was paid for. They said filling the position with volunteers doesn't provide the consistency needed.

"Volunteers just don't work out. It's like a hurricane there in the morning," said CEA board member Joe Buckley about the number of phone calls.

Sullivan used the proposal as a spring board to question the CEA about its entire budget which she thinks is large.

She said the annual CEA budget nears $100,000 when the recreation department budget is $72,000 of which $42,000 is returned to the town. Sullivan said about 4,500 are served by recreation department programs and challenged the CEA to justify its budget when some of its classes draw as few as 10 participants. She also questioned why donations for the classes weren't returned to the town.

Buckley explained that the donations are put into a gift fund as required by state law. The money is used to help pay for the cost of instructors so the classes break even. The Senior Center cannot charge for classes under the Older Americans Act.

Buckley pointed out that the CEA budget is less than one percent of the town budget and serves 21 to 25 percent of the population.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested Sullivan compare the CEA budget to the school budget which is about $6 million. She accused Sullivan of making an arbitrary comparison.

"Their (CEA) function is not recreation. They have a multi-service agency," she said.

McMorris pointed out that seniors receive relatively few town services for the taxes they pay.

CEA director Kathy Bryanton explained that many CEA services are outside the Senior Center. An outreach worker helps seniors with insurance issues and provides other functional rather than medical services. She noted that when a worried son from Rhode Island called recently and they were able to send someone over the his elderly parents' home to spend the night until other arrangements could be made.

Sullivan said the town is in fiscally demanding times and could not support increasing the position to 25 hours.

The other selectmen supported the CEA's request. Starting salary for the position is $9.36 per hour or about $12,500 per year.

'Friends' of Swim Center gather to discuss enclosure plans

By Jason Boufford
CORRESPONDENT

The "Friends of the Cohasset Swim Center" are prepared to wade waist deep through layers of tasks in order to complete their plan to enclose the swimming pool at the Hugh Bancroft Charitable Trust Swim Center.

A Aug. 28 meeting of the "Friends" at the South Shore Community Center brought to light several issues which the group must tackle before the pool enclosure project can come to fruition.

"There are several major considerations that we need to address," said group head Joseph McElroy of Windy Hill Road.

Community support will largely determine the project's success. The "Friends" each showed strong enthusiasm for the project, but McElroy hopes to plan the project in such a way that neighbors to the swim center will be as enthusiastic. He views their support as crucial, but appeared confident that most would back the enclosure.

"An enclosure might diminish the carry of sound," he said.

The group also must handle the issue of cost. The project is expected to have a price tag of about $1.2 million, based on estimates obtained from Structures Unlimited, a New Hampshire-based firm. "Friends" member Josiah Stevenson met with a representative from Structures Unlimited to discuss the design of the proposed enclosure, and expected to recieve a more exact cost figure soon. Based on early estimates, the project will require substantial contributions.

While McElroy plans to launch a broad fund-raising campaign, he hopes that a few large contributions will come along to ease financial burdens.

"It's nice to say that the pennies add up, but it's the big hits that make the difference," McElroy said.

McElroy's optimism about the project's ability to take off led him to reserve the Lightkeepers Residence for a fall fund-raiser. User fees could also help offset the project cost.

In addition to the cost imposed by the construction of the enclosure, the group must look at the costs brought about by year-round operation of the pool facility. Increased staffing and maintenance are a few of the expenditures which will increase drastically when the pool's open season quadruples.

McElroy must also market the plan well enough to garner support from the facility's trustees and board of managers. A public hearing process would likely be the final hurdle.

A key to gaining support from influential parties might be the simplicity of the current proposal. McElroy noted that a previous attempt at tackling the pool enclosure project apparently lost momentum when town decision makers realized the cost of the project.

"I think the high price tag turned people off. The design was perceived as gold-plated," McElroy said. This time around, costs will be lower, and the "Friends" will aim to find the proper balance of building an attractive facility and keeping costs in check.

The proposal of ten years ago featured three options, varying in price from the low $1 million range to $4 million. The current proposal will likely fall close to the low-end option from the 1980s. However, factoring in the value of today's dollar versus that of ten years ago, the new proposal will cost considerably less.

GETTING INTO A FIX

▶ An owner of an older car that needs repair may be faced with the decision to fix the car and keep it or sell it and buy another. Sentiment aside, anyone faced with a repair bill that approaches the cost of buying another car would likely buy another one. If the repair cost is much less, many find it a good idea to keep a car they are generally happy with. What about the owner who is faced with a moderate repair bill and still desires a new car? Should the car be repaired before purchasing a new one? Usually, it pays to make the repair before selling because the car will command a higher price and appeal to more prospective buyers if it is in good overall condition.

▶ Speaking with the folks who deal with cars day in and day out can often offer you a perspective on such decisions about whether to make a given repair or not. At SOUTH SHORE CHEVROLET-GEO , we know how to take car care worries off your hands. We pay close attention to your requests because we want to see you here again. We know what a hassle it can be to have car trouble which is why we work hard to get you in and out of here in no time. We're at 828 C.J. Cushing Hwy., Rte. 3A (383-9090).

Cars that are kept free of dings, dents, and chips are more appealing to buyers at the time of their resale.

The Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox is new minister at First Parish

The excitement is palpable at First Parish in Cohasset, Unitarian-Universalist, as members and friends prepare to welcome a new minister, two years after the death of long-time minister,

The Rev. Edward T. Atkinson. The Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox has been called to office unanimously by the congregation which will be looking to her as an inspiring guide and counselor. On Sunday, Sept. 7, at 9 a.m., a pancake breakfast, open to all, will be held in the parish house at 23 North Main St. It will be followed by a service of worship in the Meetinghouse on the Common at 10:30 a.m. Child care is available.

The Rev. Tarbox will preach on "The Talking Stones." She is the 16th minister for the parish as it celebrates the 250th year of the Meetinghouse. During this time, 13 ministers have averaged 19 years of service each — a history which demonstrates an unusual ongoing fidelity of minister to congregation and congregation to minister.

Tarbox is delighted to be coming to Cohasset to serve a congregation that has flourished for 250 years.

"I follow in the footsteps of some outstanding ministers whose service to First Parish has kept the flame of religious freedom burning brightly in this town," she said. Unitarian Universalism is a principled and thoughtful religion which encourages spiritual growth and commitment to social justice.

I anticipate some interesting challenges ahead as we continue to explore and uphold our religious principles. I look forward to joining a Parish that has been steadfast in times of trouble and is ready to face the future with hope, vision and enthusiasm."

English by birth and upbringing, Tarbox is now an American citizen who is grateful for the opportunities this country has afforded her. She is a graduate of Harvard Divinity School, has served as student minister in Norwell and as chaplain at Boston City Hospital. Since her ordination in 1990, she has been Minister of the Middleboro First Unitarian-Universalist Society. Her formal installation as Minister at First Parish will be held Sunday, Nov. 16, at 4 p.m.

The last to go

Bittersweet is the passage into kindergarten, college

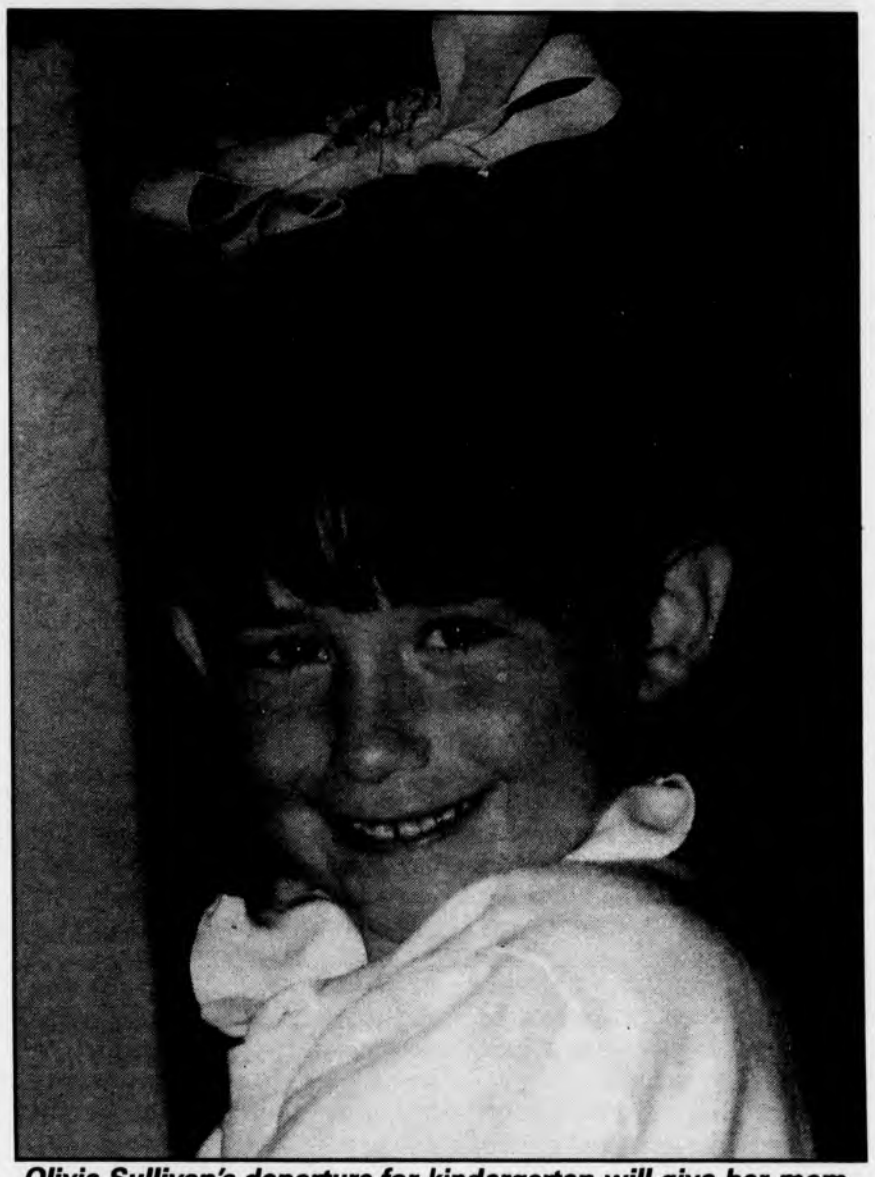
By Mary Sheppard Earon
CORRESPONDENT

Blanche Whitman has had children in the Cohasset school system for the past 24 years. Eric, the oldest of seven sons, entered kindergarten in 1973. This year, the youngest sons, twins Mark and Chad, graduated from Cohasset High School and marked the end of an era in the Whitman family and its continuous feed to the Cohasset public schools. In between Eric and the twins are Adam, Jason, Joel and Josh.

In reflecting back upon a life that revolved around her children for more than a quarter of a century, Blanche says now, as the last ones leave, one for Babson College and one for Bryan College in Rhode Island, "It's hard to believe when you're neck deep in diapers that that stage will ever end. My own mother told me it would, but I didn't believe it. Now, here we are."

Putting away the crib for the last time wasn't hard, Blanche says. But then, a mother goes through all the little stages like the end of nursery school and the last Christmas concert at school. "This is the big one," she says, referring to the twins' departure for college. "They're young men, they're ready, heading into their futures. I think they'll put a good face to the world out there."

Blanche and her husband Peter have had their young leaving the nest for several years. Those who did currently live in the greater Boston area and come home to Cohasset regularly. When they were in college, they came home "with their dirty laundry and to get more food," Blanche laughs. She expects the same from Mark and Chad.



"When the boys show up here all together, I think, what are they doing here now? But I also miss them when they leave to go home. I get sad. I know you can't feel both ways about it, but I do."

Blanche says that although she's thrilled and happy for the twins' going off to college, "for 29 years, I've had somebody at my ankles, so to speak. Now, I don't have anyone else to diaper or feed or take to the doctor. I've had a lot of fun with the kids and it's hard now for the last ones to go."

As far as adjustments that she and Peter will be making as a result of the last child's departure, Blanche has definite thoughts. "Peter and I are looking forward to traveling. But first, there's some work to be done in the house now." Watercolor classes and continuing as a volunteer at the South Shore Social League are also in her plans, as well as seeing her friends more.

Blanche, as the mother of seven children ranging in age from 29 to 18, feels the only bit of advice she can offer to mothers who are beginning to build their families is this: "Enjoy them as much as you can. The years really do go by fast."

Mary Sullivan, also of Cohasset, agrees with Blanche.

Olivia Sullivan's departure for kindergarten will give her mom some time for herself.

Mary and husband Michael are the parents of four, the oldest, Corey, entering the eighth grade at Cohasset High School, the youngest, Olivia, going into kindergarten. Emily and Daniel are in between.

Mary's feelings about her last leaving for kindergarten are bittersweet. "I've had someone home for 14 years. I've enjoyed my time with Olivia. But at the same time, it'll be nice to have some time, my own that I can count on."

Mary laughs when she compares her years as a young mother with her other three children. "I think it's important for at-home mothers to make friends with mothers whose children are the same age. Mothering gets lonely. It helps to have others in the same boat. So, when it was playground time, it became my mission to make friends for myself as well as for my children. Many of my friends today are from those playgroup days with the older children. Back then, I would just hang out and talk. That was a big part of the day. But it was important because they were relationships we began when the children were small and they lasted through the years."

The real challenges now, however, revolve around the different energies it takes to nurture teenagers as well as a kindergartner and an active fourth-grader who is into hockey and being a boy.

"Teenagers don't always want you around. When Corey seeks me out to talk, I try to drop everything to listen. But then, with Olivia being used to people dropping what they're doing for her, it gets tricky if it happens at the same time the teenager needs you."

Mary wouldn't trade her life with anyone, she says. "I enjoy mothering. My focus is on my family and the time out for me usually doesn't take away from that. It's not because I'm a martyr, it's because that distinction makes me happy, even on the days when I could pull my hair out."

Sometimes while pregnant with Olivia, Mary would wonder if her decision to have a fourth child had been a way of delaying the last one going off to kindergarten for five more years.

"Entering the next phase of your life can be scary. Some mothers who have the choice to have one more, may make it for that reason. But, what to do after the last one leaves is overwhelming. I think to myself, what am I going to do? I'll worry about that later."

Overall, in reflecting upon Olivia's passage into kindergarten, Mary smiles and says, "For me, it'll mean having just a little more time, and that's a nice thought."

Chad and Mark Whitman are the last of seven to leave the nest.

Playground politcs: Understanding, surviving children's cliques

By Cathy Goldstein Mullin
CORRESPONDENT

Playground politics. Cliques. Pecking order. Call it what you will, we've all been there, watching our children in silent dismay. As the school year begins and new alliances form in classrooms and playgrounds, cliques are at their most powerful — and potentially destructive — stage. Luckily, there are things parents can do to ease, if not erase, the influence of these exclusive social groups.

• Try to understand the allure of a clique. Talk with your child about her desire to join a certain group. What does she feel it has to offer that she needs? Are there other ways for her to meet this need?

• Always validate what your child is feeling. Telling a child who is left out "not to worry" doesn't help. Saying, "You must be feeling sad" will help her realize that you understand and sympathize.

• Try role playing. If your child is nervous about how she will deal with children leaving her out, practice the situation. Act out the part of a clique member while she plays herself. Brainstorm specific things she can say or do in response to a slight.

• But don't solve her problems for her. Telling your daughter how to handle the situation may simply increase her sense of insecurity. Instead, help your child come up with her own strategies for dealing with exclusion or hurt feelings.

• Build your child's self-esteem. Do all you can to help your child feel confident and competent. Help her to realize that she deserves friends who appreciate her. Try to make your child realize that being in a clique doesn't change who she is.

• Encourage friendships based on shared interests and activities. Talk with your child about the true meaning of friendship. Encourage her to make friends through sports, clubs and other mutual interests.

• Get to know a variety of children. Advise your child to not limit herself to just one friend. If she is willing, suggest that she sit with someone new each day for lunch. Expand your child's circle of friends with those from different schools or neighborhoods. Then, if your child's friendships falter, she will know she has other friends who don't see her through the same eyes.

• Increase your child's empathy for others. If your child is leaving other children out, do what you can to help her see things from another's point of view. Ask her, "How do you think Sara is feeling when she is not included?" Talk with her about the importance of compassion and loyalty.

• Support your child as a positive role model. If your child is in a clique and well-liked, suggest that she use her influence in a positive way. Explain that she has an opportunity to make a meaningful impact on others in the group.

What's hot in back-to-school fashions

By Judy Massey
CORRESPONDENT

On the first day of school this year's kids will be comfortable and stylish in fabrics ranging from cotton to polyester to pleather. The good news for parents is that the oversized look is hot for both boys and girls, so clothes will fit for years to come.

Rugged Bear stores are especially popular with parents of tots just out of nursery school. Rugged Bear has been known for children's heavy duty sports and outerwear, even though it now also carries dresses, pants, sweaters, and shirts as well. There are locations in Hanover, Norwood, Sudbury and Wellesley.

"Our big line is still outer wear," says Mariann Widder, manager at Hanover's Merchants Row store. "The funky ski caps are the hot sellers, the jester caps, anything weird and way-out. Customers start asking for them in July."

Still popular this year in the clothing line are oversized tops and leggings for girls and anything with sports on them for boys, Widder says. Kids like comfortable wear, preferring pull-on pants to "constructed" clothing, she says. "Parents like our clothes that wear well, cords and twills."

Rugged Bear private label twill pants, in nine colors and sizes two through 16 in 100 percent cotton, are built for wear and tear. Acrylics, too, are really big for boys and girls this year, and colorful pullover sweaters are made to go with the hues in the Rugged Bear twill pants. They wash easily and are not as itchy as some wool sweaters, plus the sweaters come in designs for kids who love bears, dinosaurs or stripes.

Besides cotton and easy to care for acrylics, girls will wear pleather this fall, a fabric with the look and feel of leather but the durability of vinyl. Off-price retailer T.J. Maxx offers pleather boot-cut pants, blazers and three-quarter length jackets.

Budget shoppers will begin with basics like jeans and solid or patterned tops and add one piece in pleather, perhaps a vest or jacket. "For optimal fashion, wear pleather with poly/satin tops and chunky heeled boots or shoes," says T.J. Maxx fashion spokesperson Laura Cervone.

Clothes with plenty of pockets are also optimal this year, but that is no surprise. Where else would a kid keep a Beanie Baby or virtual pet? T.J. Maxx shows farmer jeans with pockets everywhere. For girls, last year's stylish tiny purses have given way to big sacks in suede, leather or fabric.

Larger bags look great with the newest styles in blue jeans, faded denims that flare at the knee to wide legs often embroidered with flowers and hearts.

"It's everything we wore in the 60s," says Ilene Levin, fashion consultant and personal shopper for Macy's By Appointment. Levin's services are free to Macy's customers who can shop with her in person or via e-mail.

In Macy's girls' department, Levin found polyester bell bottom pants in black, white or chocolate by Ally B. Some pants sport chain belts at the hip. "Wear bellbottoms with a cropped top and chunky shoes," she says.

"Little girls want to look like teenagers," Levin says, pointing out long slim black skirts to wear with tiny tops. The look carries through to the junior department where long black skirts are shown with matching jackets. The suit can be worn with a colorful tiny T-shirt (pumpkin is a hot color this fall) or a dressy lace blouse for a more formal tone.

"I like the pleather and polyester," said high school senior Patrice Ruff who was shopping at Macy's. She says that fashion has always been important to her. "I don't wear sweatshirts," she added.

What she does wear are long skirts with dressy boots. She likes lace tops and the look of crocheted shirts. Ruff owns 12 pairs of velvet pants.

"There are so many fabrics: velvet, corduroy, denim, and cotton as well as the new pleathers and polyesters," Levin says. "That means that parents and children should be able to find what they want to look great on the first day of school."

Today's junior girls are ready for back to school in the coolest looks of the season: "boyfriend/snowboard" sweater and flare jeans with floral appliques, left; pleather jacket and boot-cut pants, right. Available at T.J. Maxx.

IT'S CHILD'S PLAY TO YOU.

BUT IT'S ROCKET SCIENCE TO HIM.

Research shows that during the early years, fun and learning are one and the same...and that young children who are allowed to learn through play actually become better students later on. That's why Gymboree Play Programs are creatively designed to help infants, toddlers, and preschoolers explore and learn about themselves and their world through developmentally appropriate play.

Gymboree is fun with a purpose -- children explore their growing abilities, from motor skills and socialization to the seeds of intellect that can take them to the stars. Parents are actively involved in the fun, making it even more satisfying and fruitful.

Savvy back-to-school shopping

• Take one child at a time, leaving siblings home. Instead of paying a sitter, trade childcare with a friend.

• Shop magazines and circulars before you go. Tell your older child how much you will spend and let him make a budget plan. Practice with a catalog before hitting the stores.

• Set up a shopping plan that is organized, yet flexible.

• Look for a backpack with reinforced rubber bottom to stand upright. Eastpak and Jansport offer lifetime warranties.

• Look for deals on summer T-shirts to be worn under sweat shirts or baseball caps in dark colors. Classrooms can range from hot to cold, so kids need to be able to remove layers.

• Catch end of season sales on baseball caps. Look for darker colors for fall.

• Stock up on essentials like socks and boxers. Allow room in the budget to buy necessities like rain boots in August. By October choices will be limited.

• Buy only one fashion outfit before school starts. When kids see what others are wearing they can sometimes lose enthusiasm for new clothes.

• If you decide to buy several outfits for younger children, be sure that all tops coordinate with all pants or skirts so that a child (or busy parent) can easily create no-fail outfits.

• If you buy all polyester fabrics for your child, follow laundering instructions carefully. Most are easily washable but need to be line-dried to avoid pilling in the dryer.

• Try to shop on a weekday morning when sales personnel are available to help you coordinate outfits.

Cap on Spending

Youth apparel is a $20 billion industry that hits its peak in the fall, when spending hits an average of $400 per child, according to the National Retail Federation.

But when it comes to back-to-school planning, time really is money. Faced with time pressure, many parents don't make wise choices based on what kids need, rather than what strikes their fancy. Some tips:

• Evaluate what your child already has.

• Budget for basics first.

• Work with a basic color to pull together a new back-to-school wardrobe. But don't forget a few unusual items that will add versatility to your child's basic wardrobe.

• Buy easy-care, durable clothes, which are best for younger children.

• For adolescents, spread purchases over time. They tend to have growth spurts.

Teen Spirit

Although we often think of adolescence as a difficult time, teenagers may see things differently. About 57 percent of the adolescents who participated in a recent React magazine survey said they would like to be teenagers forever.

The majority of respondents, 54 percent, said 18 to 24 is the ideal age group; 38 percent said they would choose to be 15 or younger; 6 percent voted for 25-35; and only 6 percent said that 36 or older would be best.

Taming the Tube

The National Institute on Media and the Family recommends the following guidelines for getting control of your children's use of television:

• Avoid using the television as a baby sitter.

• Know what your kids are watching.

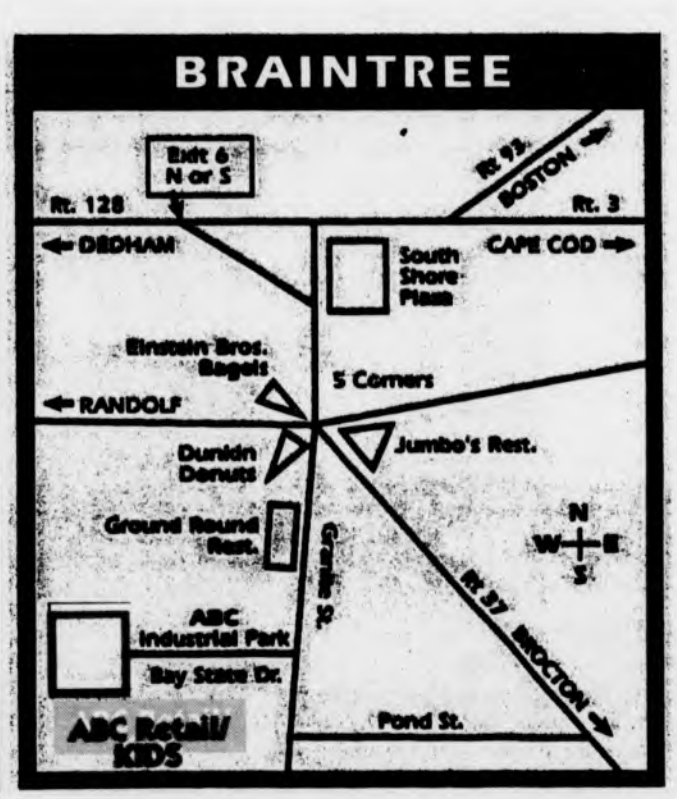
• Watch with your kids when you can.

• Set guidelines around when and what your children watch.

• Turn the television off during meals.

• Talk to your child about what she's watching.

• Put the family on a TV diet and schedule some fun alternative activities.



• Don't make the TV the focal point of the room.

Dress Codes: You are what you wear

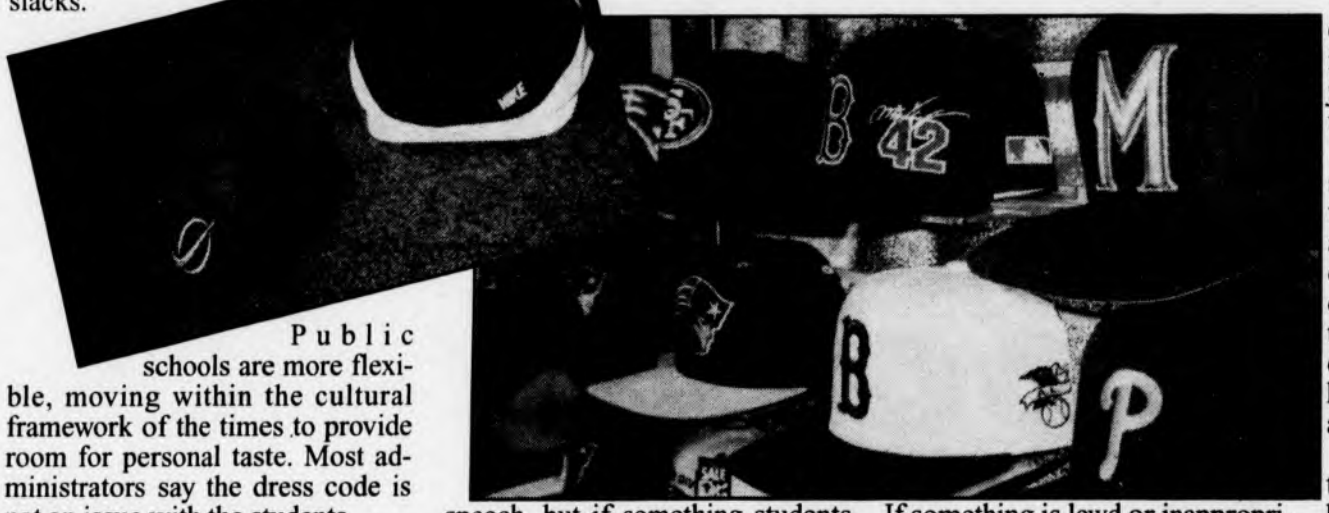
By Mary Kate Shea
CORRESPONDENT

What students don't wear this fall may be as important as what they do wear.



Massachusetts Commissioner of Education Robert V. Antonucci says, "Dress codes and school uniforms are completely local options for Massachusetts school districts. If a district chooses to have them, based on full discussion with parents, then that's terrific. If they choose not to, based on full discussions with parents, that's fine as well."

Though uniform and dress codes are individually established at private, public and vocational schools, most adhere to the tenet that articles of clothing must not disrupt learning, destroy property or injure students. Freedom of expression is allowed as long as students are not infringing on the rights of others, and health and safety codes are followed.

Uniform policies are longstanding at private schools. Some educators believe that uniforms are less expensive and provide an orderly, equal footing for students of all economic backgrounds. Individuality, though not shown in dress, may be expressed through class work.

At Notre Dame Academy in Hingham, school spokesman Mary Barry says, "The required pieces of uniforms for the female students are a plaid kilt skirt with a short sleeve, white polo shirt or white turtle neck in the winter. They can also wear a navy blue pull-over or cardigan. Students are not allowed to wear anything else."

Thayer Academy in Braintree has a dress policy which states, "Students should dress appropriately for a learning environment. Any distraction to learning is unacceptable. The administration asks students not to wear such items as jeans, T-shirts, tank tops, miniskirts, sports clothing and clothing with inappropriate messages. Hats are not allowed in campus buildings." Students are required to "dress up" on Mondays for guest speakers. Girls wear skirts or dresses and boys wear sport coats, ties and slacks.

Public schools are more flexible, moving within the cultural framework of the times to provide room for personal taste. Most administrators say the dress code is not an issue with the students.

Assistant principal at Marshfield High School, Arthur Barry, looked up the code in the student handbook. "The student's mode of dress or appearance must not be disruptive of the teaching/learning process, unclean or violate the health and safety regulations of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; ie., student's hair and attire must reflect the generally accepted standards of cleanliness; sandals or shoes must be worn; metal taps or footwear that mark floors or cause destruction to school are prohibited."

Barry says, "Dress codes are not an issue. Most of the kids dress fairly well and the code isn't used that much. If there is an infraction, normally we'll call the student down to the office and talk to the student and ask them to comply. They generally do. We don't have a lot of trouble with this at all. I think we've come to a higher level here."

Prudence Goodale, principal at Scituate High School, says, "The dress code at Scituate High School right now is that the students are expected to dress appropriately and would not wear anything that would cause distraction or disruption. We do allow the laws of free speech, but if something students are wearing is offensive, we would speak to them. " She adds that hats are allowed, and shoes or sneakers are required.

Hanover High School has made a change in its dress policy this year by not allowing hats, hoods or bandanas in the school building or classrooms. "What the dress code does is set an atmosphere that won't adversely affect learning," says Principal Thomas Nee. "We can't have specific dress codes as per the court, but T-shirts that provoke other people or promote tobacco, alcohol or drugs are not appropriate.

"For the first time we have a no hats or hoods policy. The students don't wear hats in middle school; for reasons of health and safety we can have this policy. In the past a lot of the teachers asked students to remove hats in their classrooms. We'd like to be consistent on that."

Nee says he doesn't feel the new code will be an issue.

Student Timothy Sullivan attended the sub-committee meeting that recommended the change. Sullivan, a senior, is Hanover High School's co-chair of the student advisory council for the school committee. "We have a pretty lenient code. We can wear jeans, shorts, short sleeve shirts all year-round. If something is lewd or inappropriate, the student might have to turn it inside out for the day.

"The no hats policy is based on safety concerns and old school traditional values. The administration's point of view is that it's appropriate to take your hat off as a sign of respect when talking to someone or when in a public building for seven hours. I can see that point, and also it ups the professionalism of the students.

"I think what is gained by having a dress code is you limit some problems that might present themselves. It's more professional and the school looks that much better. It's really not the constitutional issue some people would like to make it, and I don't see a huge uproar from the students. We have nothing to gain by hitting the street over it with signs. We don't want to waste our time on that during senior year."

In area vocational schools, dress codes are established to provide safety and to promote the importance of personal appearance in technology and business professions.

Richard Donovan, vocational coordinator at Blue Hills Regional Vocational Technical School in Canton, says, "The top reason for a dress code is safety in the shops. That is why we have uniforms. The code goes beyond articles of clothing to include footwear, hair and jewelry, depending on the individual program's regulations."

The 15 vocational shops at the school have industrial designated uniforms that students purchase and maintain. During academic classes, appropriate footwear is required and excessive hair length, torn or dirty jeans, spandex or cut-off shorts, tank tops, headbands, hats and wallet or garment chains are not acceptable.

"There is always a place for extreme fashions and casual wear, but school is not a place for those things," says Donovan. "Overall, none of the students have a problem accepting the requirements. Incoming students see that the upper class is following the policy. There are always the exceptions that will test you and those students are sent home for a change of clothing, or if there is a safety problem, we put the student into a different environment.

"What you wear is a showcase of your attitudes and values. We try to develop social skills as well as technology skills to make a complete person. We're involved in trying to instruct these students on how to go on interviews and what's expected of how you dress. How you appear to your potential employer may depend on if you get the job or not. Dress and appearance are important parts of your life."

Brown-baggin' it

By Chad LaBonté
CORRESPONDENT

My mum was proudly feeding us kids healthy lunches before healthy lunches were cool. I remember sitting next to the kids with the Great Space Coaster lunch boxes filled with Doritos and Ring-Dings, wishing just once I could find someone willing enough, or weird enough, to trade for my sprouts on whole wheat and apple. Yet I must admit, there were a few occasions when even I traded a cookie for the 25 cents my mother intended for milk and drank from the water fountain.

It must have been tough. My mother did a great job at least trying to get us to eat well at the one meal over which she had no control. Today's mothers have an even more difficult job. Back then, we had four food groups — today you've got a whole pyramid to know and follow. The Academy of This tells you to follow these guidelines while the Center of That tells you to follow these better guidelines. One minute granola is good. The next minute it's bad. Dried fruit was good for your kids. Now it isn't. Now it is. You have to balance feeding your kids the right foods with the knowledge that they just might not eat the lunches you pack. I think the best advice I've heard on the subject of childhood nutrition is to pay closer attention to the overall nutritional intake of your children. Yes, you need to watch their fat and caloric intakes, but a brown bag lunch should not become such a stress-point!

The parents who follow the food pyramid guidelines and make sure their children are getting plenty of exercise are much better off than the parents who give themselves a migraine over filling a bag with non-fat, noncalorie, sproutish, organic, leathery nonsense. The simple fact is that the kids can tell the difference between carob chips and chocolate chips!

Will the world end if Johnny has some reduced fat potato chips in his lunch on Monday? Probably not. If little Karen chooses gummy bears instead of an apple, will she be damaged for life? I don't think so. We're not talking about letting them loose with the entire bag. You still control the portions and the range of choices that go into the brown bags.

Why not sit down with your kids and talk over their lunches with them? This way the kids get some input, you get the opportunity to teach them a little about nutrition and you both have a better chance of having the brown bag empty when lunch is over — the contents eaten by your children.

One evening a week, sit down with the kids and plan out their lunches. Present your children with the ability to make some choices and to exert some control over the foods they eat. Hey, you never know, your child might actually choose the carob chip cookies!

If you're feeling a bit uneasy about what types of foods to suggest to your little ones at your first Brown Bag Board Meeting, you can always consult your pediatrician or a local nutritionist. These people are there to help you figure out all this craziness. In all she did, one of the best ways my mum tried to make our lunches truly "healthy" was to include a little love note every day. I remember sitting in the school cafeteria reading messages like "I love you" and "hope you're having a great day" while crunching carrot sticks. (Somehow these simple notes made even sprout sandwiches taste better!) Make sure to include lots of big hearts, smily faces and exclamation points. Don't worry if your children are getting older — keep writing those notes. Even if you're child is too cool and embarrassed to read them, at least they'll know the notes, and feelings, are there.

COHASSET MARINER

Building blocks in place for improved football squad

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

If experience counts, the Cohasset High Football team should be counting a lot more victories this season.

Last year, the Skippers finished with a 1-9 record in the South Shore League. However, last year was a true rebuilding year for Cohasset. The building blocks have been put in place.

Last week, among the 42 players that turned out for practice, 17 of them were returning juniors. You might say the 17 give the Skippers instant experience.

Besides the large number of experienced juniors coach Bob Knurek has coming back, he also has a quarterback in Pat Hurley who brings a whole lot of experience to the team.

Hurley, a captain, will be starting his third year at quarterback. Andy Hamilton, another captain, will also be bringing plenty of savvy to the team, starting at fullback and linebacker.

Other experienced seniors on the team are Jamie Buick, who plays end both ways and John Kasamaeyer, an offensive guard and defensive end.

Knurek, who is starting his fourth season at Cohasset High, third as head coach, is thrilled with the large turnout of players. Said coach Knurek, "It's quite a difference since my first year here. We started out with a small group that season, and by the end of the season we actually had just 16 players left on the team."

"Things certainly seem different now. Many of the kids that showed up have been working out all summer long. They are in great condition and have shown an unbelievable commitment to making the upcoming season a winning one. This work ethic is truly something new with the kids. I hadn't seen it before. You just know the kids want to improve on that record of last year."

One of the big surprises that confronted coach Knurek at the start of practice, was truly a big surprise. A 6-3, 230-pound transfer student John Considine has joined the team. You can bet coach Knurek will find a place in the starting lineup for Considine.

Knurek is also looking for big things from his third captain, junior Justin Goldin, who plays fullback and linebacker.

Another junior who will play a major role on the team this season is Alex Russell, a center and nose tackle. Nothing like having an experienced player at that position.

An optimistic Knurek continued to praise his juniors, "those kids got plenty of good playing time last year and we think it's going to pay off this season."

Unable to find an opponent for the season opener on Friday, Sept. 12, Cohasset will open its season on Friday night, Sept. 19 at East Bridgewater.

Attempts to fill the open date just didn't happen, but there's a strong rumor Cohasset will hold an interesting scrimmage on that day.

All of Cohasset's home games will be on Friday nights, under the lights. Cohasset's lights went in last year. All eight teams in the SSL have lights.

Cohasset will play two Saturday afternoon games, both non-league games, one against Norton at Norton and the other against South Boston High at White Stadium, Boston.

The other non-league game will find Charlestown High at Cohasset.

Cohasset played the two Boston teams tough last year, losing to Charlestown, 16-12 and bowing to South Boston, 8-6.

And, of course, there's the biggest game on the schedule, which finds Cohasset playing the ever powerful Hull High School team on Thanksgiving Day.

Commenting about Hull, all coach Knurek, who coached in Michigan prior to Cohasset, could say, "that Hull team is certainly one of the big powerhouses in the state."

The Skippers appear to have all the ingredients for a good season, and possibly a very successful season, thanks to the load of experienced players that the team will field and the excellent condition the players reported in. This year's football should certainly be interesting for the fans who suffered through last year's dismal season.

One of the townís finest summer traditions, the club brought the thrill and camaraderie of sailing to a record number of kids, adults, and families this year. On Sunday, August 24, club members gathered to cap the season with a day of racing and awards, topped with a family cookout.

A select squad of skilled seamen and seawomen carried the Award Day competitions.

FISHING STORY

BY MARK TRASK

Of pogies, stripers and the ones that got away

Cool fingers of fog wafted over the moors of the North River as I rattled across the permanent temporary bridge. Darn, I thought to myself. Great weather all summer long and now fog and showers to start the holiday weekend. Little did I know, regardless of the weather the tenacious anglers of the South Shore would have a wildly successful three days of angling.

Barry Sladen Jr. of Scituate, started it off by bumping Mike Russell out of the top spot of the Beachcomber Tournament. Barry's big bass inhaled a pogie and stretched the scale to 27 pounds 1 ounce.

Paul Hansell groaned when his mussed by an ounce. By the end of the weekend however a new fish stood at the top of the leaderboard.

Todd Cowden captured the top spot Sunday and is currently holding forth with a 27-pound 8-ounce striper. Nice fish!

Speaking of 27-pound fish, Kathy Marks of Cohasset showed the ladies how to do it with a hefty 42-1/2 inch bass. A fresh pogie was the trick to fooling the 27 pound 8 ounce fish adjacent to Shag Rock. Daughter Laura made the scale with a 42-incher as well. Another pogie and 23 more pounds of fillets!

What about Dave? Somebody's got to run the boat, said he. His fish tipped the scale to 23 pounds 10 ounces. Caught on? One of these great pogies he laughed as he counted out six more.

Nils Sceery and Jon Littauer were hanging around the rocks under the Bigelow villa waiting for Tom Littauer to come around from the harbor to take them out fishing. While they waited, Jon practiced flipping his Sluggo lure with a lightweight freshwater rig he had brought along.

As he approached Sandy Cove in the boat, Tom could see the boys waiting. Drawing closer he could see that the boys were all excited. What he saw next caused his eyes to pop. Slung between the boys was a big striper!

Incredulous shoppers took a moment and left shaking their heads as they saw the rod Jon had used and the scale wavering at 24 pounds 5 ounces! (Over the next two days Tom kept the string alive catching a brace of 100-pound tuna on towed squids).

Then there was the "Kahuna." Chris "Kahuna" Barrow of Cohasset, slayer of mighty fish in fresh and saltwater alike. Chris was fishing the wall at Lily Pond and caught a minuscule sunny. He practiced adjusting the drag like dad had taught him.

Suddenly a huge bass shot out of the depths and inhaled the sunny and took off for Beechwood. Chris had all he could do, leaning back, holding onto the rod for dear life, the drag singing a whining buzz.

"And?" I asked. looking into the trunk for the big bass to weigh.

"Oh he spit the hook?" exclaimed Chris. A few days later the fabled Kahuna made a trip onto the briny with Tom Lagrotteria and mom Christine.

"How'd you catch them?"

"Drifting pogies at north Hogshead," Chris chattered, "that's how we caught them," as we unloaded twin stripers at the scale. Tom snickered at the location. Kahuna's fish went 21 pounds 1 ounce! Tom's made 20 pounds 4 ounces.

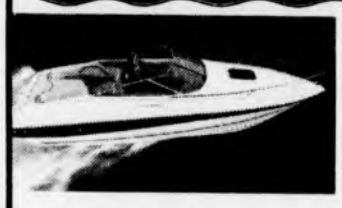
The McGowan crew had a threefer. Pogie chunks caught Charlie a 39-incher, Pat a 34-incher and Jay Kasianowicz a 36-inch striper. Mike and Jon Grimm had good luck at the Shag's fooling a 33 inch and 37 inch striper respectively on mackerel chunks.

Wally Phipps nailed a couple up in the Gulph River. Minot's Brendan O'Donnell got his first keeper. Brendan's 39 inch fish weighed 18 pounds 7 ounces.

Over on Little Harbor, Paul Verrochi maneuvered the Zodiac for what must have seemed like forever as son Mark deftly battled a strong striper on his 8# fly rod.

Using a dark-colored Lefties Deceiver and an 8-pound tippet, Mark managed to bring the fish to net in slightly less than an hour. The 13 pound 7 ounce, 35 inch fish is being evaluated for submission to the International Game Fish Association to see if it qualifies for world record status.

Freshwater fishing has picked up nicely. Robin Barrow of Scituate with help from sister Amanda caught a 4 pound 3 ounce Lily Pond largemouth. Paul O'Neil sprinted to the shop from Hunters Pond to weigh in his largemouth bass. Paul released it live. Tom Judge is happy to be back fishing and celebrated by catching a 5 pound 2 ounce bass with Rick Hutchinson. A seven-inch black shad worm did the trick.



Now we enter the best fishing month of the year. With chunks capturing a large number of fish other anglers quietly ply the rocks with tube and worm rigs. One pleased angler who wishes to remain anonymous caught and released 17 keepers Sunday night. Beachcomber Tournament entries are available at the shop.

Catch one that is hard to carry!

Diamond girls come home with all the gold

Cohasset girls softball officially ended their summer season by taking home the District Eight Championship. Cohasset shocked everyone by defeating Avon in an exciting 8-7 win.

This summer team was made up of players who had participated in Little League's spring softball program and wanted to continue to play and improve. A sincere thank you is extended to South Shore Chevrolet for its generous sponsorship of this special team.

This championship is the result of hard work and commitment by these girls and their coaches in order to become the best softball players they could be.

A thank you is also extended to coaches Stephen and Lottie Cook, Bob Lewis and Mike Pereino for putting a great deal of their time and unique talents into building a competitive summer league team.

Practices were held regularly, during which the girls were drilled in the fundamentals of the game. During the season, all 12 girls saw plenty of action and their positions were interchangeable.

These coaches showed a good balance between managing a competitive team and also making it fun for each girl who participated in the summer girls softball program.

"It was a pleasure coaching and watching every player improve," said Lottie Cook.

Cohasset reached the finals by beating No. Randolph, 14-5.

In the final game against Avon, Kelly Holway pitched for Cohasset and found herself in a tight game.

Cohasset was trailing 3-1 after three innings.

In the top of the fourth, Heather Peraino and Holway singled, Rachael Doyle walked and with the bases loaded, Sera Genovese singled home Peraino and Holway. This tied the game at 3-3.

Avon took the lead once again with three runs in the top of the fifth. The score was now 6-3.

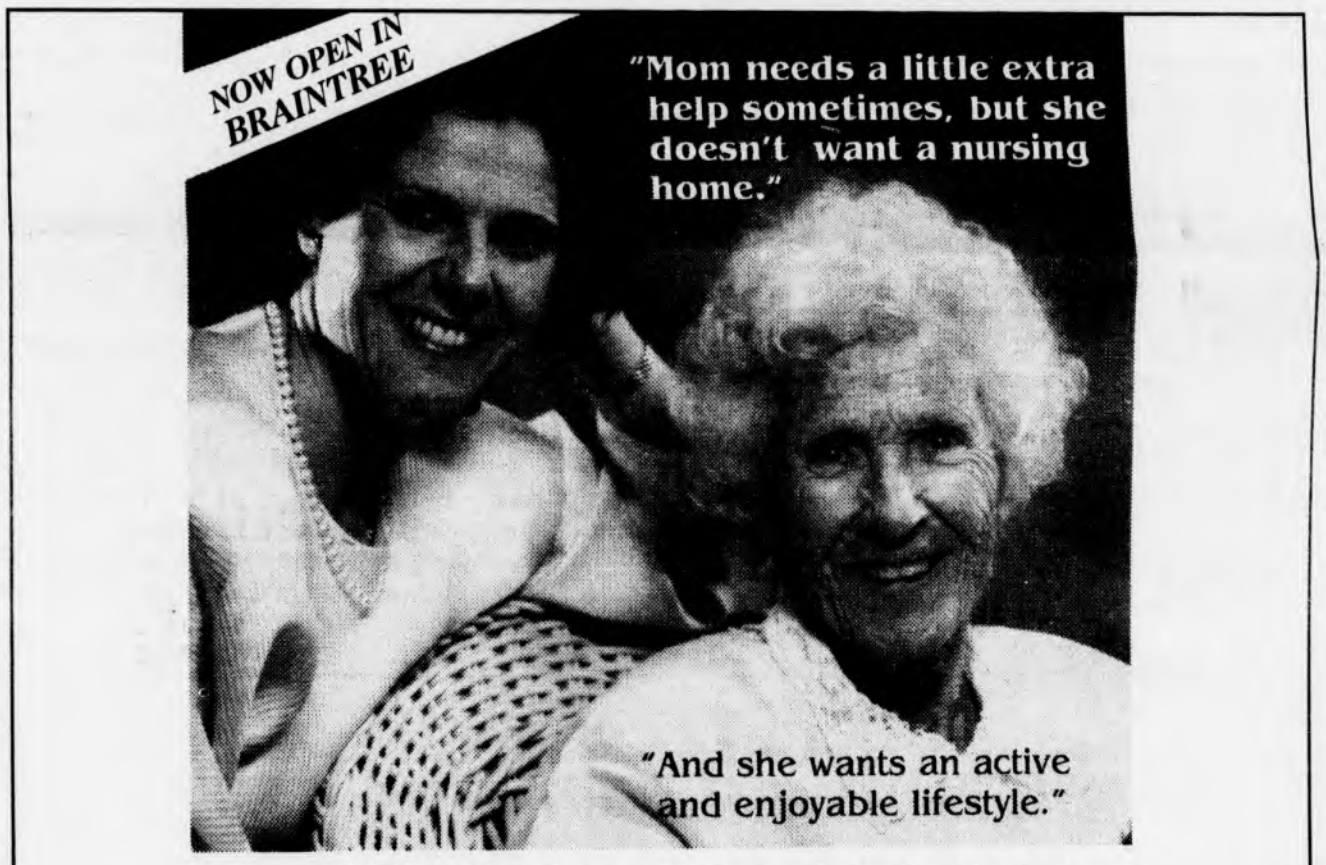
Cohasset once again would not quit. Danielle Pinkus led off with a double, Kerri Esposito walked, Ashley Cook singled home Pinkus and Lindsey Grossman singled home Esposito and Cook to tie the game.

After Maura O'Brien singled, Grossman stole home to put Cohasset in the lead.

Peraino then singled in O'Brien to give Cohasset an 8-6 lead going into the sixth.

Avon refused to give up and got another run. Trailing 8-7 with the bases loaded and one out, Avon's top hitter, Lisa Donahue, hit a deep line drive to right that had homerun written all over it.

Maura O'Brien somersaulted in a backward dive to make a spectacular catch, got up and threw a bullet to Cook at home plate to hold the tying run at third.



The crowd went wild as Holway struck out the last batter to secure the District Eight Championship for Cohasset.

This was a complete team effort with so many players who were able to confidently play different positions, such as Katie Portanova, who played first, third and outfield; Caroline Carr, who played third and outfield; and Sarah Brady who played second, third and outfield.

"After watching these girls play in a very competitive league, Cohasset has a great future in girls softball, stated Lewis. "The town should be proud of these girls. They represented Cohasset with good sportsmanship."

has
Some Things Old and Some Things New

Some Things Old:
The greatest bagel on the South Shore. They are made the same way and boiled then baked fresh each day by the same bakers, and there are always over 12 varieties from which to choose. Over 16 varieties of cream cheese, made on-site. The same great coffee.

Some Things New:
Ed Brunoli, former general manager of the Whiton House in Hingham, has assumed the role of manager with a goal to add an interesting variety of deli sandwiches and light dinners, catering and party platters, and strict quality control procedures that will ensure quality products at reasonable prices.

Sandwiches. We now offer roll-ups and pita bread sandwiches, in addition to bagel sandwiches. Over 10 varieties of meats and main toppings, 5 cheeses, our cream cheeses, and a full selection of added toppings give a near endless variety of sandwich possibilities. Try roast beef on a spinach roll up with horseradish and bacon cream cheese, lettuce and tomato, or a turkey with stuffing and cranberry sauce on a plain roll-up, or an egg, cheddar cheese and sausage bagel sandwich, or a gyro on pita bread or as a Greek roll-up, or a grilled chicken breast sandwich with grilled onions and peppers.

Soups, salads and light dinners. We currently offer freshly made salads with a large variety of toppings, including grilled chicken breast, chicken and tuna salad, or cold cuts. Hot soups and chili will replace the summer soups as the cold weather approaches. Light dinners and lunches will be added as well.

Ice cream is currently offered, as well as frappes, sundaes, freezes and more.

Catering, party platters, and take-out orders are currently available. Call in advance and nearly anything is possible. Our quality, presentation, and prices are unbeatable.

We welcome new associates to our team. Part-time and full-time opportunities exist for "school moms," high school students and those seeking a career in food service.

Investor alert: All index funds are not created equal

By Amy K. Barrett
Worth Magazine

The widespread gains of the stock market over the last few years have made indexing the catchword of the mutual fund industry. Investors have asked themselves why they should take the trouble to shop around for successful, actively managed funds when it's the Standard & Poor's 500 Stock Index that climbs, seemingly unfailingly, to new highs every month. And – more importantly – why spend the time when the S&P 500 posts returns that many equity funds can't mimic?

The answer to those questions has come in the form of billions of dollars pouring into 91 funds that mirror equity indexes over the last year. It's indexing mania.

What many investors may not realize amid this general euphoria is that all index funds are not created equal. While there are dozens of funds that tie their performances to that of the S&P 500, there are also a bunch that mirror indexes gauging everything from technology stocks to trucking stocks. These more narrowly-focused index funds can be riskier investments.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

And some index funds cost more than others, with charges ranging from nothing at all to 2 percent of assets to cover expenses. It's safe to say, though, that all funds that mimic the S&P 500 index have been universally successful for the last two and a half years as the market rallied. What's more, S&P 500 index funds almost always beat the money manager who actively invests in the overall market. A mere 7 percent of equity funds that invest in the overall market (general equity funds) have done better than the S&P 500, according to Lipper Analytical – a pretty compelling reason to follow the index.

The reason that money managers have a hard time beating the S&P 500 is that stocks of blue-chip and large multinational companies tend to be well-researched. And that makes it more difficult for the managers to discover some hidden value in the company that other investors haven't realized, says John Markese, the president of the American Association of Individual Investors.

Yet the opposite is true for money managers competing with indexes of small-cap and of international stocks. They tend to reap better returns by actively researching and buying stocks in those groups than by simply following corresponding benchmark indexes.

This is partly because these two areas of the market include a bevy of stocks not followed by Wall Street analysts. That gives a good money manager the opportunity to find stocks that trade for less than they are worth – unknowns that will be tomorrow's stars. The potential for gains (and, in turn, losses) thereby increases. (The classic example of the 1980s is the little computer software company called Microsoft.).

In fact, narrowly-focused index funds have tended to not do as well as actively managed funds with similar focuses (an actively managed fund is one in which a money manager determines the stocks which are purchased, within the guidelines of the portfolio).

Consider this: As of July 31, some 55 percent of small-cap funds had outperformed the Russell 2000 Index this year. And, over that same period, an impressive 73 percent of international funds returned more than the benchmark Morgan Stanley Capital International Europe, Asia and Far East Index (EAFE).

Money managers of active funds can usually avoid obviously laggard stocks or sectors which are included in the Russell 2000 and Morgan Stanley EAFE (included no doubt to make them comprehensive gauges).

A money manager who shunned stocks of Malaysian companies this year and loaded up on shares of companies headquartered in Switzerland, for example, would have done better than the Morgan Stanley EAFE. The index, which contains stocks from 20 countries, has returned only 11 percent so far this year, with Malaysian stocks dropping 20 percent countered by Swiss stocks gaining 34 percent. An EAFE index fund would force you to stay in a group that a money manager could easily avoid.

By the same token, money managers can increase their bet on rising sectors. For example, a small-cap index fund may be without a significant holding of technology stocks, which are often the leaders of market rallies. In the second quarter of this year, technology stocks in the Russell 2000 gained 24 percent, fueling the index's 15 percent rise. An active small-cap fund could load up on technology and stay away from less spectacular sectors, beating even the Russell 2000's success with their modest holdings of technology.

On the other hand, betting on the success of a whole market sector can bring great rewards when it's hot – of course, it can leave you vulnerable when it's not. If sales of personal computers plummet, chances are active funds and indexes that are heavily weighed in technology, like the Pacific Stock Exchange's technology index, will fall in unison (note that index funds based on the S&P 500 might not suffer because the losses would be balanced out by the success of another sector). And that's the risk investors run of being less diversified in their holdings.

Index funds do, however, tend to be cheaper than funds that rely on money managers since they have no research expenses.

And keep in mind that index funds usually lag slightly behind the returns of their designated index. For one thing, costs tend to skim off some of the return. And, most funds keep a certain amount of cash. A buffer, perhaps, for the day when index funds fall out of fashion.

1997 Taxpayer Act has benefits

The tax bill recently signed into law by President Bill Clinton is being called the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 (TRA 97). It includes the most significant tax changes since the Reagan tax cuts of 1981. Nearly everyone gets some relief.

Among the more important changes, TRA 97 does the following:

- Cuts the top rate on capital gains from 28 percent to 20 percent effective May 7, 1997
- Provides for a $500,000 exclusion on the gain on home sales for married couples
- Provides significant death-tax relief, including a gradual increase in the estate and gift tax exemption from $600,000 to $1 million
- Includes a $1.3 million estate tax exclusion for family businesses and farms
- Establishes a child tax credit and provides assorted tax breaks for higher education
- Expands IRAs and creates a "Roth IRA" in which the income from qualified withdrawals may never be taxed
- Establishes more favorable rules for home office deductions

There are numerous effective dates for the new provisions-some retroactive, some current and some prospective. A more complete review of TRA 97 is available on-line at http://www.graymail.com/afai/ftw.html.

Launching of the 'Crystal Spray' delayed a year

By Kerry Herlihy
CORRESPONDENT

The launching of the "Crystal Spray" previously set for this past summer has been delayed until April 1998 due to unexpected problems with the construction of the boat and the threats of hurricane season. This is the ship to be used in the educational centennial circumnavigation reenacting Joshua Slocum's epic voyage around the world titled, "Voyage of the Spray." Although the delay puts the excitement for the students and teachers on hold, more time is now available for fundraising.

The "Voyage of the Spray" project, established through a cooperative partnership including the University of Alabama, is teacher-centered as opposed to traditional student-centered with a mission to improve education by expanding experiential learning. The premise is that teachers are the center of the educational process; administrators guide the process; parents and community facilitate and students are the product.

Teachers from all over the world will sail the replica of Slocum's vessel, Crystal Spray. The replica vessel is under construction at Winter Island in Salem. An expert team of shipwrights have been building the vessel as an in-house project and came across rot in the wood that supported the masts. The wood is currently being replaced to ensure better safety but pushes back the completion date. This voyage will start from Boston in April 1998 and end in Newport, R.I., approximately three years from departure.

> "We hope to be sailing during the winter of 1999 in the southern hemisphere, expectantly around Australia."
> — ROBERT BERGQUIST, COHASSET TEACHER.

Teams of three teachers assigned a specific three-week leg of the trip of which they physically on the ship as crew members. During the rest of the Crystal Spray's trip, the team will assist the students with the Spray's travels and findings through the integration of multimedia activities which include Internet projects, periodic electronic field trips via satellite up-links, and video and documentary programs coordinated by the University of Alabama's Center for Communication and Educational Technology. Lessons incurred from this voyage will be interdisciplinary focusing on social studies, math, language arts and science.

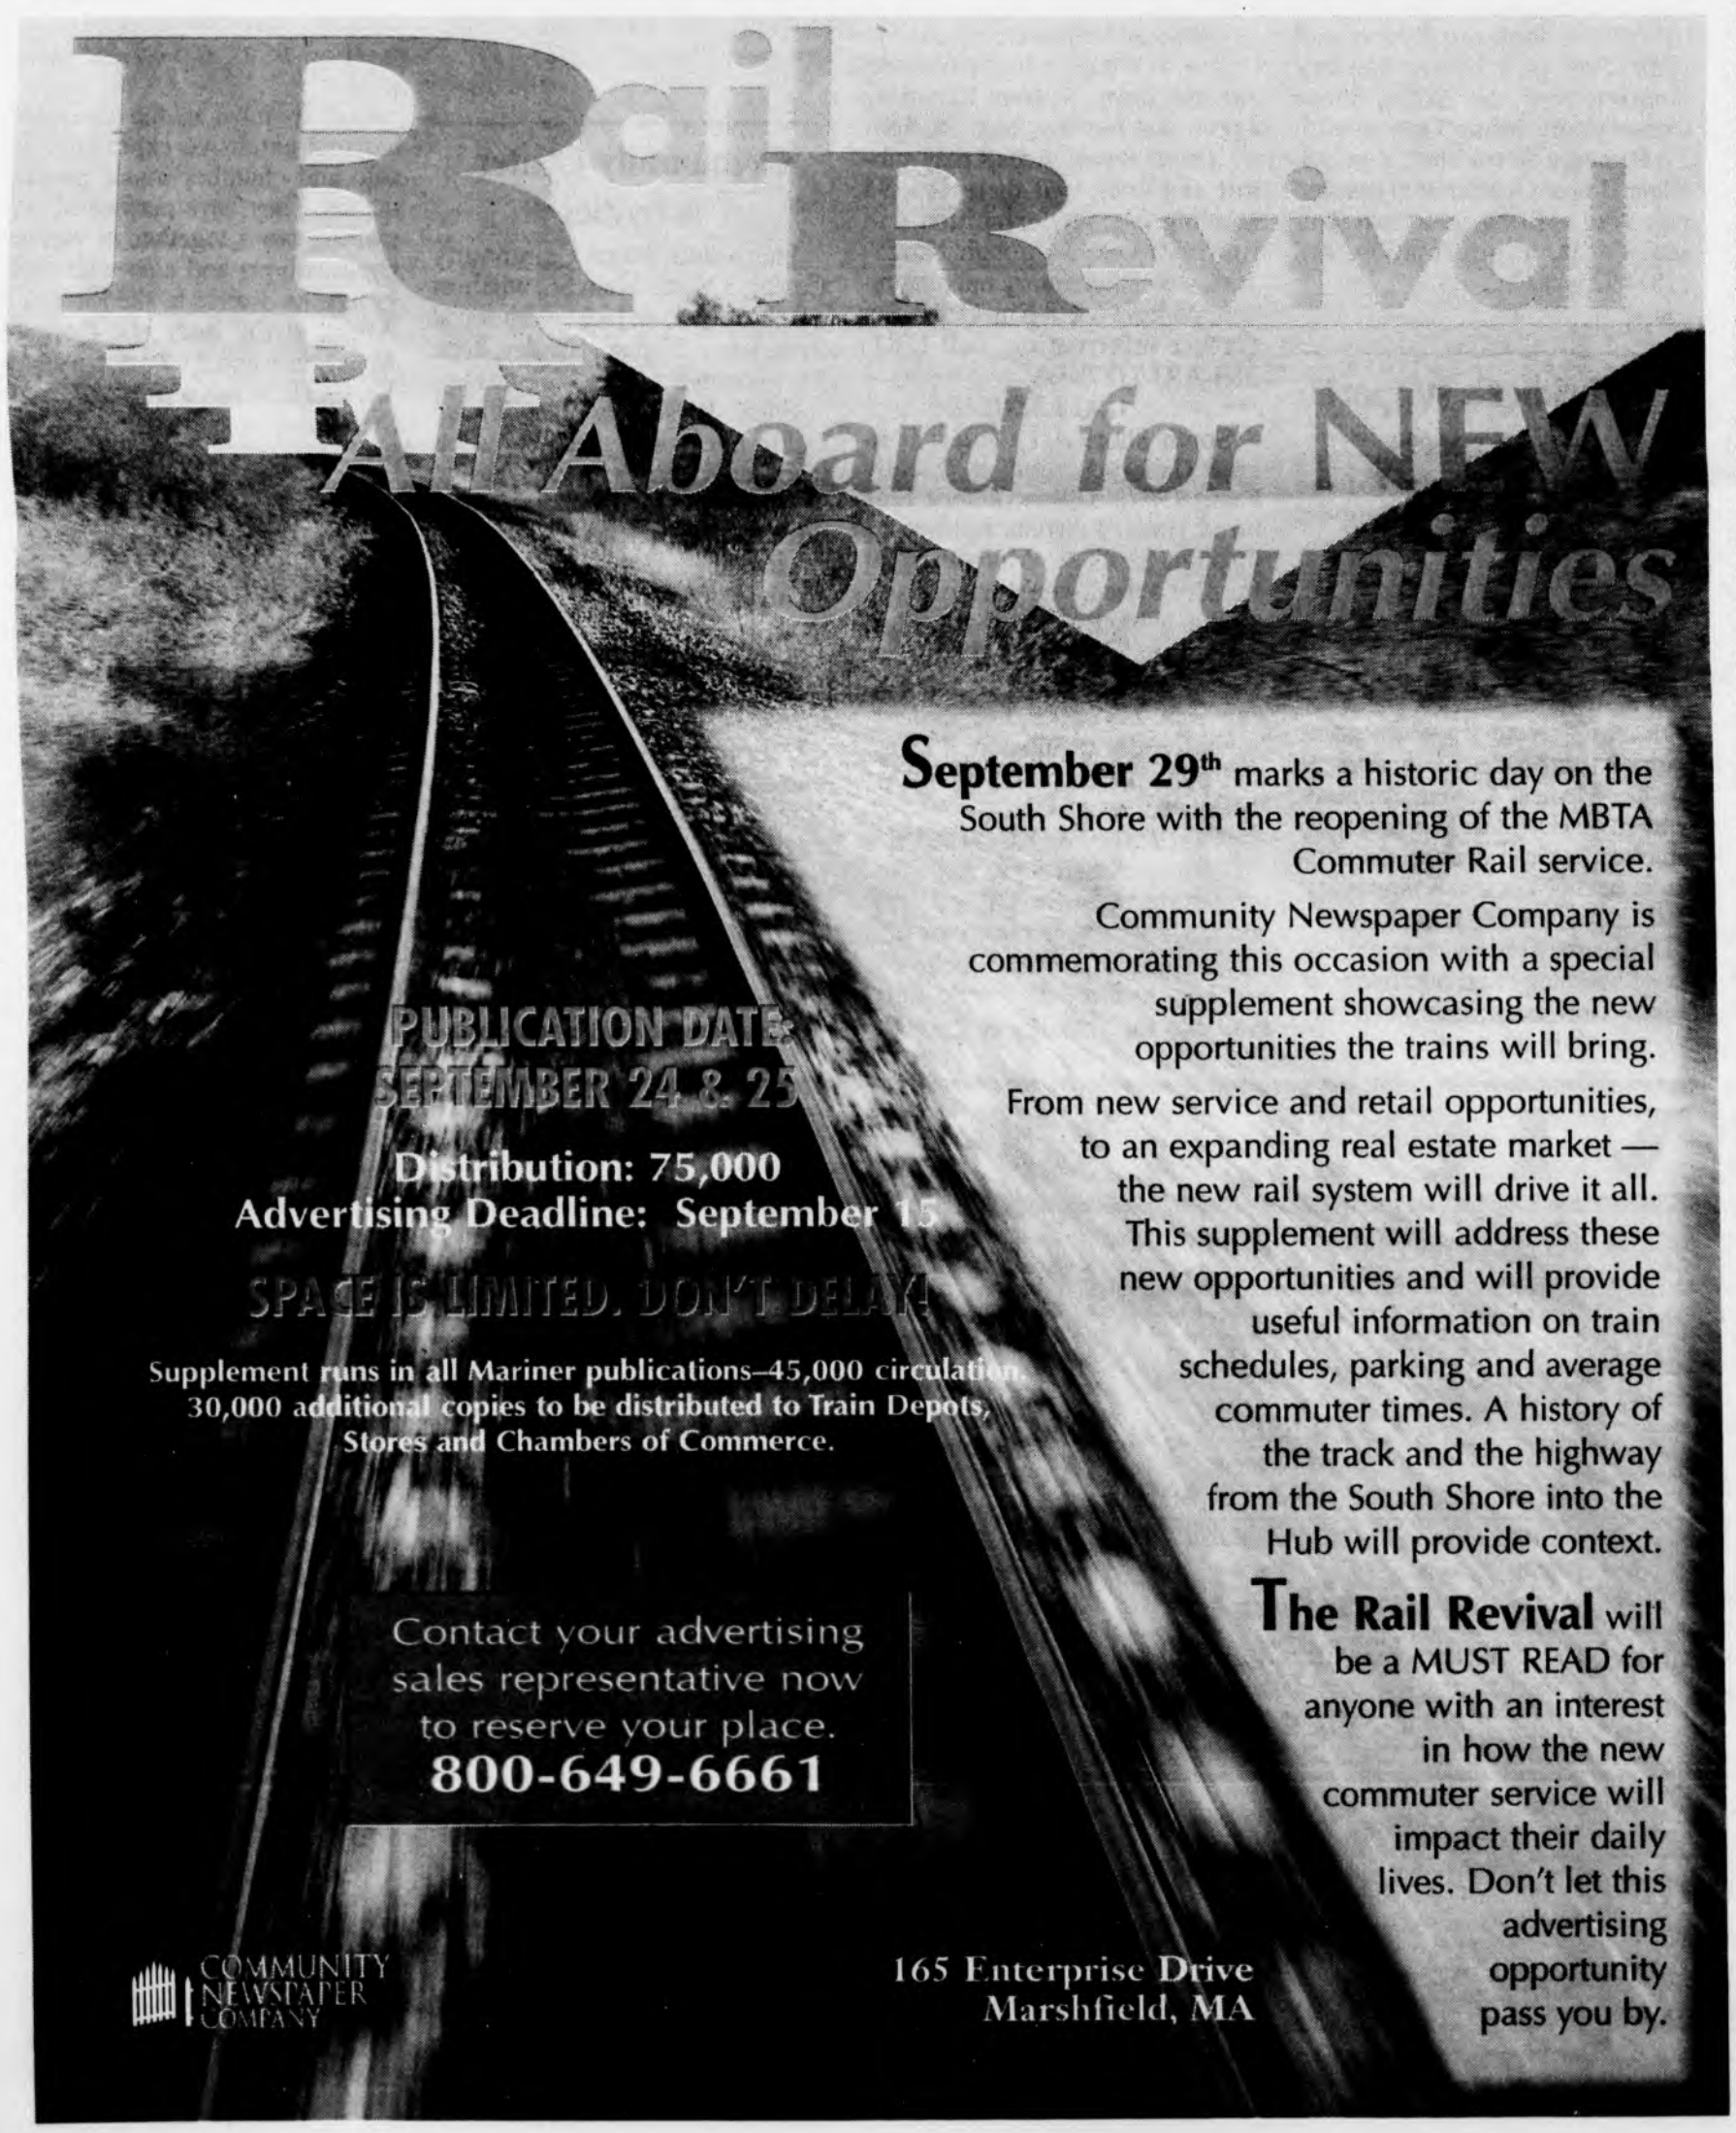
The Cohasset team will include Robert Bergquist from the Deer Hill School, Ken Cisnaros from the Osgood School, and David Magnussen from the high school. These teachers will have a state-of-the-art Tiger computer in their classrooms for the duration of the trip. The Tiger computers decode digital messages sent from the Spray. This form of communication will allow the teachers to communicate with their classes while they themselves are on the voyage.

The new spring departure date puts the ship out of any risk with hurricanes as the previous summer departure date might have experienced and allots more time to raise necessary funding. Ocean Spray recently donated $2,000 to support the project. The Cohasset Education Foundation donated $5,000.

"The Board was sold by the fact that the voyage will be applicable to all grades in each school. We were also happy to learn that the project covers a two-and-a-half year time span and is not just a three-week investment," said Mike Hurley, president of the Cohasset Education Foundation.

With $8,000 remaining to meet the $15,000 goal, plans for community fundraising events are in the works.

"As soon as we have the money, we can secure our spot on the voyage. Therefore, we are searching all options for funding," said Bergquist, teacher at Deer Hill.



''When our spot is secured we will be assured what leg we will be sailing on and when that will take place. We hope to be sailing during the winter of 1999 in the southern hemisphere, expectantly around Australia. I have been involved with this project for more than two years. so hopefully I will have some pull on which leg we are assigned," Bergquist said.

Bergquist hopes students will participate in the fundraising.

"We would like to involve the students with raising the money to create ownership of the project and to introduce the reality of what a project like this costs," Bergquist said. Specific plans for fund-raisers have yet to be made public.

Land mines link local man to Princess Diana

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Armed only with a backpack and and Arabic and Hebrew dictionary, then 20-year-old Jerry White set out to explore Israel on a hiking trip.

The Cohasset High grad and Brown University student had no idea that he and his two friends had entered a landmine field. They camped overnight and the next day, White stepped on a mine which cost him part of his right leg.

That was 1984 and at the time, White could never have imagined that his personal tragedy would someday link him with a beautiful princess.

About two years ago, White co-founded with Ken Rutherford, another amputee, the Landmine Survivors Network (LSN). LSN, which is based in Washington where White now lives with his wife and four children, is an association of mine victims worldwide, whose mission in to ban the production, stockpiling, use and export of anti-personnel mines.

Britian's Princess Diana, who made a trip to Angola last January to draw attention to the scourge of land mines, met White and Rutherford at a land-mine conference in London in June where she was the keynote speaker.

The princess subsequently chose LSN to host her three-day visit to Bosnia in August where she went house-to-house visiting landmine survivors and their families.

According to White's mother, Mimi White of Sheldon Road, her son and Rutherford met with Diana at Kensington Palace last month where she asked them to make the arrangements.

(Jerry White, who is currently in Oslo, Norway at an international conference to negotiate a global ban on landmines, was unavailable to be interviewed for this story).

In a commentary in the Sept. 3 Christian Science Monitor, White said:

"Travelling with Diana on this remarkable trip, I repeatedly witnessed the

Taxpayer groups plan powwow

Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers, a grassroots tax watchdog group formed about 18 months ago, plans to reach out to its counterparts to the north and south.

The group, which has about 60 members, has invited Friends of Hingham Taxpayers and Scituate Citizens for Limited Taxation to a meeting from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m., Sept. 25 at the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island in Cohasset.

"We thought it would be nice to get together with the other two towns and discuss some of the problems we've been having and think of creative ways for our

Founder vows to keep lobster lab afloat

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Lobster Lab may not be sunk yet.

Local biologist, Kevin Ulmer, who proposed the project and would serve as the lab's volunteer director, hasn't given up the ship.

He was unable to attend Monday's selectmen's meeting where Murray Campbell, president of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, told selectmen the Lightkeepers were going to pack it in.

The Lightkeepers, which raised money and organized the labor to refurbish the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island, planned to raise upwards of $800,000 to do the renovation work for the Hagerty house and establish a marine research facility there. The Lightkeepers sought to lease the Hagerty house from the town for 10 years at $1 a year.

Ulmer said he wasn't surprised by the Lightkeepers' decision and planned to move ahead with efforts for the lab at the Hagerty house on his own.

"I fully intend to press on with the lab project under a new, to-be-incorporated, non-profit entity, specifically organized for that purpose," he said.

Ulmer said he will go before selectmen Sept. 15 to discuss his proposal. It's not clear if the proposal will have to go back before town meeting, which approved the lobster lab use for the Hagerty house last spring. A special town meeting is slated for Oct. 27.

In a bitter prepared statement Monday, Campbell laid blame

Greenbush foes steamed at Cellucci rail stance

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

The fact that acting Gov. Paul Cellucci has officially committed himself to the restoration of the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad has come as a shock to some South Shore residents.

Cohasset resident Peter Robb of the Coastal Coalition, a grassroots organization which is seeking alternatives to rail restoration, received the news in an Aug. 28 letter from MBTA General Manager Robert H. Prince Jr.

Speaking on behalf of Cellucci, at his request, Prince stated that the MBTA, the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction and the Cellucci administration "remain committed to this project."

"This is big news," said Nancy

COHASSET'S WEEK

Volunteers sought for traffic committee

Selectmen are seeking three citizens at large to serve on the new traffic study committee. The committee's charge is to make recommendations to selectmen on issues involving speed limits, stop signs, lights, traffic counts, crosswalk locations, traffic flow in congested areas and so on. The committee will consult with the department of public works, and police and fire departments for advice and recommendations. Also on the committee will be the police chief or his designee and a member of the board of selectmen or their designee, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. Interested citizens should contact Haddad at 383-9900 or stop by the selectmen's office.

Resurfacing projects to begin

Weather permitting, the department of public works have scheduled the following projects:

Sept. 15-16, excavation and resurfacing of the driveway at the Paul Pratt Library will be conducted.

Sept. 18, resurfacing Cedar Street, Lamberts Lane, Mill Lane and Forest Avenue will begin.

Residents should expect some delays and use other routes when possible. Library users can park in designated parking spots on South Main Street and the town parking areas.

Clamming fee issue on hold

A clamming fee dispute between Scituate and Cohasset has been temporarily put on hold but is not a dead issue, said Scituate Selectmen Chairman Joseph Norton.

"The board just wasn't ready to deal with it," he said of the issue, which was table two weeks ago.

Several questions still remain over whether Cohasset clammers should be charged out-of-town permit fees to dig for clams at flats located in their own town. The town of Scituate legally controls the flats at Cohasset's Bassings Beach and currently charges Cohasset residents $50 annually to clam while Scituate clammers pay $20.

Norton said the board is worried about the precedent that might be set for sharing flats with other towns, particular if the North River clam flats open. Questions about how much to charge and whether to limit the number of Cohasset permits for Bassings Beach also need to be addressed, he said.

"It's certainly nothing that can't be worked out," Norton said.

Officials in Cohasset hope to reach an accord that will settle a dispute that first began when the flats reopened in 1994.

"I'm still working on it. As far as I'm concerned it is not dead yet," said Cohasset Selectman Merle Brown.

Evolution of meetinghouses is local treasure

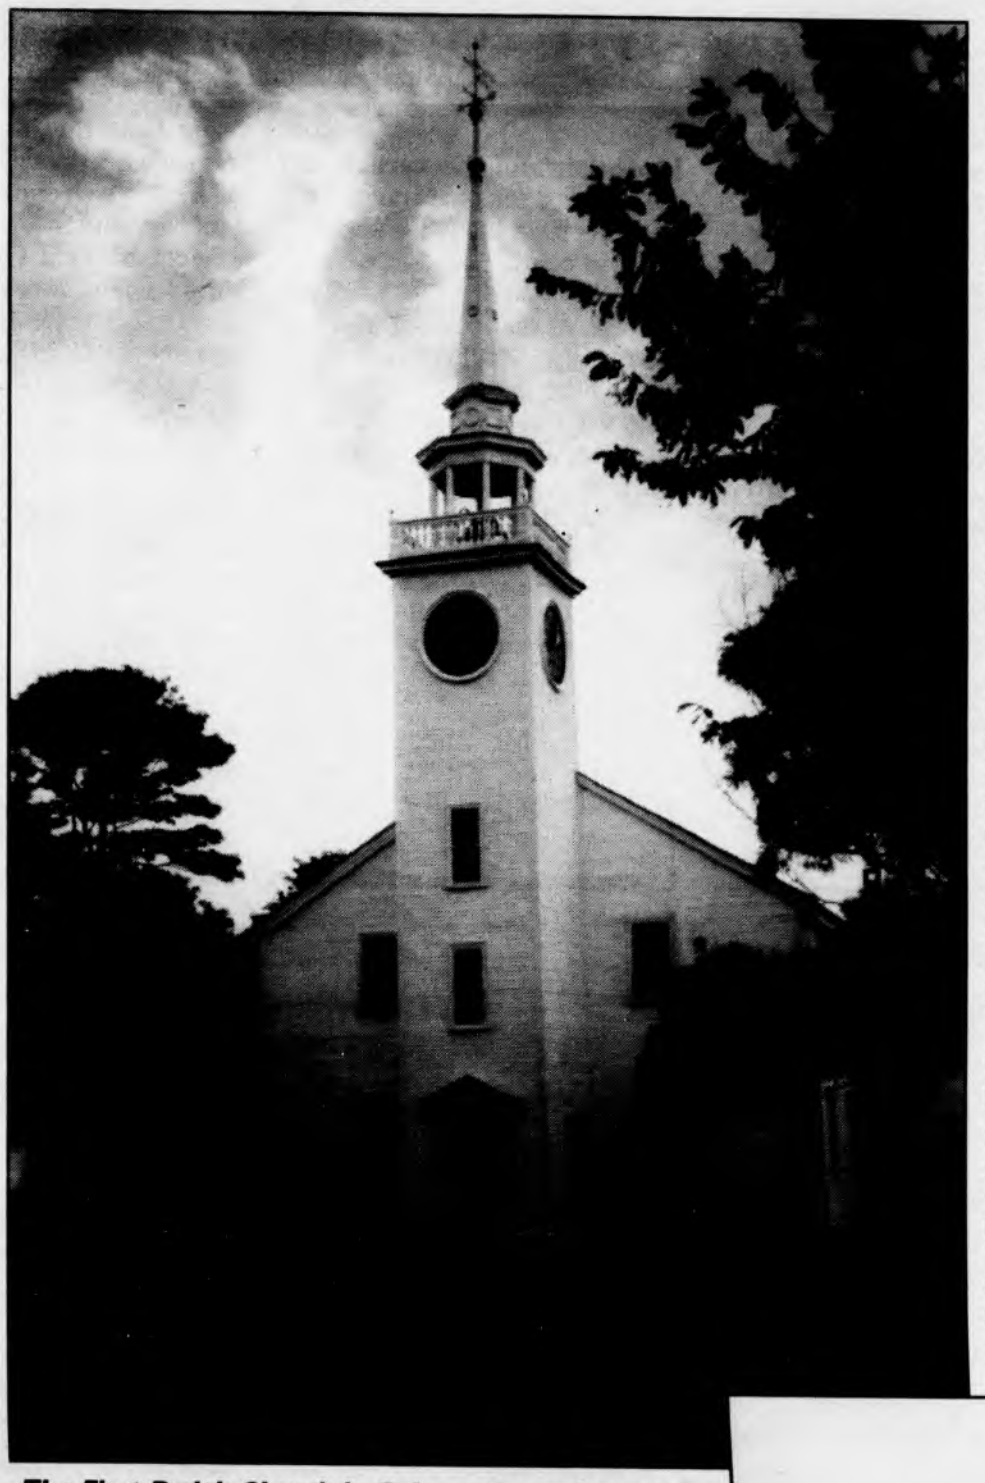
By Jeff Spencer
CORRESPONDENT

For anyone interested in the architectural history of the New England Meetinghouse, the South Shore affords an unique opportunity to witness the evolution of the meeting house in the structures of three local churches.

Architectural historians today classify three types of meetinghouse that, one after the other, dominated the New England landscape. Over the course of two centuries, from 1630 to 1830, the New England meetinghouse evolved from the stodgy puritan meeting hall to the now-familiar steepled churches that have come to symbolize New England.

Before there were churches, there were meetinghouses. When the early English settlers, mostly Puritans, came to Massachusetts in the 1630's, they built meetinghouses, simple structures that reflected the Puritans' desire to "purify" the Anglican faith of extraneous beliefs and practices. The meetinghouse was a place where both secular and religious meetings were held, not a "house of God," and they were void of ornamentation.

The earliest meetinghouses were, of necessity, crudely built and evidenced no common architectural style, but by 1650, a distinct new style of meetinghouse appeared in and around Boston, and soon spread throughout New England. Elizabethan in style, these buildings were square or nearly so, with hip roofs and turrets.



In 1679, the town of Hingham decided to build a new meetinghouse to replace the log structure built in 1635. Envoys were sent out to view meetinghouses in other communities, and Hingham's new meetinghouse was built to conform to the square, hip-roof style. When completed in 1681, it became the second largest meeting house in New England.

Since 1681, the Old Ship Meetinghouse has undergone changes both inside and out. Additions were made in 1731 and 1755, and the interior grew increasingly ornate until the restoration of 1930.

Architect Edgar T.P. Walker of Hingham oversaw the restoration. The ground floor was restored to its 18th century appearance, while the ceiling was removed to reveal its renown Gothic framework of 1681.

The Old Ship Church is the now only remaining example of this type of meetinghouse, and is a registered national historic landmark.

By 1700, a new style of meetinghouse had appeared. Rectangular rather than square, these pitched-roof structures featured an attached square tower and a two-story side entrance. Throughout New England there was little variation from this form, which remained dominant during the entire 18th century. These buildings, such as the Old South Meeting House in Boston, are commonly associated with the Revolutionary War period. Just five miles drive from the Old Ship Church, the First Parish Church on Cohasset Common perfectly illustrates this style. Built as a simple pitched-roof building in 1747, it acquired its entrance porch in 1768 and its square tower in 1799. Today it remains one of the few meeting houses of its kind to have survived.

Back in Hingham, a third church represents the next step in meetinghouse evolution. The New North Church, just off the square in Hingham, was built in 1806, when the Federalist faction of the Old Ship Church (then called the North Church) bolted to form their own congregation. This church was built on a model inspired by Boston Architect Charles Bulfinch.

Bulfinch designed several churches at the close of the 18th century. By that time, meetinghouses had begun to drop their secular functions, and Bulfinch's churches took on a design recognized as characteristic of strictly religious buildings. In this form, the entrance is on one short side of the rectangular, pitched-roof building. Above the entrance are the facade and steeple, embellished with classical details. The New England meeting house had become a church.

Bulfinch's concepts spread rapidly throughout New England due to Asher Benjamin's publication of "The Country Builder's Assistant," in 1797, which featured the Bulfinch-inspired design for a church. Benjamin's illustrations became the starting point for New England carpenter-builders, who used their own creativity to produce countless variations on this theme, which remained pre-eminent until the Greek revival of the 1830's.

'The meetinghouse was a place where both secular and religious meetings were held.'

Cohasset Heights Landfill seeks vertical expansion

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) could run out of space for new fill by the end of next year unless owner Paul Barry can expand the facility. The question now facing Barry is: can he expand vertically, since the board of health rejected his request to expand horizontally?

CHL filed a notice of project change Aug. 13 with the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs asking for permission to raise the maximum allowable height of the currently usable portion of the landfill by 15-20 feet.

The current maximum allowable height of the landfill is 190 feet, and CHL's request, if approved, would increase the maximum height to either 205 or 210 feet.

The usual opponents — Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), the board of health, and the water resources protection committee (WRPC) — have already protested CHL's latest expansion plan.

Barry said he must expand either vertically or horizontally at some point to keep the landfill open.

"I don't know how long I'll be able to keep filling under current conditions because it depends on how much fill comes in," Barry said.

Last spring, the health board rejected CHL's request to expand "Area V" of the landfill from 22 acres to 27.5 acres.

Barry has appealed that decision to Norfolk County Superior Court in Dedham. A hearing is scheduled for Sept. 23.

The board of health has no jurisdiction over a vertical expansion at CHL.

Barry's lawyer, Anton Moehrke, said the vertical expansion is a sensible way to continue business while the appeal is heard in court.

"This is a way to take full advantage of the existing space at the facility," Moehrke said.

Moehrke pointed out that the state may favor expanding existing landfills in some situations rather than allowing for the construction of new facilities.

"This is just my opinion, but as proposals go, from opening a new site on virgin soil to extending an existing site by one day, this is a rather modest proposal," Moehrke said.

But John McNabb, a member of SAFE and WRPC, believes the latest expansion plan is a cover for a more ambitious scheme.

"They're just trying to buy more time and to make more money while they fight the board of health's decision in court," McNabb said.

McNabb said CHL wants to hang on until 2001 when the state plans to lift a moratorium on new permits for landfills that handle general refuse.

Currently, CHL accepts only construction and demolition materials.

"The state is saying that it will need more space for general refuse beginning in 2001," McNabb said. "If they can stay alive until 2001, they can try to get permitted for general refuse."

In a letter to the EOEA, A. Raymond Quinn of SITEC Environmental in New Bedford, Barry's consultant, said the vertical expansion is consistent with state standards and will benefit the whole commonwealth by providing a good location for waste disposal.

Quinn also states that an environmental impact report (EIR) will not be necessary because the entire active landfill was studied in an EIR for "Area V" that was approved in 1995.

Quinn said raising the maximum allowable height by 20 feet would add about 5 percent more material to the existing area in use.

But McNabb said his interpretation of state regulations convinces him that the vertical expansion will require at least one new permit from the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP).

McNabb said the health board did a survey of the landfill that places its current height at about 175-feet, 15-feet short of the maximum height allowance of 190- feet.

At that height, McNabb said information from Quinn indicates that increasing the height by 15-20 feet will extend the life of the landfill by five percent, or one year.

The landfill has an expected life span of 20 years. It opened in 1978 and is expected to be completely filled in 1998.

"Five percent of 20 years is one year," McNabb said. "Using CHL's own information, 15-20 feet is equivalent to about one year of filling."

McNabb disagreed with almost every aspect of Quinn's letter. He said that either an EIR or some equivalent review should be performed to examine several aspects of the vertical expansion request.

The board of health met with its environmental consultant — Camp, Dresser and McGee (CDM) — Tuesday night to discuss the impact of a vertical expansion.

CDM informed the health board that CHL should study what the weight of an additional 15-20 feet of fill will do to the active area's liner.

McNabb pointed out that the landfill has an expected capacity of 1 million tons of fill. Adding five percent more material would add another 50,000 tons of weight to the landfill.

"CDM is concerned that the extra fill could rupture the liner, essentially leaving the town with an unlined landfill," McNabb said.

McNabb said the extra fill will also add more material that could end up as storm water runoff into nearby wetlands.

He said CHL has already been cited several times by the conservation commission and the DEP for wetlands violations.

McNabb said visual impacts must also be considered because it is possible that increasing the height of the landfill would make it visible from Route 3A and from Turkey Hill.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis is also making a determination on whether increasing the height of the landfill requires a height variance from the zoning board of appeals.

The height of all buildings is regulated within the town's bylaws

McNabb believes the landfill can be considered a building be-

MEXICO'S CANCUN AND COZUMEL

Two sides to paradise – that's one way to describe the neighboring Mexican resorts of Cancun and Cozumel. Cancun, in southeastern Mexico, on an island off the coast of the Yucatan Peninsula, offers all the sizzle of a world-class sun spot. The name Cancun means "pot of gold," which fits the lush hotels, glittering nightlife, and, of course, the sparkling blue-green water and dazzling white sandy beaches. With everything from championship golf courses to jet skis for hire, Cancun is the place to go if your idea of a vacation is fun in the sun. Cozumel, on the other hand, is a quick 40 miles south of Cancun, and here, the pace of paradise is slower, but just as opulent in its own laid-back way. An island easily accessible by plane or ferry, Cozumel has less development than Cancun. Its Palancar Reef is worth the trip by itself, and scuba divers and snorkelers come from around the world.

Landfill seeks vertical expansion cause of the way the bylaw is worded. He said the landfill is capped in several areas to protect the material underneath.

"Going up is not a change in use, but the landfill can be considered a building because it meets the definition in the bylaw of a building as a structure that has a roof or other covering designed to protect people or material," McNabb said.

State Sen. Robert A. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, plan to meet with SAFE on Sunday, Sept. 14 in the Unitarian Parish House, 23 N. Main St., at 7:30 p.m. to discuss CHL's latest plan.

If Barry cannot get permission to expand the landfill either vertically or horizontally, he will be faced with a limited amount of time to keep CHL open.

"If I can't expand, I'll have to cap the landfill," Barry said.

Barry hasn't yet looked that far into the future. He is still awaiting he outcome of the court appeal, and a decision on whether he can expand vertically.

But if all efforts to expand fail, Barry will have to close CHL. He said he has no plans to open another landfill in another community.

"If I have to cap the landfill, I'll have to think about what I'm going to do next," Barry said.

The deadline to submit written comments on CHL's request must be delivered by Monday, Sept. 15 at 5 p.m. to Trudy Coxe, Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, 100 Cambridge St., 20th Floor, Boston, MA 02202.

Ambulance billing

The fire department billed for 27 ambulance transports last month for a total of $9,620.46. The department collected $7,971.09 in ambulance bill payments during August.

Computer software for cemetery okayed

Selectmen unanimously approved spending $2,500 for computer software designed to keep a record of cemetery lots in town. As it stands now, most records are kept on maps or in Peter Laugelle's memory, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. Laugelle is the cemetery superintendent. The money for the software will come from cemetery revenues, Haddad said. He said changes to the town's cemetery regulations are being developed by a study committee which will have a proposal by next week.

Founder Kevin Ulmer vows to keep lobster lab afloat for the Lightkeepers' change of heart at the selectmen's feet.

"We didn't ask for the crown jewels, only for the use of a decrepit surplus building on a nondescript lot scantily used for parking on summer weekends," he said. "Of course we anticipated that the usual nay-sayers would be in the underbrush, and expected reasonable questioning and evaluation, not the barrage of allegations and objections phrased as questions that demonstrate lack of comprehension, or worse."

Selectmen have gone back and forth with the Lightkeepers for months demanding answers to more than 75 written, detailed questions about everything from fund-raising plans to what background and education would be required for any future staff hired at the lab.

The Lightkeepers have not provided the detail selectmen would like and have accused selectmen of trying to kill the project.

Last week, selectmen and the Lightkeepers seemed to reach an accord on how to proceed but the meeting was followed with a list of 10 more multi-part questions.

Campbell said the Lightkeepers are fed up.

"We were more and more concerned about putting our time and effort into this with the hostile atmosphere," he said.

Selectmen said they would hold off making a decision about what to do with the Hagerty house for a couple of weeks. The board could issue a request for proposal to raze the building.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she was surprised by the Lightkeepers decision and defended the board's relentless pursuit of specifics.

McMorris said after last week's meeting, she thought there was support from the Lightkeepers to provide that level of detail.

Murray said the Lightkeepers were "still smarting" from the first list of questions and accused Selectman Michael Sullivan of conducting a telephone campaign to "run down our efforts."

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the board had a responsibility to pursue questions and made the phone calls to express his concerns over the issue.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said she would vigorously oppose any attempt to move the building across the street, a proposal that was once presented by Paul Trendowicz, the owner of Cohasset Marina on Parker Avenue.

"I want this to sit a couple of weeks to hear what the townspeople have to say," she said.

Michael Sullivan said it would be in everyone's best interest to "knock the building down and be done with it."

Nan Roth said she wanted to hear what Ulmer has to say.

Selectmen to see where Hagerty park plans stand

Selectmen will ask the Hagerty committee to provide them with an update on plans for the 2.2-acre harbor-front parcel at their Sept. 15 meeting.

The committee, which has consisted of as many as 15 citizens, is charged with coming up with a recreational plan for the site the town purchased for $475,000 more than four years ago.

It is not clear where the plan now stands. After the town bought the property, the Hagerty Committee held an open house in the Hagerty house where schematics of a variety of recreational plans were displayed.

Today, the property remains undeveloped. The factory buildings which used to contain Cohasset Colonials manufacturing have been razed. The cutting room used for town storage is being torn down and removed this week.

The antique boat house on the site is leased to the nonprofit Cohasset Maritime Institute for $1 a year for a rowing center.

The Hagerty house — once containing the showroom and offices for Cohasset Colonials — has fallen into disrepair. Selectmen have considered leasing, selling, moving and razing the building.

The lobster lab proposal for the building, approved at the annual town meeting, may now be in jeopardy (see related story).

Purchasing recycled products policy

Selectmen voted unanimously Sept. 2 to adopt a policy on purchasing recycled products. The town must have a policy that shows it is committed to purchasing of recycled products in order to qualify for some recycling grants.

Inter-municipal sewer agreement

Cohasset has signed a sewer agreement with Hingham that provides the town with 55 percent of the capacity of the Hingham pump station at West Corner and 20 percent of the capacity of the Hingham gravity mains which runs from Lamberts Lane to West Corner on Hull Street. The agreement is part of the tri-town sewer project involving hooking North Cohasset and the Wier River area of Hingham up to the Hull sewer treatment plant.

Taxpayer groups plan powwow towns to maintain a diverse tax base," said Lee Jenkins, vice president of the Cohasset taxpayers.

Jenkins said it is imperative that towns stay affordable for the elderly and others who cannot afford high taxes.

"I feel a diverse community is important," she said.

The Cohasset group organized following a successful $9.4 million override to pay to build a new school. Debate over the new school bitterly divided the town. CCT tried to rescind approval for the override by calling a special town meeting which was held at the Music Circus in August 1996. The attempt failed but the group has continued to monitor town government and strongly supported the town's switch to a town manager form of government earlier this year.

Norman MacConnell, head of the recently organized Friends of Hingham Taxpayers (FHT), said he welcomed the invitation. He said his group has a mailing list that exceeds 1,000.

The Friends formed this summer following a $39 million override to renovate and expand two Hingham schools. Saying the plan was too ambitious and too expensive, FHT collected signatures to call a special town meeting in July in an attempt to rescind approval for that project. Although FHT failed to win the necessary votes, the group vowed to stay active.

Norman Paley, head of the Scituate group, which started in the early 1990s and whose active membership fluctuates between 50 and 100 citizens, said taxpayer organizations send a healthy signal.

"Taxes are not their money but our money," Paley said about government.

Paley's group rallied earlier this year to help defeat at town meeting a $23 million plan to renovate and expand the high school.

"We try to structure our group like the Minutemen," Paley said. "When there is an intense need we get together to work on a project .

"Then we put down the sword and go back to the plow."

CCT president F. Roy Fitzsimmons said the joint gathering will examine ways of saving money by possibly regionalizing services such as animal control and looking at joint purchasing.

"There must be some way to save the taxpayers some money," he said.

Reservations are required for the meeting because seating is limited to 80. Call Jenkins at 383-0024 or Florence Jerome at 383-2139 for reservations and directions if needed.

Members from local taxpayer groups will also be featured on "On the Mark with Ilana Marks" at 8 p.m. Sept. 17 on cable channel 3.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark at 383-9900 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays.

HOLE IN ONE

"FORE" — Where is it? — In the cup! That's what happened to Janet Malloy Thursday, Aug. 7, at Cohasset Golf Club's 15th hole (135 yards). Janet was playing in a WSSGL team match against Halifax Country Club (the rest of the foursome was Sarah Hanlon, Ann McGrath, and Louise Mariani). Janet also won the Grandmothers Tournament in July! Congratulations, you sure put Cohasset on the map this summer!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

We extend belated birthday wishes to Mark William Rattenbury — he turned a BIG 2 years old Aug. 18, and we just know his day was a happy one!

The next belated birthday greeting goes to Mary Snow, her big day was Aug. 29. We will tell you that it was a "decade birthday" between 30 and 50! Hope your day was a happy one!

Finally, Sept. 3, Lee Stone celebrated his 34th birthday — watch for the young man to be cavorting with his new puppy any day now!

OFF TO BATES COLLEGE

Burke Z. Davis is attending Bates College this fall. Burke is the son of Roy and Elaine Davis, and a CHS grad. He was a member of the basketball and lacrosse teams, was a disc jockey for school radio, and was active in student television. Cohasset High's loss is surely Bates' gain!

Herb Towle of the Cohasset Sailing Club has an ideal seat to watch the Jack Hubbard Memorial Minot Round About. For story and more photos, see sports pages 17-19.

PANCAKE BREAKFAST

Had a chat with Margaret Cotter the other day, the Soccer Boosters are hard at work planning their annual pancake breakfast. It will be held Sunday, Sept. 21, from 8 a.m. to noon at the Deer Hill School. These pancakes are famous town-wide, they are YUMMY! When a soccer player comes to your door, be sure to buy tickets for the whole family, they will love you for it! As will all of the soccer players; the proceeds go directly to what the players need to make their teams happy, healthy and very successful! If you cannot make the breakfast, why not buy the tickets to give to a friend? Or, make a donation; they will be grateful!

A COHASSET LEGEND

Sunday, Sept. 7, is a magical day for one Cohasset legend — "Babe" Trott will be 95 on that day! Send her best wishes, send tons of love, and send tons of hugs to her, she deserves it all!

CONGO CAPERS

Jo Jo Fichtner is at it again — she is going to direct and choreograph "Congo Capers '98," and is already hard at work! Auditions (for members of the Second Congregational Church only) will be held Nov. 10. Sign-up sheets will be in Bates Hall starting Oct. 15; the show will be at CHS May 8 and 9. JoJo promises lots of singing and dancing from recent Broadway shows; there will be something for everyone! Bob Leavitt will be directing the music, Kim Maynard, stage manager, Clark Young will be in charge of lighting and sound, and Grace Wilkins and Roberta Raffa will be doing costumes. The show is going to be dedicated to Herm Fichtner, you know it will be an awesome one! Any members of the church can call there for more information — we promise to keep you informed too!

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY

Two lovely couples celebrate anniversaries this month, the Pratts and the Wheelwrights. Ruth and Carleton's big day was Sept. 4 (57 years), and Muriel and Frank's 58th wedding anniversary will be Sept. 28. We congratulate you, and wish you many more happy, healthy years together!

ATTENDED THEATER CAMP

Twelve-year-old Calla Staszko of Cohasset has followed in the footsteps of such noted young actors as Jennifer Jason Leigh, Robert Downey Jr., Natalie Portman, Mary Stuart Masterson, Jon Cryer and Helen Slater by attending Stagedoor Manor this summer, a unique theater camp in the Catskills. In each of the summer's three sessions the youngsters spent three weeks rehearsing 11 shows which were then performed for the public. Calla appeared in "The Dining Room." All of the youngsters at the camp will be watched by agents and managers who every year visit the camp to see if they can spot the stars of tomorrow. Maybe as a result of Calla's stay at Stagedoor, Calla will one day join the illustrious list of Stagedoor alumni who have made it in show business!

QUITE AN EVENT!

Edwin Ricketts celebrated his 81st birthday recently and it was a great one! His daughter Beverly came up from Florida for the event, and more family members came from California! Quite an event indeed!

DEAN'S LIST AT BOWDOIN

Final news for this week comes from Bowdoin College — Joanna R. Horn (Class of '98), William T. Horn (Class of '00) and Christopher M. Kondrat (Class of '98) all made the dean's list for the spring semester — we're proud of all of you and your continued efforts to be the best!

The Lobster Lab deserves a chance

You have to wonder why the selectmen didn't ask for the age, sex, race, marital status and income of anyone who might ever rent the apartments in the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island before the lease for that building was ever written.

After all, the building is owned by the town and who knows what might have happened to it after it was virtually given away for $1 a year to an untried, untested group with huge ambitions.

We recall the group's founder Joseph McElroy coming before the board with updates and big dreams for money. The task of transforming a dilapidated old building into a show place was so daunting that it can only be likened to someone trying to row up stream without an oar.

Wouldn't it have been far better for everyone just to let the building die?

Apparently not. The Lightkeepers accomplished the practically impossible. Today, the town has a superb facility that is the pride of Cohasset even if the Ed Young parking lot at the site fills up at functions. Before the Lightkeepers Residence was refurbished the lot was mostly empty and attracted vandals who left shards of glass behind.

Why the majority of selectmen continually dog the Lightkeepers about the lobster lab proposal is baffling.

The Lightkeepers are tried and true. Maybe raising $1 million to refurbish the Hagerty House and start a lobster lab is beyond the realm of possibility. It's about double what they raised for the Lightkeepers Residence project. Yet, the group already had $100,000 pledged without even a lease in hand.

Should the selectmen ask some hard questions? Of course.

But the extent of the questioning borders on the absurd. Here's a sample from the latest barrage:

"What types of programs will be offered to students age 12-14? How many times a week will they be at the lab? Will they dissect lobsters; learn the biological systems of lobsters; research the basic life cycle; apply the content of what they learn to the academic requirements at the Jr./Sr. high school?" The question goes on to ask for detailed information about the programs for students ages 14-16, 16-20 and adults.

Granted, this is a much bigger project but these type of questions were never asked the Cohasset Maritime Institute, which leases the antique boat house on the Hagerty Property, or Cohasset Youth Resources which leases the Independence Building for a teen center.

If selectmen have another agenda regarding the Lightkeepers then they ought to come clean and let us know.

But what is apparent is that they may have blown an opportunity to save an old building at no cost to the town and allow it to be to turned into something that could be of real benefit.

They seem to have forgotten that town meeting gave the proposal its stamp of approval. What a shame they couldn't have approached the lobster lab with a "can do" attitude.

School committee sets goals for year

To the Editor:

The Cohasset School Committee is pleased to announce our 1997-'98 school system goals. These goals, which were adopted at our meeting of Aug. 28, are a "road map" of what we hope to accomplish this year. Administrators and teachers will use this blueprint to guide the development of their school-based and individual goals and objectives for the new academic year.

A comprehensive list of our 1997-'98 goals is available from Superintendent Hart or from any member of the school committee. Some highlights from this year's goal statement are listed below.

Strategic Planning. To implement an annual strategic planning process which evaluates the progress we are making on the objectives listed in the five-year Strategic Plan adopted in 1996, modifies those objectives where warranted, and includes a long-range financial planning component.

School Committee Operations. To perform an informal bench marking study of Cohasset School Committee operations against peer school committees in order to evaluate ourselves and develop potential new ideas and procedures.

Curriculum. To evaluate, develop and refine curriculum and instructional techniques which are consistent with Commonwealth of Massachusetts standards and current research and which demand excellence from each student, teacher and administrator.

Technology. To finalize a five-year technology plan and present it to the Town.

School Facilities. To oversee construction of the new elementary school and to conduct a comprehensive facilities audit of the Deer Hill and Middle-Senior High Schools.

Community Awareness. To evaluate the effectiveness of our communications plan with a view toward continuous improvement of our efforts to provide and solicit information.

The school committee has set a very ambitious agenda this year for ourselves and for all members of the school community. We will update townspeople periodically as to the progress we are making in achieving this agenda. Meanwhile, we hope you will let us know if you have any questions about these goals or our plans for the year.

Ralph Kidder for the school committee

Stop CHL landfill expansion

To the Editor:

Cohasset Heights landfill (CHL) is now proposing a vertical expansion of their existing landfill, to increase the height of Area IV-A by 15 to 20 feet with an estimated 50,000 tons or more of additional construction and demolition waste. They have taken the first step in the approval process, by filing a "Notice of Project Change" with Environmental Affairs Secretary Trudy Coxe.

I urge every Cohasset resident reading this letter to send a comment to Secretary Coxe by the Sept. 15 comment deadline, urging her to make a determination that this expansion will be a "significant increase of the environmental consequences" of Area IV-A and to order CHL to file an Environmental Impact Report to fully describe the environmental effects of this additional 50,000 tons of waste.

Send comments to Secretary Trudy Coxe, Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, 100 Cambridge St., 20th floor, Boston, 02202, ATTN: MEPA, EOEA # 6290, Notice of Project Change, Cohasset Heights landfill. Comments can also be faxed to 727-2754.

Cohasset woman spreads the word about lupus

By Laura Caldwell
CORRESPONDENT

To observe Susan Shumaker is to receive a lesson in turning tragedy into triumph.

Shumaker is one of nearly two million Americans suffering from the autoimmune disease, lupus. Lupus is a disease predominantly affecting women that induces fever, achy joints, fatigue, anemia, skin rashes, hair loss, photosensitivity, ulcers of the mouth and nose, and a host of other problems. Shumaker is a unique lupus patient in that the systemic disease affects her central nervous system and hinders her ability to verbalize and concentrate.

However, Shumaker has used this debilitating disease as a forum for samaritan efforts. She is an active volunteer for the Lupus Foundation of America. Most notably, she spends many hours each fall raising funds and gathering participants for the foundation's Walk on the Charles River.

In May, Shumaker was honored with the Summa Award for volunteering, presented to her by the Lupus Foundation to recognize her efforts involving the Walk On the Charles and her commitment to educating the public about lupus.

Lupus, despite the fact that more people suffer from it than AIDS, cerebral palsy, multiple sclerosis, sickle-cell anemia and cystic fibrosis combined, remains a relatively unknown disease.

According to Shumaker, "It's a real silent disease. People go through it in silence. But we're doing a lot better, and getting the word out.

"[The Lupus Foundation] is a great group of people. I'm delighted to do the little I can do", she adds.

Shumaker remembers the organization's invaluable help to her when she was diagnosed with lupus 14 years ago.

"I was so scared and so angry ... I knew nothing about the disease. I thought I was going to die," recalls Shumaker.

However, the Lupus Foundation rescued her from her initial shock and despair. She was flooded with information about the disease and joined a lupus support group.

"It was very, very helpful because it was education," she says.

Today, the former school teacher is determined to share her education and knowledge about lupus with others. She has spoken to many groups, including medical students, the Cohasset Rotary, and church organizations, about her experiences with the disease. And the visibility of lupus is on the rise.

> "There's a lot of information out there now, educating people ... It's great, not having people being afraid or worried. They are informed. That's why I'm doing this."
> — SUSAN SHUMAKER

"There's a lot of information out there now, educating people ... It's great, not having people being afraid or worried. They are informed. That's why I'm doing this," she says.

Education is also an effective means of raising funds for research on lupus. While there are a number of treatments for the disease, such as anti-inflammatory drugs and agents to suppress the immune system, there is no cure for lupus.

"When people give $10, $20, or $100, it does make a difference. That may sound trite, but it really does make a difference," she says.

Over the past several years, increased funding has made a difference in the treatment of and prognosis for lupus.

According to the Lupus Foundation, "The progress made in treatment and diagnosis during the last decade has been greater than that made over the past 100 years." Shumaker has seen this progress firsthand.

"From the time I was first diagnosed to now, the quality of my life has vastly improved because we know more," she says.

Other factors have facilitated Shumaker's experience with lupus. She points to a "...tremendous amount of support from family, friends, community..." which she has leaned on during tough times. She cherishes a deluge of encouraging letters from both friends and strangers wishing her luck and health. She is also grateful for "wonderful therapy" at Brigham and Women's and Beth Israel hospitals.

"My spiritual life and faith have grown with lupus," she says.

As the fall season draws near, Shumaker is preparing to kick off another successful year. The fifth annual Walk on the Charles will be held Sept. 28. (For information about the walk, please call Shumaker at 383-1443). Shumaker also hopes to spend time this winter volunteering in the Lupus Foundation office. While Shumaker devotes much time to her volunteering activities, neither the volunteerism nor the disease consume her life. She does not dote on the devastation that lupus can bring. She and her husband Jim, who have lived in Cohasset for 25 years, pass the summer at their beach house in Nantasket. She also has two children, Lisa, 28, and David, 27.

"I feel that [lupus] is difficult and painful, both physically and emotionally. But, I feel that I am not the disease. The disease is part of who I am," she says.

Alumni Field is a job well done

To the Editor:

The weather was perfect for the South Shore league's Fall Football Jamboree, held at Alumni Field Friday. Ten teams participated under the lights to initiate the season.

In addition to the teamwork displayed by the players, Alumni Field itself is a study in teamwork. Many town constituencies teamed together to do the feasibility study, to obtain funding at town meeting and the Prop. 2-1/2 override, and to build and supervise construction of the new tennis courts, the baseball field, the rearrangement of the layouts on Bancroft-Milliken Field, and the new track and field facility. A town philanthropist donated funding for the lighting system.

Numerous volunteers, school and town employees, and elected officials have worked consistently for the last four years to bring this new town asset to completion. This summer, volunteers built the press house, erected fencing for the bleachers, conducted the "Sidewalk of Stars" fund-raising campaign, and supervised finishing touches at the field.

The town's tree and park staff has done an outstanding job caring for the irrigation, fertilization and landscaping with the result that by the time of the jamboree, Alumni Field looked and played like the first class facility it is.

Four years ago, the Track and Field Study Committee visited comparable local facilities to develop guidelines on what Cohasset should do to cost-effectively improve our outdated fields. Now the situation is reversed: at the Jamboree Friday, representatives of several other towns asked if they could return to examine Alumni Field, as a case study for what their towns might be able to do.

The newly completed handicapped access to the bleachers was used successfully for the first time Friday. Besides handicapped access, our lighted field allows access to working parents to watch their children's games in a series of evening events programmed throughout the year. The all-weather track is a major benefit to the hundreds of walkers and joggers — from youth to senior citizens — who can be seen on it at all times of the year. The rearranged Bancroft-Milliken Field now allows the supply of town soccer facilities to meet the demand, as a visit any springtime weekend will attest; and the modern tennis courts are a boon to the CHS team as well as hundreds of Cohasset tennis players.

All in all, the town-wide effort that brought Alumni Field and the related improvements into being was a job well-done, and a demonstration of what can be accomplished at a modest level of budget by a town acting as a team and pulling together for a common goal. The taxpayers and all the townspeople who worked on this project are justified in a hardy round of self-congratulations!

Hedlund holds full time office hours in district

Senator Robert Hedlund's district office, located at 66 Sea Street in Weymouth, will now be open Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The new hours are possible because of the recent addition of Hedlund's three new staff people, Abigail Bellivue of Kingston, Jennifer Bartecchi of Weymouth, and Brian Markarian, also from Weymouth. All staff members take turns serving in the district and Statehouse offices.

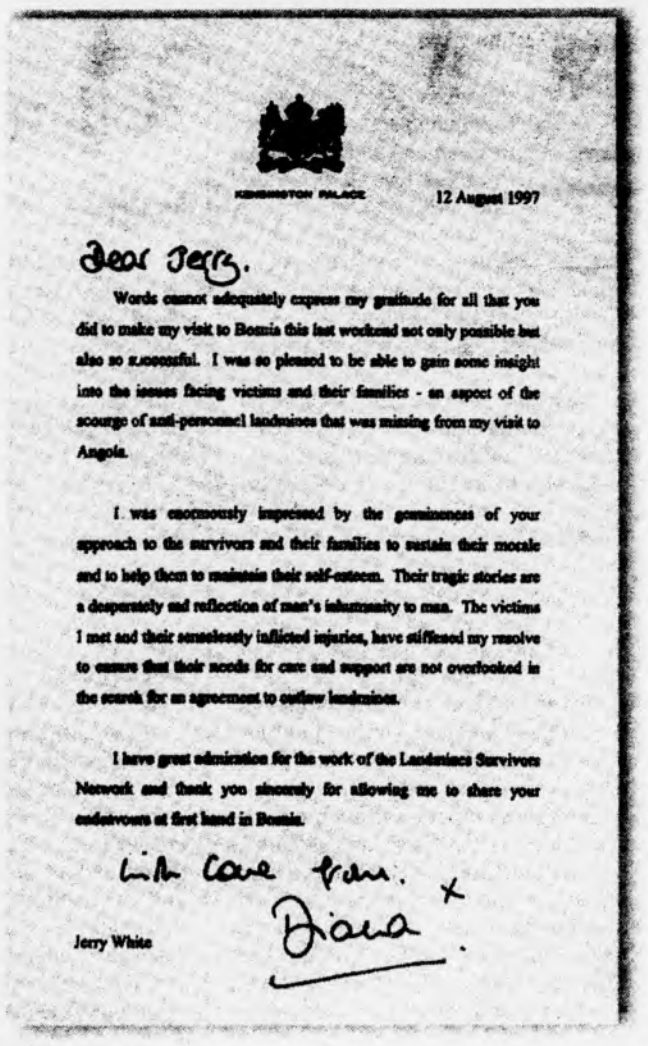
"The whole purpose of my district office is to meet with and serve my constituents. I want them to feel like they have a place to go when they need me," Hedlund said. "This relationship was impossible when my staff members were unable to work in the district." Hedlund went on to say that his district office was "just as important as the one on Beacon Hill, if not more so."

Appointments are not necessary for anyone who wishes to visit. The doors are open to any problem, large or small.

"It means a lot to me to be able to talk with constituents fact to face," Hedlund said "Together, we can get a lot done."

Democratic committee meeting is Sept. 16

Sen. William Keating (D-Sharon), a Democratic candidate for district attorney, will speak to Cohasset Democrats at a meeting of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee at 8 p.m., Tuesday, Sept. 16, at the Unitarian Parish House, 23 Main St.



"Senator Keating is highly qualified to serve Norfolk County as district attorney," said John McNabb, Cohasset coordinator. "He is currently the Senate chair of the Judiciary Committee and the vice-chair of the Criminal Justice Committee, and has a strong record of sponsoring and passing effective criminal justice legislation."

"Keating has always been very good on environmental issues," said McNabb. "He has consistently strongly supported environmental legislation, including bills to protect water supplies. He filed legislation this year to prohibit the siting of landfills over aquifers used as public drinking water supplies."

princess' genuinely caring, almost magical way with everyone she met — from a 15-year-old girl, Mirzeta Gablic, wounded by a land mine this year in Sarajevo, to a grieving young Muslim widow whose husband was killed in May, leaving her alone to raise their two young children.

KENSINGTON PALACE 12 August 1997

Dear Jerry.

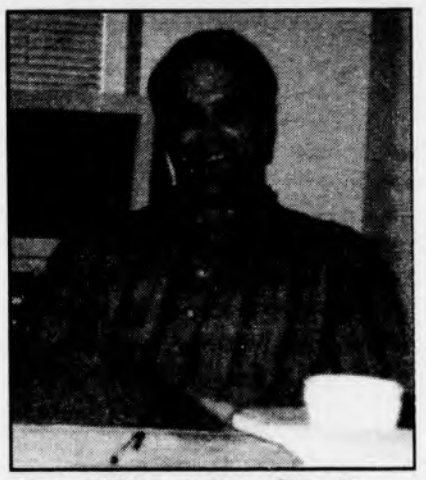
Words cannot adequately express my gratitude for all that you did to make my visit to Bosnia this last weekend not only possible but also so successful. I was so pleased to be able to gain some insight into the issues facing victims and their families - an aspect of the scourge of anti-personnel landmines that was missing from my visit to Angola.

I was enormously impressed by the genuineness of your approach to the survivors and their families to sustain their morale and to help them to maintain their self-esteem. Their tragic stories are a desperately sad reflection of man's inhumanity to man. The victims I met and their senselessly inflicted injuries, have stiffened my resolve to ensure that their needs for care and support are not overlooked in the search for an agreement to outlaw landmines.

I have great admiration for the work of the Landmines Survivors Network and thank you sincerely for allowing me to share your endeavours at first hand in Bosnia.

With Love from. x
Diana.

Jerry White



"On each visit, Diana reached out, not only emotionally, but physically as well, holding a hand, stroking a back, caressing a child's face, all the while easing the pain and suffering."

White was scheduled to visit Kensington Palace again Sept. 5 to meet with the princess and discuss a message she wanted to deliver to the Oslo conference.

"I planned to bring flowers for the princess to thank her for her remarkable work in Bosnia," White wrote.

Sadly, White attended Diana's funeral instead. Representatives from the charities the princess supported were invited to the service at Westminster Abbey on Saturday.

Mrs. White said her son was able to talk briefly to Diana's two sons, William and Harry, to tell them what a wonderful woman their mother was.

Jerry White at his office in Washington, D.C.

White pledges to carry on the work that Diana has drawn so much attention to.

"...on behalf of land-mine victims around the world, I want to express our thanks for the compassion of this woman," he wrote. "We also pray that her two boys, whom she told me were her 'best friends,' will inherit their mother's compassion, humor, and determination.

"And now with less light and heavier hearts, we'll carry on our work cleaning up the humanitarian disaster caused by up to 100 million mines strewn across more than 60 countries."

Landmine Survivors Network

The Landmine Survivors Network (LSN) was founded in 1995 by two American landmine survivors, Ken Rutherford and Jerry White (who grew up in Cohasset), to help the hundreds of thousands of innocent landmine victims alive today, and to prevent new victims from ever joining their ranks. "I was only four years old when Syrian soldiers, retreating during the 1967 Arab-Israeli War, laid Soviet-supplied mines in the Golan Heights. The soldiers no doubt hoped the mines would maim or kill Israeli troops. Instead, my mine waited silently in the ground for nearly 17 years until it exploded under my foot...," White wrote in a press release about LSN.

Among other things, the Network organizes and trains survivors in advocacy, medical work and civic organization. LSN has developed a specialized data base to track the rehabilitation of survivors and to link them with the organizations available to ease their suffering. The database will also create a global registry of care givers, including the hospitals, clinics, technicians and development workers who can help meet the medical, social and financial needs of victims and their families. For more information on how you can help land-mine victims, please contact White or Rutherford at the Landmine Survivors Network, 1701 K St., N.W., Suite 805, Washington, D.C. 20006. Greenbush foes steamed at Cellucci rail stance

Buckley, co-founder of the Coastal Coalition.

"Up until now there has been a wait-and-see period with Cellucci, because on numerous occasions he has indicated to Coastal Coalition members that he agreed with us," said Buckley. "He seemed to be genuinely on our side."

Prince's letter was written in response to one Robb sent to Cellucci expressing concerns about environmental impacts, ridership estimates and costs.

Cellucci's support of Greenbush restoration is welcome news to Hingham residents David Clinton and Ross Hall.

"I welcome the governor's decision," Hall said. "Speaking as a member of Back on Track (a group which favors Greenbush restoration), I also support the option of a tunnel under Hingham Square."

Clinton called the news "fantastic."

He, like opponents of the project, said he has been wondering where Cellucci stood on the issue.

"I'm looking forward to being able to get into Boston easier," Clinton said. "I believe people will eventually see that the train is not the devil it's been made out to be."

But rail opponent Ilana Marks of Scituate said she feels that she and other train foes have been deceived by Cellucci.

Faced with former Gov. Weld's outspoken support for the restoration of commuter rail service to Greenbush, Marks and other members of the Coastal Coalition were hoping to find an ally in Cellucci.

Buckley, however, pointed to election year 1990, when Cellucci stood by then-Governor William Weld when they spoke with voters and public officials in Hingham.

At the time, Buckley recalls Weld saying that government was "taking on a life of its own and forgetting why it's there."

Weld added, "I'm raising a flag of warning on the Greenbush line."

Buckley said Weld's comments "indicated to us that he felt the state was ignoring the wishes of those communities which were opposing rail restoration," Buckley said.

In 1995, Buckley met with Cellucci in his Statehouse office to discuss the Greenbush issue.

"At one point he told me, 'Relax, you're winning,'" she recalled. "This recent letter is the first statement made by the Cellucci administration (regarding its commitment to Greenbush restoration)."

Marks and Coastal Coalition co-founder Randy Young were also present at that meeting.

"We explained our side to him, and he said that he didn't know why it was being built because it didn't make sense," Marks said. "He said he would continue to look into the issue."

Marks said as an anti-rail individual she is disappointed in the new governor's support for the project. As a person who met with him and spoke at length about her concerns with the train, Marks said she is disgusted.

"I have no respect for someone who can't tell me what they believe," said Marks. "I don't have any respect for him as a politician or as a person," she said.

Marks believes Cellucci's support for Greenbush is politically motivated.

"He's now backing the project for the same reasons Weld did," she said. "He's about to run a hugely expensive campaign, and he needs the backing of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce and other big money groups."

"None of this has anything to do with whether or not the residents will benefit," Marks said.

'Keep Politics Out'

But Hingham resident Fred B. Cole thinks politics should be kept out of the issue.

The decision should be made between those who are for and those who are against rail restoration, he said.

"I'm a supporter of the train," he said. "In fact, my late father rode the train to work for 43 years."

But, Cole said, the only fair way to make a decision is a "fair poll vote. I would never feel comfortable with rail restoration otherwise. It's only in the privacy of the election booth that you get the real answers."

Cellucci was unavailable for comment as the paper went to press.

"I think Prince and Cellucci are probably just giving us the party line," Robb said. "I think Cellucci is personally against the train, but he doesn't want to make waves. No one wants to stick their neck out on Greenbush."

Robb recalled that during Cellucci's 1990 visit to Hingham, he expressed "strong reservations" about the line after he had toured the railroad right-of-way.

At the time, Cellucci said, "Other alternatives could be established without leading to this disruption."

An article appearing in the Hingham Journal on Sept. 13, 1990, reported Weld's and Cellucci's comments.

Prince said those aspects of Greenbush restoration which Robb asked Cellucci to address "have been reviewed by people with expertise in those areas, some who are staff at the MBTA, consultants to the MBTA and by other independent outside agencies and organizations with oversight responsibilities that have no connection to the MBTA."

But Marion Sherman of Fort Hill Street is not convinced.

"I think it's an insult to the Army Corps of Engineers (ACE), which recently conducted its own hearing on the Greenbush proposal," she said. "It's premature for the Cellucci administration to take such a stand before the ACE makes its final decision."

The ACE is the lead federal agency involved in evaluating the Greenbush proposal.

Sherman pointed to the hazard of diesel emissions from locomotives as a key issue.

"I'm shocked. In my opinion, the proposed Greenbush railroad is dead, because in essence I don't believe it can be built under existing federal and state environmental laws."

Robb agrees.

"The EPA has determined that one diesel engine pollutes as much as 3,000 cars," he said. "Twenty-four Greenbush trains per day would pollute more than all the cars removed from the road."

However, Prince said, "While we realize that the direct abutters are critical of the project, we remain convinced that it is the appropriate project for the South Shore."

But Buckley pointed out that when she and supporters in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate collected 8,000 signatures on a petition urging Weld to stop the train, a wide cross-section of people was represented.

"The petitions were not predominantly signed by abutters," she said. "And they represented residents from a wide variety of locations, including Crow Point, World's End and Jerusalem Road."

Continuing the fight

Support for the project, which was illustrated in Prince's letter, is due in part to the Conservation Law Foundation's endorsement of the project.

"We urge the Army Corps to not only issue the permit (for the project), but to do it expeditiously so that Greenbush can move forward as quickly as possible," he said.

Robb, on the other hand, said the number of "anti-train folks" at the recent Army Corps hearing "vastly outnumbered those who favored the train."

"This is a good indication that the already large opposition to Greenbush is still growing," said Robb.

But Clinton said Cellucci's support of Greenbush restoration has "nothing to do with the Army Corps of Engineers."

"We need to look forward," he said.

While supporting rail restoration to the South Shore, Prince promised to work with communities and residents along the corridor to avoid, mitigate or minimize the impacts rail restoration would have on the area.

Clinton said he's confident the problems relating to Greenbush which are of concern to some individuals, including safety, will be resolved.

"Education about trains is important, especially for kids — just as they learn not to run in front of a truck," he said.

Plays by the Sea

Now in its second season after two tremendously successful productions of The Wizard of Oz and Anne of Green Gables, for children in grades 4-8, the Cohasset Plays by the Sea has chosen a show for all ages: "Annie." This production has more than 30 speaking roles, along with many vocal and dance solo opportunities. So, for those who are singers and not actors, dancers and not singers, or just actors, this is the show for you! Our plan is to tap into everyone's specific talents.

The first "Annie" audition is for music which will be held Sunday, Sept. 14, anytime between 2 and 4 p.m., or 6 and 8 p.m. at Cohasset High School auditorium. Be prepared to sing a song of your choice. Please note that if you plan to audition for a lead, you must sing a song for that part.

The second "Annie" audition is for acting and will be held Monday, Sept. 15, from 6 to 8 p.m. at Deer Hill Cafeteria. Both first and second auditions are mandatory.

Everyone who auditions will be in the production! Registration fee at auditions is $50 for activities for the full year.

Along with the camaraderie that a theatrical experience brings along, the club plans to spend time once a week to teach the basis of choreography, dramatics and vocal technique. In essence, this production is not only a play, but a lesson in theater that will stay with you forever.

They look forward to seeing you at the auditions! For more information, call Ron Nicynski, director, at 383-1329, or Sharon Weber, choreographer, at 383-0631.

Social dance classes offered

Donald Mason, Patricia Leahy and the committee for the Cohasset Assemblies announce that the Assemblies will start Tuesday, Sept. 30, at St. Stephen's Parish, Highland Ave.

The Assemblies are a series of social dance classes for Cohasset and Scituate fifth and sixth grades, designed to introduce youngsters to the basics of social dance and etiquette. Each class is opened with a formal receiving line in which the children learn to properly shake hands, look people in the eye, and introduce themselves.

Although the classes are well structured and supervised, they do include contemporary dances, party dances and dance games with prizes. This makes the Assemblies a fun way for children to learn and practice social skills with their peers.

The Assemblies are pleased to add Douglas Trudeau of Scituate to our staff this year. Trudeau is well known on the South Shore as founder, artistic director and performer of the Showstoppers Dinner Theatre at the Golden Rooster in Scituate, as well as director of the Showstopper Kids and the Showstoppers Youth Theatre. His youth programs have included children from several South Shore communities.

Invitations to the Assemblies have been mailed to all fifth- and sixth-graders. If you do not receive one and need information, please call Donald Mason at (617) 734-3447 or Patricia Leahy at (781) 383-1005 or one of the following committee members: Fifth-grade girls–Martha Ogrodnik, boys–Maureen Jerz; Sixth-grade girls–Lisa Koed, boys–Diane Dooley.

Chiropractic for HEALTH
by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor

PHILOSOPHICAL DIFFERENCES

Whereas medical practitioners primarily focus their attention on the elimination of symptoms, chiropractors are more concerned with preventing disease by restoring bio-mechanical balance to the spine. The brain and the spinal cord comprise the central nervous system which is the body's "master system" that controls and monitors all body functions. By adjusting the spine to remove mechanical stresses, the chiropractor enables the body's nervous system to function at its maximum capacity. As a result, the patient is restored to a healthy state. Thus, chiropractic gets to the root of health problems to encourage optimum health. Better yet, the chiropractic approach is preventive in nature and helps ward off potential disease.

Our goal at SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC is to provide you with professional chiropractic care to help you live your life to its fullest. We believe each person has the right to become as healthy as they choose. For excellence in chiropractic care, call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. Chiropractic health care helps provide an atmosphere rich in health, happiness and success. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Habor.

P.S. According to chiropractic philosophy, a strong, flexible and properly aligned spine is necessary for uninterrupted communication between the brain and various body parts and systems.

Town to decide about air conditioning new school

$100K needed to install piping

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The new Osgood School could have air conditioning after all.

The school facilities committee will ask October's special town meeting for $100,000 to install the necessary infrastructure for air conditioning. The piping would set the stage so condensers could be added later in order to make the school available for possible use in the summer months.

It is less costly to do this now than to wait until the school is finished. To retrofit air conditioning work would cost triple, school officials said.

It is also not clear if the money would actually be needed. If the $500,000 school construction contingency fund is not used, then the school department would use that instead to pay for the air conditioning work. As with the rest of the project, the town would also be reimbursed 60 percent of the cost by the state School Building Assistance Bureau by getting the school air conditioning ready as part of the project now.

In May, the school building committee, which is overseeing the new school construction project, did not include money for air conditioning piping in the $8.47 million contract awarded to general contractor John T. Callahan and Sons of Bridgewater because of a tight budget. At that time, Callahan and Sons would have added the piping for $88,000 because it was included as an alternate with the bid.

> "There is public sentiment in town to do this. We think it's a prudent decision to make. So we'll put it before the town and let them decide."
> — ROBERT SPOFFORD, SCHOOL BUILDING COMMITTEE.

Since then, school building committee member Robert Spofford said the public has shown interest in having the school air conditioned.

"There is public sentiment in town to do this. We think it's a prudent decision to make. So we'll put it before the town and let them decide," he said.

Spofford said the committee added 10 percent to the cost to cover the contractor's overhead but hoped to reduce that figure if possible.

He explained that the contingency fund should not be used for the air conditioning work at this time. Although, the contractor has not had to blast any ledge, a costly procedure, there are still some issues, such as hooking the school up to the sewer, which could use up the contingency funds.

"We're more comfortable going and asking for the money at this point," he said. "If we can give it back, then we'll give it back."

Pleasant Street water project begins Sept. 11

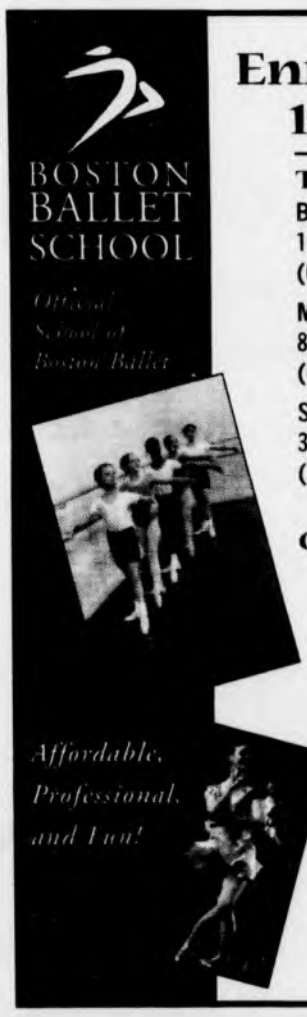
Starting Sept. 11, the water department will begin its project to clean and line the water main on Pleasant Street. The project, estimated to take about two months, will help improve water flow to the town by removing accumulated sediment from the water pipe and by the lining the pipe with cement, which increases the flow.

"This project will increase water flows and water pressure for our water customers throughout the town of Cohasset," said water commission chairman Robert Kasameyer. "Fire flows and fire protection will also be improved."

The project starting Sept. 11 also includes the cleaning and lining of water mains on Pleasant Street, Depot Court and replacement of valves at the intersection of Ripley Road and Depot Court. Fire hydrants will be replaced along the pipes being cleaned and relined.

Residents on Pleasant Street and associated side streets will receive individual notification prior to the start of the project, and will be advised that the project may cause some discoloration of water when the water main is turned off at the beginning of the project and turned back on at its completion. Affected residents will be tied into a temporary above-ground replacement main to supply water while the Pleasant Street main is cleaned and lined.

The contractor for this project is Federico Construction Corp. of South Boston, who was selected July 31 by the Cohasset Board of Water Commissioners as the contractor for their Water Distribution System Improvement, Phase IIIA project. Federico bid $448,895.10, about $100,000 lower than the $548,500 cost estimated by the project engineer, Tutela Engineering Associates.



Following completion of this work, Federico will proceed to repair a valve on Summer Street and to clean and line a large portion of Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue.

River rapids challenge young and old kayakers alike

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Water still dripped from Scituate's Stew Mayer as he packed his gear into a duffel bag. Mayer had just finished a couple of hours worth of Sunday morning kayaking in the waters rushing under the Border Street bridge in Cohasset.

And though the sun was hidden behind a blanket of clouds and there was a chill in the air, the kayaking conditions couldn't have been better for the half dozen kayakers breaking through the surf in their multi-colored crafts.

Mayer has been kayaking for 20 years and knows the ins and outs of the sport as well as anyone on the South Shore. So when he says the location satisfies everyone from the beginner working on his form to the more advanced kayakers, you know it's coming for a legitimate source.

"This is a popular training spot," Mayer said. "It's safe without a lot of hazards. The rapids are driven by the moon and tide conditions, not an artificial water supply."

Mayer says the best time to head to any kayaking location is a couple of hours before high tide. Kayakers regularly check the tide charts to determine when they're going to navigate the white-foam surf.

Mayer has heard the rapids at Border St. are formed by underwater pilings from an old mill, though he is not completely certain. What makes Border St., such a good location, however, is the fact that the water comes in from the ocean and narrows as it heads under the bridge, moving faster at high tide. It then opens up again once on the other side of the bridge, giving kayakers the opportunity to rest, check their equipment or just paddle slowly.

One thing is for sure. Those who have kayaked in Cohasset haven't kept it from others. Word of mouth has resulted in kayakers descending on the location from as far away as New Hampshire to the north and Connecticut to the south. On any given day, there can be as many as 15 kayakers in the water.

Hubbard remembered in annual rowing race

By Lynne Layman
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On Saturday, Sept. 6, rowers gathered in Cohasset Harbor for "The Jack Hubbard Memorial Minot Round About" sponsored by Alden Ocean Shell and the Cohasset Maritime Institute. Seas were a little slopping with a southwest breeze. About 35 boats participated. Most were single and double Alden ocean shells. There were also single and double dories, a rowing canoe and four local, wooden multi-oared boats.

Jack Hubbard, who passed away last spring, was a veteran Alden and skull rower and had organized the seven previous races. Hubbard was instrumental in raising the funds to refurbish the surf boat John Warrren, which was restored at Cohasset High School under the direction of Jack Buckley. Buckley's program at the Cohasset Maritime Institute restored traditional rowing in Cohasset. Hubbard was also past president of the Hull Lifesaving Museum.

Hubbard's wife, June, served as honorary chairman of the round about. Organizers were: Dimitrios Karamonlidis, vice president of the Alden Ocean Shell Association; Herb Everett, president of AOSA; Marge Martin, whose husband, the late Arthur Martin, designed the Alden Ocean Shell; Jack Buckley, who organizes the fixed seat boats. Other volunteers included: Lynne and Joe Previte, Debbie and Mark Arrenberg, Rick Allen, Dane Leahy, Dick Burbridge, Jo Previte, Maggie Merrill and Herb Towle. A dozen or so additional volunteers helped make the event a success.

A perpetual award was presented for the first time to a rower who has contributed his or her expertise to rowing and helped new rowers to enjoy the sport. The Jack Hubbard Memorial Chair was presented to Hergy Heap of Yarmouth, Maine. The chair was from Hagerty's Cohasset Colonials and as assembled and finished by rower, Debbie Arrenberg.

Field hockey squad hopes to stay on the rise

By Jim O'Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

A pleasing trend seems to be developing in Cohasset High School sports lately: coach arrives, overhaul's program, possibly adding a team and moves toward winning record.

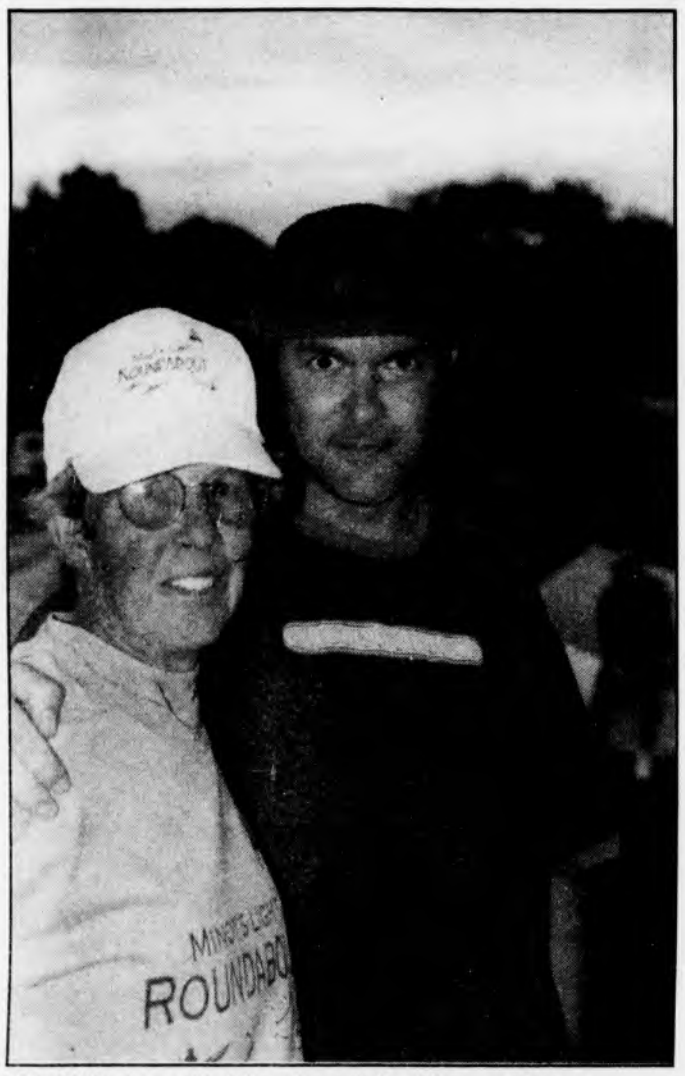
It's happened with basketball, lacrosse, baseball, and most recently, football. Add another to the list: field hockey. Coach Debbie Bostwick has turned the girls' team into a contender, bolstering the program with the addition of a junior high team this year.

With seven seniors and a host of talented underclasswomen this year, Coach Bostwick's team has a bright future ahead of them.

Led by captains Alia Afshar and Katie Buckley, the group of seniors also includes Whitney Cook, Lauren Dooley, Sue Gill, Lindy Holway and Kristen Reynolds. Bostwick emphasized the talent and leadership of her seniors. Megan Connolly, Katie Devine and Jill Magner anchor the junior class and add talent to the starting team.

"We have a lot of speed and quickness, not to mention a good group of kids. We've got several returning players and a lot of new additions from the JV who should help us a lot," Bostwick said.

"Right now, we need some help in net," she replied, when asked about the team's weaknesses. "We have new goalies this season; they're a little inexperienced, but they're working hard. Our defense is going to be strong. We lost two key defensive players last year, but we have girls taking over and doing a great job."



Bostwick pointed to Caitlin Donovan, Jen Meehan and Malissa Rosano as her strong sophomore and seemed excited about freshmen Kelly Lordan, Andi Shaughnessy and Maggie O'Connor.

Senior captain Alia Afshar was also enthusiastic about the team this year.

"We have six seniors, and it will be a good season. We don't have big numbers, but we'll be really strong, especially on offense. Our lack of substitutes could hurt us, but Katie Buckley is a great center and should help us out. Defensively, we have Linday, Katie and Jill and they're great. It should be a good year."

Coach Bostwick has the blueprints for success in front of her. She has the talent to carry out her plan. Cohasset field hockey should be fun this year.

breather on the hill overlooking the water. Jason, dressed in a royal blue wet suit with yellow trim, has been kayaking for three years after his grandfather, Wayne Finey, took him to a lesson at UMass-Dartmouth and he enjoyed the experience.

Jason has been to the Cohasset site no less than 18 times and looks forward to every trip.

"My grandfather told me about it and I asked him if could come down with him," he said.

Jason likes what the area offers and has no trouble at all getting excited about every trip to the rough surf, despite the number of times he has barreled through it.

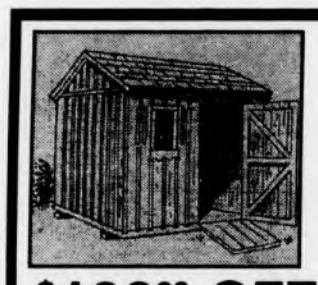
"There are a couple of big waves right here and you can surf it," Jason said. "You get thrown in and flipped over. It cools you down on a hot day."

Finey, who hails from Swansea, has been kayaking for three years and is hooked. He spends the winter skiing, but during the summer he is only an hour and a half car ride from Cohasset.

He has been to several different kayaking locations over the past three years, but considers the Border St. spot the best of all of them.

"This is probably the best one in Southeastern Mass.," Finey said. "Nothing compares with it. It's safe and it sets up a Class Three wave. They range from one to six. Nobody paddles a six unless they're crazy."

Finey believes beginners should have a couple of lessons before they venture outside the pool and into outdoor surf. Like Mayer, he says the area is perfect for working on the fundamental techniques and skills. Finey says because of the deeper water, kayakers don't have to worry about getting injured on rocks, unlike other locations.



"If you go to a whitewater river with this kind of waves, there are rocks everywhere," he said.

In Cohasset, though, there is nothing but rushing water and people of all ages challenging the surf.

Osgood children will be advised and sent home should the program not meet.

Children may bring snacks/drinks to programs and all children must be picked up either prior to, or promptly at the concluding program times. Children may stay after school to participate once parental permission is given on the registration form.

Please complete the registration form, calculate the appropriate fee and make the check payable to: Town of Cohasset. Checks and forms may be either dropped off at the recreation office or mailed to: Cohasset Recreation Department, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025, prior to Sept. 18. Hockey beginners instructional program

The Seahawks youth hockey program invites all boys and girls, ages 5 to 9 to join our beginners instructional program.

Requirements are a desire to have fun while playing, a hockey helmet with cage or shield, hockey gloves or waterproof winter gloves. Any skaters with full hockey equipment interested in playing hockey are welcome.

The 1997-98 season will start on Sept. 13 and will run through March. Weekly lessons will be held on Saturday nights from 5 to 6 p.m. at the Hobomock Arena (Rink 2) in Pembroke. Telephone 294-0260 for information.

Directions: Take Rte. 53 to Rte. 14, follow Rte. 14 to Pembroke center, take Rte. 36 for 3/4 of a mile to Hobomock Rink on the left.

Registration will commence at 3:30 p.m. on Sept. 13. There will be a one-time registration fee of $12. This year's learn to skate will cost $40 per eight-week session. Registered skaters will receive a decal at the registration table to be placed on the child's helmet above the name tag. Only those skaters with decals will be allowed to skate.

Due to the growing popularity of this program and the long lines, we are asking all parents to please arrive early on Sept. 13. The registration table will be located in the lobby of Rink 1.

After registration, all skaters must dress in the locker rooms assigned to the learn to skate program.

No dressing will be allowed in the aisle.

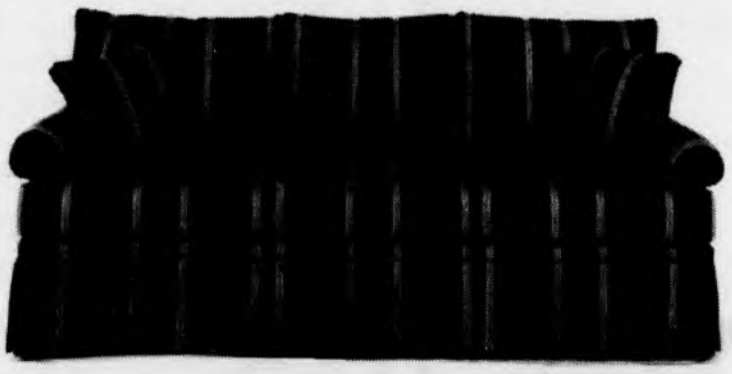
Participants will learn how to guide Chi (life force energy) through the body's acupuncture meridians, as well as how to use Chi Kung breathing and postures for improved health and well being.

Appropriate for beginners, the fee for the workshop will be $115, less a $20 discount for prepay.



Please call (617) 383-6822 for further information.

Drug bust on Doane Street

Police arrested Jerry Cogill, 19, of 71 Doane St., during a drug bust at Cogill's home Friday evening where they found a pound of marijuana, steroids and hypodermic needles.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the bust followed a year-long investigation.

Cogill was charged with illegal possession of a Class D substance (marijuana); possession of Class D with intent to distribute; three counts of possession of an instrument to administer a controlled substance; and illegal possession of a Class E substance (steroids). Police also charged Cogill with three counts of receiving stolen property valued at $250 or less. The items were: a street sign the property of Cohasset, a street sign the property of Norwell and a sign owned by NYNEX, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

Police officers William Quigley and Jeffrey Lennon conducted the investigation. They were assisted by officers Thomas DaSilva, Garrett Hunt, Jeffrey Treanor and Sgt. Richard Grimes of the Weymouth police canine unit.

After an arraignment on the charges Tuesday, Cogill was released on his own recognizance, Noonan said. A pre-trail hearing is scheduled for Oct. 29.

August police status report

The final month of the summer was a very busy one for the police department, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

In August, police made 25 arrests. Four for operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol; two for possession of a false license; four for operating a motor vehicle without a license; two for being minors transporting alcohol; five for outstanding warrants; one for public drinking; one for assault and battery; one for possession of a Class D controlled substance; and five for protective custody.

There were three "breaking and entering," Noonan said.

The emergency dispatch center received 127, 9-1-1 calls last month.

During August, the bike patrols logged 239 hours.

"We plan to continue the bike patrols into the fall as long as the weather holds out," Noonan said.

The police department also sponsored a bike rodeo and a year-end law day picnic for the recreation department summer camp. Both events were held at the Deer Hill School.

Police were also awarded a $5,000 DARE grant from the Copeland Family Foundation for the PALS program (Police Assisting Local Schools).

Household hazardous waste day

The Town of Cohasset will hold its annual Household Hazardous Waste (HHW) Collection Day from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 20, at the parking lot of the new town Department of Public Works (DPW) garage on Cedar Street.

While the event is primarily for Cohasset residents, it is also open to residents of other South Shore towns who get a "Reciprocity Letter" in advance from their local board of health or department of public works and are in towns that are members of the South Shore Regional Refuse Disposal Planning Board, which are: Abington, Avon, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hingham, Hull, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Plymouth, Scituate and Weymouth.

Household hazardous waste items accepted include paint thinner, kerosene, gasoline, dry gas, paint strippers, spot removers, degreasers, antifreeze, brake fluid, waxes, photo chemicals, drain cleaners, glues, weed-killers, pesticides, herbicides, insecticides, rat poison, insect repellents, batteries, acids and aerosols.

Wastes that will NOT be accepted include any type of commercial wastes, such as PCB's, dioxin containing wastes, radioactive materials, explosive materials, ammunition, pathological wastes, and compressed gases (other than aerosols).

The HHW collection has been moved to the new DEP garage, from its traditional location at the Swim Center, because of the proximity of the nearby Sohier Street wellfields, emergency water supplies now being restored to full service by the water commissioners.

PERSONAL FINANCE

A portfolio the most relaxed investor will love

By Amy K. Barrett
Worth Magazine

Investors do not need to have type "A" personalities to do well in the stock and bond markets. This news will probably come as a relief for those who don't have the time or the inclination to devour financial reports or follow stock prices in order to better their portfolios.

WORTH

Scott Burns, a financial writer in Texas and a monthly contributor to Worth Magazine, has found an investment strategy that suits most non-professional investors' schedules. It revolves around inactivity, not research.

Of course, there is nothing wrong with being a committed and diligent investor. Some individuals manage their funds with an intensity that could put a few money managers to shame. And some of them do quite well, and even enjoy themselves.

Burns' strategy is best suited for the armchair investor who does not want, well, to get out of her armchair.

Appropriately, Burns has dubbed it the Couch Potato Portfolio, and the most demanding thing it requires is for the investor to know how to divide by two.

Intrigued? Well, the method is basic: Invest 50 percent of your nest egg in a broad equity fund, such as an index fund that mirrors the Standard & Poor's 500 Stock Index, and 50 percent in a fund that follows the bond market at large, again an index fund will do.

The portfolio consists of just two mutual funds - individual stocks are off-limits. Then all an investor has to do is keep the 50/50 ratio balanced.

When market action causes the bond and equity portions to grow or shrink, changing the 50/50 ratio, investors must re-allocate funds. A couple of times a year you may have to divide the portfolio's new total in half and then transfer enough money into the laggard fund to make them equal (Okay, so you also need to know how to subtract and add - make your second grade teacher proud.).

The selling point for this method lies not only in its elegant simplicity but also in the results it produces. Burns calculated, for example, that a portfolio made up of the Standard & Poor's 500 Stock Index and Lehman Brothers Intermediate Bond Index would have provided above-average returns over the last 24 years (to note: index mutual funds would have produced returns slightly lower because of the funds' expenses.)

This portfolio would have provided a compounded annual rate of return of 10.9 percent for that period, compared with the 12.3 percent return of the S&P 500 Index alone. That may not seem spectacular, but consider this: The Couch Potato Portfolio only trailed the S&P 500 by 1.4 percentage points and beat most fixed-income indexes. The average equity growth-and-income fund trailed the S&P 500 by 2.6 percentage points a year over the last 15 years (the database Burns used only tracked back that far). And the average Treasury bond fund trailed the Lehman Brothers Government Bond Index by about as much.

With that kind of a batting record, Burns figured his portfolio falls somewhere between the top 25 percent and 50 percent of equity mutual funds for the period - a cut above the typical fund. What's more, the portfolio was less risky than the bond and equity benchmark indexes during that period, posting smaller losses in down years than those indexes, says Burns.

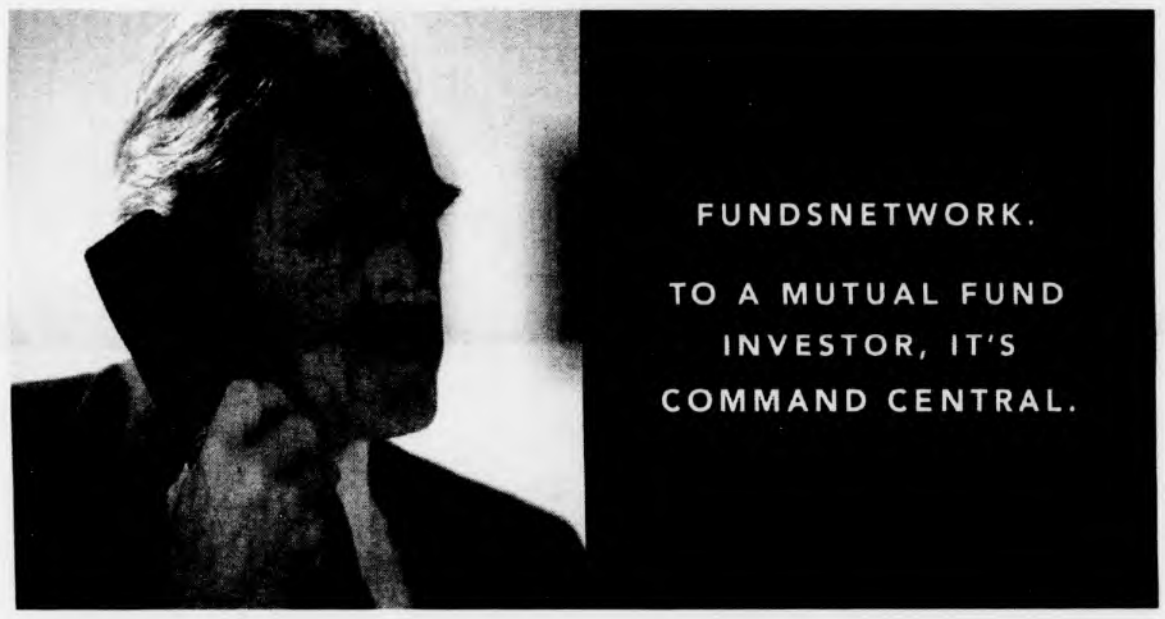
Burns' quest to create a portfolio to weather any storm (and of course, to provide robust returns) was started when he caught sight of an article written by Gerald Perritt, a Chicago investment-newsletter publisher.

In August 1987, Perritt wrote that investors should divide their money equally between stocks, bonds, cash, real estate and gold - a portfolio that he found had beaten the S&P 500 with less risk between 1968 and 1984 (eventually he revised the portfolio by taking out real estate, figuring most people owned enough of it already.).

Burns, in effect, took that portfolio and simplified it. He figured that with about a quarter of the S&P 500's earnings coming from overseas, the portfolio didn't need an international position in stocks. Coca-Cola, for instance, gets 80 percent of its profits from abroad. So an investor essentially gets foreign exposure by holding an S&P index fund.

By the same token, the S&P 500 has six gold mining companies whose performances for the most part track the price of gold.

There's no need to buy gold, Burns says, when you get the exposure in an index fund. Burns also simplified by adding the cash position to the bond allocation.



Make all of those changes to Perritt's plan and presto; you have the Couch Potato Portfolio. As Burns points out, you have very high odds of being in the second quartile for returns without the suffering of constant due diligence and hanging on edge about rumored Federal Reserve announcements.

At the very least, you'll have a true neutral position which will mean that you will do no better, or no worse, on average than everyone else.

There are a score of index funds you can use to create your own portfolio.

Find the fund with the lowest costs - and then you can sit back in that armchair and enjoy the ride.

Superintendent to retire at end of school year

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

After 12 years at the post, school Supt. Stephen Hart will step down at the end of this school year.

The school committee has known about Hart's plans for some time, but the 55-year-old Hingham resident made the announcement public last week.

School Committee Chairman Maureen Jerz said the school committee did not have a plan in place as yet to replace Hart. She explained that the board will meet a representative of the Massachusetts Association of School Committees to go over the process of searching for a new superintendent.

Hart's salary this year is about $94,000.

She praised Hart's work at the helm of the town's school system.

"With Steve's retirement, this town will lose a tireless advocate for the schools and children.

"I'd like to thank him for that and for his many years of service to the town."

The other school committee members also praised Hart and wished him well.

"The appropriate time to roast Mr. Hart is coming, so I'll save my comments for then," Ralph Kidder said. "But the town is losing a true friend to education."

> "With Steve's retirement, this town will lose a tireless advocate for the schools and children."
> – SCHOOL COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN MAUREEN JERZ.

Rick Shea said it had been a pleasure to work with Hart.

"I admire the level of energy despite his years on the job," he said.

Kathy Ofsthun said a simple "thank you" to Hart. And Joseph McElroy said he wished Hart all the best. Ofsthun and McElroy were elected to the school committee in April.

Hart said the opening of school Sept. 4 was bittersweet. He said seeing the buses on opening day brought back a lot of memories.

"I'm grateful to be in Cohasset which has given me the opportunity because of being a small school system to fill a number of roles," he said.

Hart, who joined the Cohasset School system in 1970 as a guidance counselor, also served as director of special education and assistant superintendent/business manager before becoming superintendent.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Hart said his retiremer nothing to do with the expi of his current contract at th of this school year. He said the school board was willing to renew his contract but he felt the time had come to move on.

"It is good to have change," he said.

Hart has no immediate plans for the future. He does not rule out working again as a school administrator on a part-time or temporary basis.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

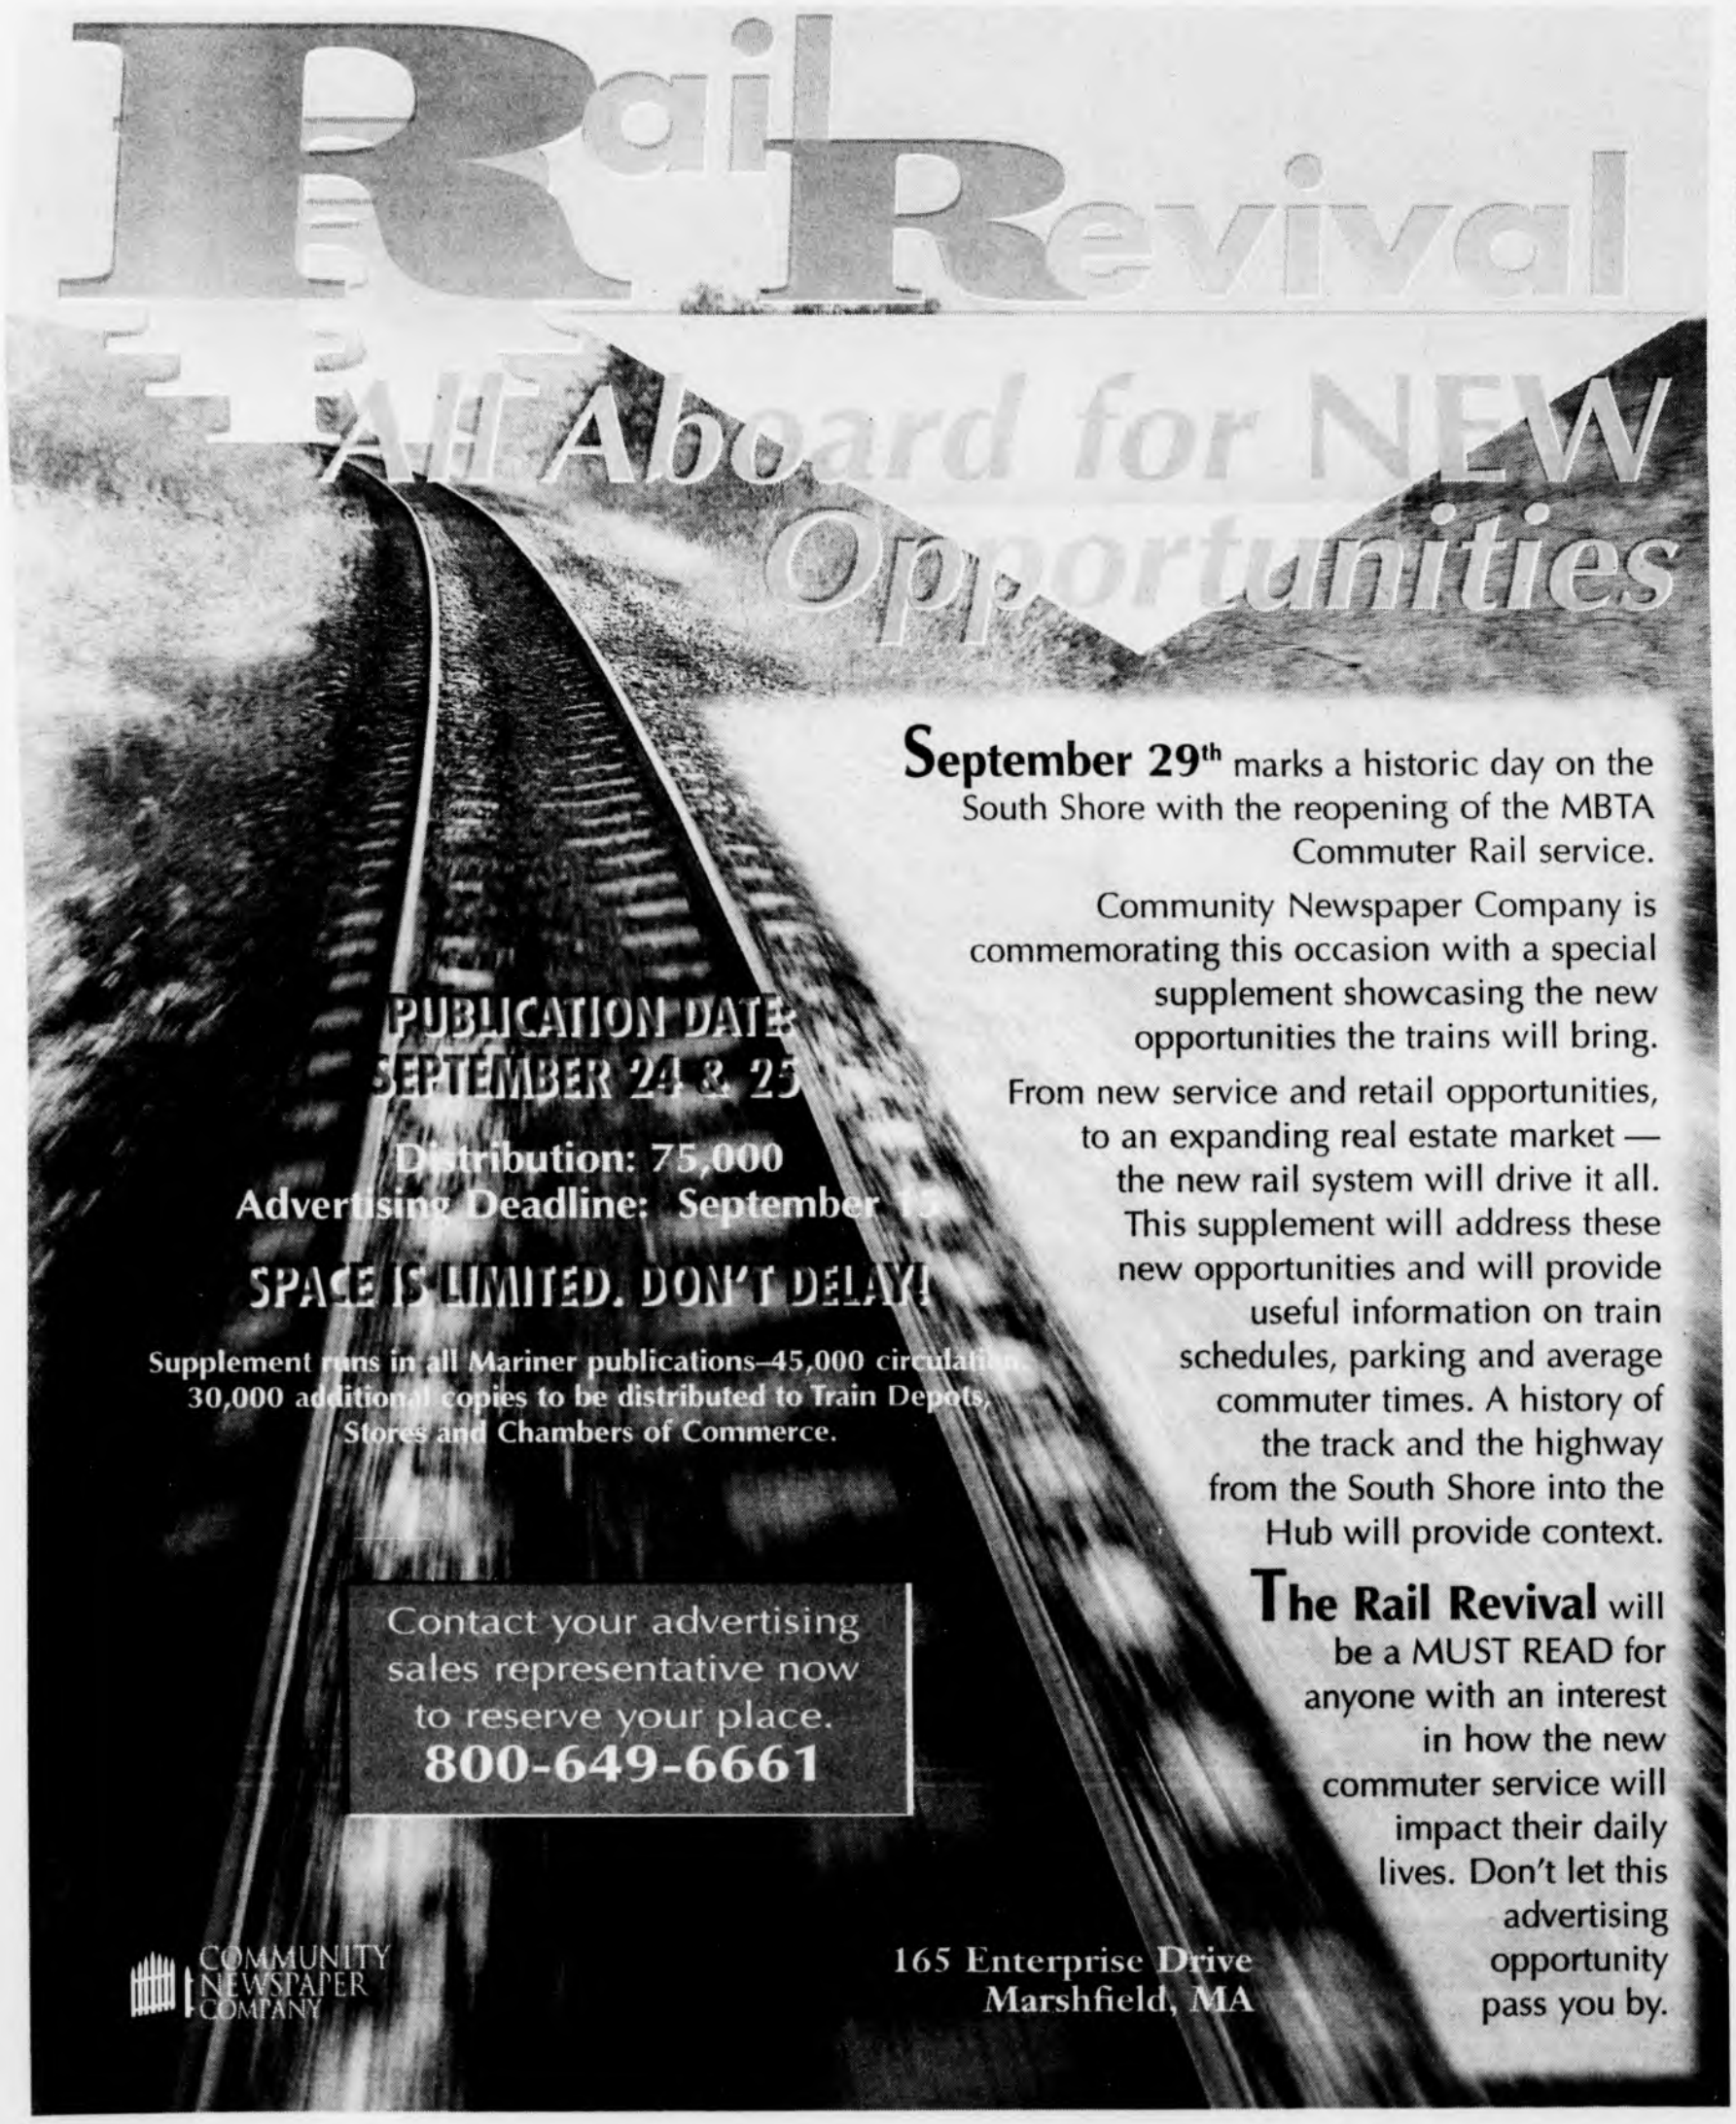
School warrant articles

The school department will ask the town for about $300,000 this fall to replace school buses, repair windows and to start installing the infrastructure necessary to put all classrooms on-line with computers.

The fall town meeting is predominately reserved for capital expenditures.

• $100,000 will be needed to start the first phase of window replacement at the Deer Hill School, Supt. Stephen Hart said. Hart explained that cracking and leaking is a problem with the aging windows.

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun asked that Hart try to have some sense of the total cost of replacing the windows before town meeting. She explained that citizens may want to know how much more will be asked for in later phases of the project.



• The school department will also ask for $100,000 to begin implemenation of a five-year technology plan in the schools. It is expected that wiring the two schools will cost about $80,000. About $20,000 would be set aside for training. The money will be used to provide a network for the Deer Hill and Middle/High School. The new Osgood School, which is under construction, will have the necessary infrastructure built in. Initially the school committee planned to ask for $65,000 because a $36,000 state grant would make up the difference. But members agreed last week to ask for the full $100,000 in order to have enough money available for hardware, training and wiring. The schools are planning a net day when volunteers would help install the wiring so the amount could be scaled downward before town meeting. Plans are for the schools to eventually interface with the town computer system.

• Two new school buses are needed this year to replace two 1987 buses with 123,000 and 149,000 miles, Supt. Stephen Hart said. The next oldest bus in the fleet was built in 1989. Hart said five buses are used every day and most days a sixth is used for field trips and other events. There are a total of six buses in the school fleet plus one minivan.

• The school department will ask town meeting for permission for borrow about $51,000 to pay for half the cost of a special needs student who needs full-time residential care. The state has set aside money for interest-free loans for school districts which find themselves with special needs students entering the system after the budget has been allocated. School committee member Ralph Kidder explained that the school board does not put reserve into the special needs budget to cover these situations.

At a recent advisory committee meeting, chairman Roger Whitley said the town should pay its share upfront to avoid another debt. But Kidder said last week he couldn't understand why the town would not take advantage of an interest-free loan.

"Why pay back with today's dollars when you can pay back with tomorrow's dollars," he said.

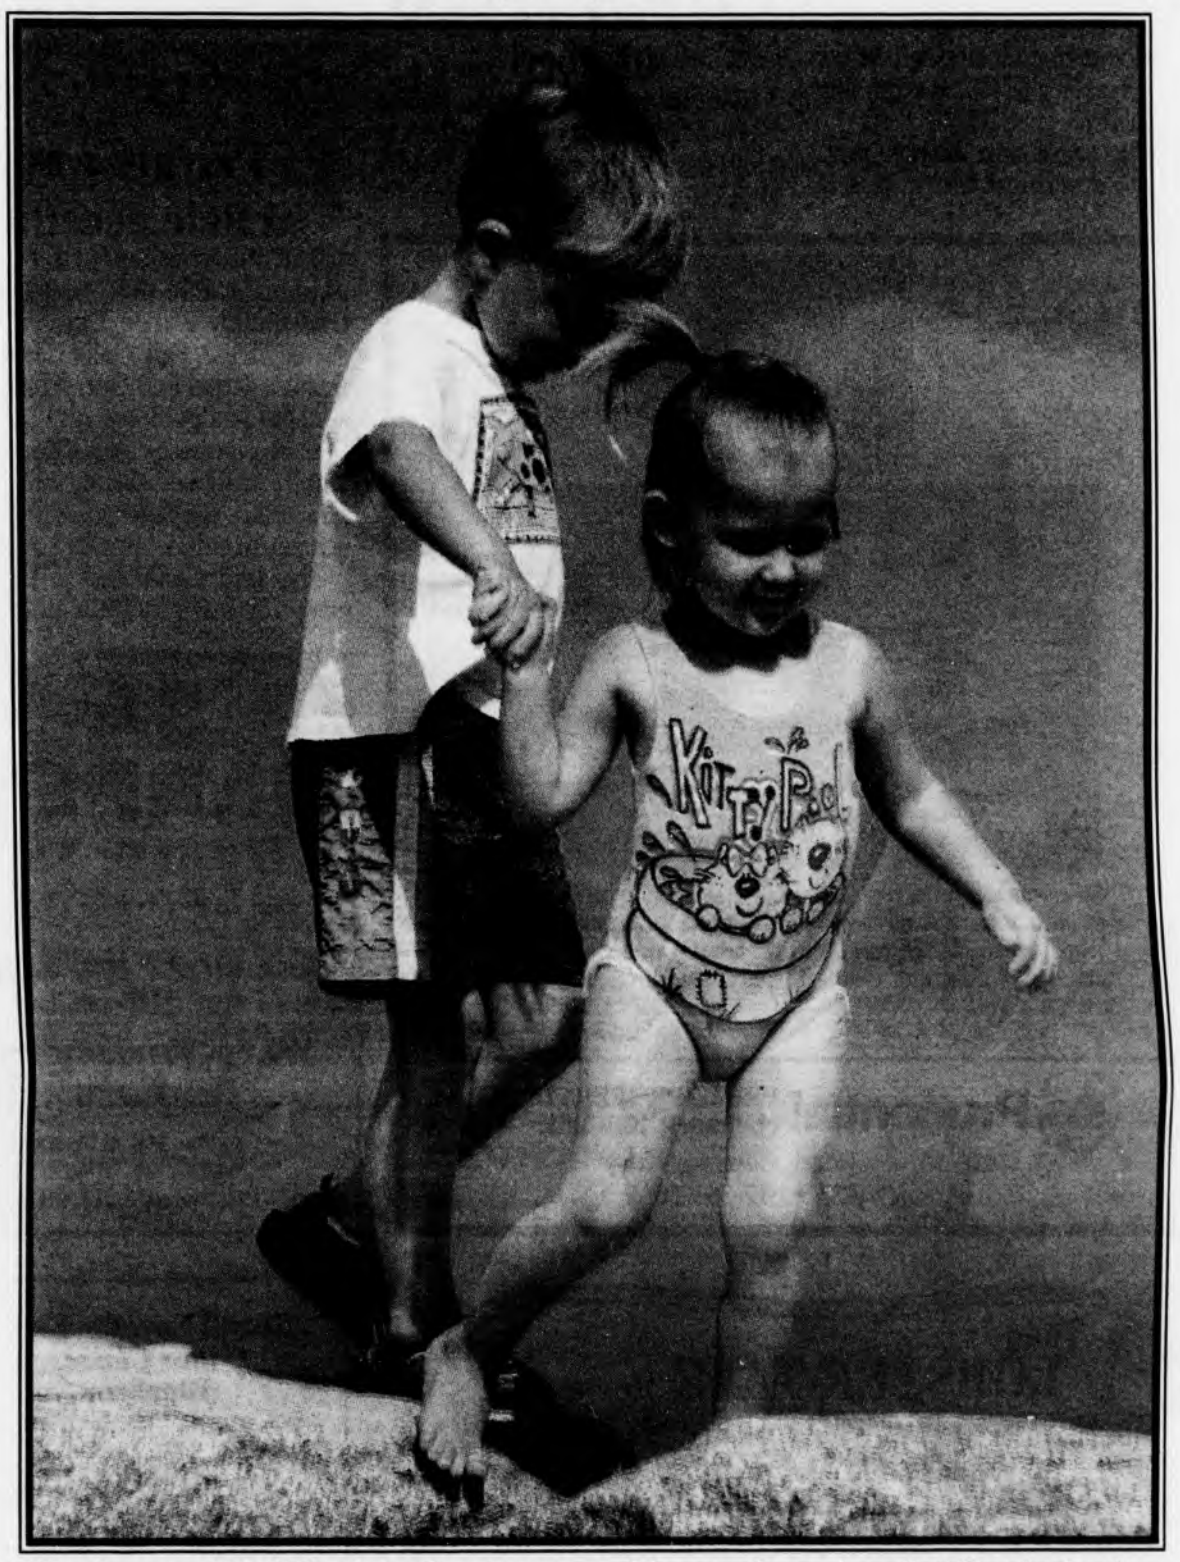
Selectman seeks to pave way for Bed & Breakfasts

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Just the thought of staying in a bed and breakfast conjures up the most romantic of images. Checkered blankets and lace curtains; hot coffee and sweet rolls; sunny rooms and friendly hosts. But behind the romantic image lies a lot of hard work by the owners of bed and breakfast establishments.

Bed and breakfasts have come to the forefront of Cohasset politics in the last few weeks. Selectman Ronnie McMorris has started lobbying for ways to make it easier for residents to open small bed and breakfast establishments in their homes.

McMorris believes that bed and breakfasts are a convenient way for retired residents to supplement their meager incomes while still living in Cohasset.



"This may be the only way for some of our residents to hang on to their family homes," McMorris said.

Cohasset bylaws allow lodging houses in residential districts for up to five people by special permit.

McMorris said she became interested when a resident, Dorothy Keville of 6 Stockbridge Road, withdrew an application to the zoning board be-

Lobster lab focus of town meeting

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset citizens will have their second chance within a year to decide if the Hagerty house should be turned into a "Lobster Lab."

It took selectmen more than an hour Monday to agree to place two articles on the Oct. 29 special town meeting warrant regarding the fate of the Victorian-era building. One asks the town to approve issuing a request for proposal (RFP) for a marine biology lab, the other asks the town to raze the building.

Complicating the matter is a citizens petition article with 120 signatures presented by Alex Koines, 380 Atlantic Ave., to see if the town will take down or move the building. Selectmen are bound to accept a citizens petition article for the warrant.

Koines, who feels public access to the harbor is crucial, said the lobster lab concept is fine but it can be located elsewhere in town. The 2.2 acre Hagerty property abuts the town's only public boat ramp.

Last week, in a surprise announcement the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, a non-profit group that renovated the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island, withdrew its plan to take on the lobster lab project.

The group said it couldn't tackle the enormous task of raising upwards of $800,000 for the project without the support of selectmen, who have been divided on the concept.

The prime mover behind the lobster lab, Kevin Ulmer, a marine biologist, said in a memo to selectmen he is in the process of forming a new non-profit corporation and will continue to push for the lab. He could not attend Monday's meeting because he was out of town.

School audit to go forward

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The school department will be under the microscope this year because selectmen want it audited.

Although there is no evidence of anything being out of order, they say it's healthy to give town departments a deeper look from time to time.

The board of health, ambulance service, and water department have been audited in the past, selectmen said.

Tony Roselli of Tucci & Roselli, which has performed the town audit for the past six years, estimated the audit selectmen are seeking will cost about $3,000.

He explained that an operational audit, which selectmen want, focuses on procedural matters in relation to finances. It would have nothing to do with the educational process in the schools.

Roselli stressed that in performing the town audit every year, which includes an overview of the school department, no incongruities have come to light.

"Nothing in six years has led us to believe there is any material problem with the school department," he said.

Roselli said in some towns his firm has found problems with hot lunches or extra-curricular actives that could indicate poor management but he didn't expect anything like that to surface.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Sewer tie-in is possible

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen this week that it is possible to hook the old DPW garage in the town parking lot up to the town sewer line.

Local teens, led by Tony Bramblett, have asked selectmen to lease the building to turn it into a teen dance hall.

"Fortunately, there is an existing stub going to that building that will allow it to be connected," he said.

Haddad explained the next step will be to determine the proposed flow from the building and then approach the sewer commission to request an actual connection. In the meantime, town health agent Joseph Godzik will determine if the existing cesspool can be used as a stopgap measure.

It is not clear at this time how much the sewer connection will cost.

No parking signs okayed

Selectmen okayed placement of two 'No Parking' signs on telephone poles in front of 77 and 81-83 Summer Street.

The Woods and Nobles families who live on Summer Street made the request because during functions at the American Legion and others in the harbor area, cars park on town-owned land in front of their houses.

The parked cars have caused water pipes to crack and can be a safety issue when vehicles are parked on both sides of the street making it too narrow for two-way traffic. The request for the signs was supported by the safety officer and police chief.

Private ways article accepted

Selectmen accepted a citizens petition article this week asking that Cedar Acres Lane, Cedar Acres Drive, Fair Oaks Lane, Old Pasture Road and Surry Drive be accepted as public ways.

Laura Doherty, 36 Cedar Acres Lane, said residents on these streets are taxpayers and they are not getting their money's worth.

She said Cedar Acres Lane is now beyond patching and is in danger of being overgrown with swamp grass.

Selectmen explained that the town cannot expend state highway funds on private ways. The town patches these roads but does not pave them. However, the town has established a private ways committee and set aside some money to start tackling upgrading the town's numerous private roads so they can be accepted by future town meetings. Unfortunately, this is a very lengthy process, they said.

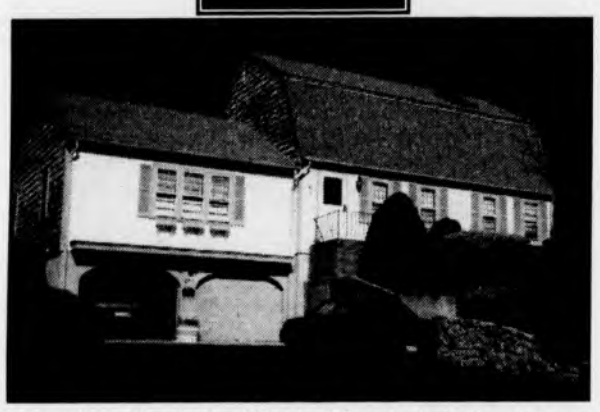
Selectman Merle Brown said each road has to be surveyed. He said town counsel has to check out each lot to determine who actually owns the roads. He said the town has to pay each time town counsel has to go to Dedham to check a record.

Brown said the town would start with the roads that would not take too much to upgrade, those without drainage problems and without rocks that would have to be removed. Brown said it can cost as much as $200,000 to bring a street up to regulation.

Selectmen directed Town Manager Mark Haddad and DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield to take a look at Cedar Acres Lane to see if anything can be done in the im- im.

Doherty said she and her neighbors are tired.

"You may see a move for some tax abatement," she said.



Haddad questioned why town counsel had to research all the deeds.

"Can't the streets be taken by eminent domain?" he asked. Haddad said he would look into the matter.

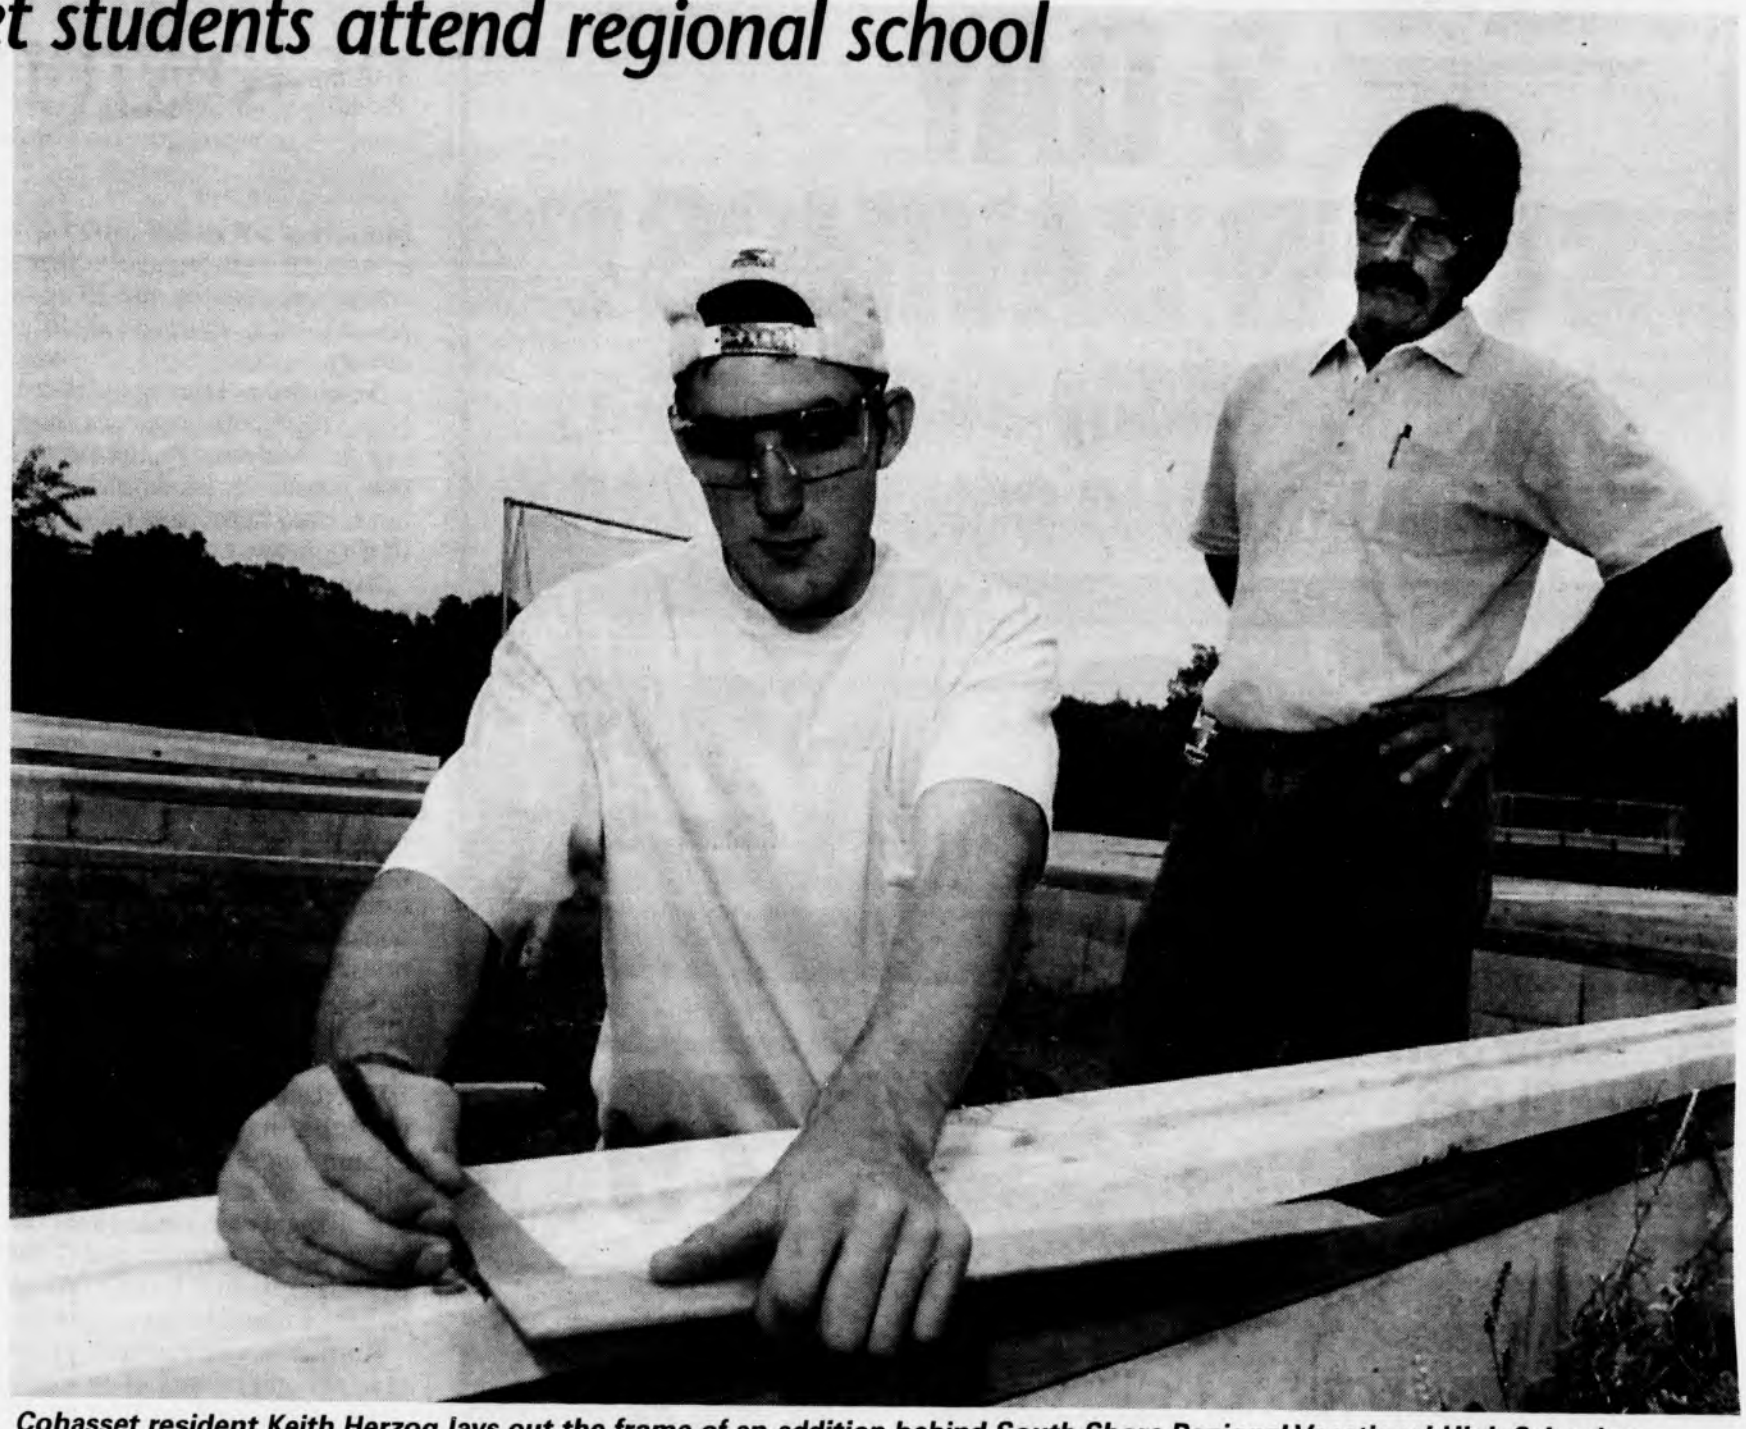
South Shore Vo-Tech offers education options

Nine Cohasset students attend regional school

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Not every student wants to be an English or math major. That's where South Shore Vocational Technical High School (Vo-Tech) in Hanover can offer an alternative to traditional high school education.



For Scituate contractor Frank R. Snow, who aspired to be a carpenter since childhood, attending Vo-Tech was the obvious choice.

"It's a great opportunity for students interested in a trade or a vocation," said Snow, a 1976 graduate of the school and now a member of the school's advisory committee. "It gave me the training I needed to start my own business."

Snow founded Frank R. Snow, Inc., a local building and remodeling contracting firm on Stockbridge Road, right after graduation. During the 21 years he has been in business, Snow said he has hired Vo-Tech graduates because he knows they are being trained well.

"The school offers a tremendous amount. (Graduating students) have all the trade background behind them and they get great training in whatever field they choose," he said.

Celebrating its 35th anniversary, South Shore Vo-Tech draws 500 students from its eight district communities on the South Shore which pay an assessment — Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hanson, Norwell, Rockland, Scituate and Whitman.Vo-Tech has its own bus fleet to transport students from their homes to school as well as extra-curricular activities. Students from towns outside of the district also attend the school, but the town must pay the students' tuition. The assessments, which vary by town, are based on a state formula.

Cohasset resident Keith Herzog lays out the frame of an addition behind South Shore Regional Vocational High School as instructor Derek Mariani looks on.

Thirty-five students from Scituate and nine students from Cohasset are currently enrolled in the trade high school.

> "It's different for everyone. I say try it and if you don't like it, go back to Cohasset High."
> — KEITH HERZOG, VO-TECH SENIOR.

"Students elect to come here because they see the opportunity to build skills toward a career as well as getting an academic education," said Vo-Tech Principal John Kosko. "When they are finished with school, they have multiple options. They can go directly into the workforce or they can go on to college."

Sixty percent of students take jobs after graduation while about 35 percent pursue higher education at technical schools such as Wentworth Institute of Technology and Northeastern University, or at culinary school, he said.

Vo-Tech offers specialized courses in the technical trade areas — most of which are not available at public high schools — including carpentry, automotive, electrical, drafting, metal fabrication/ welding and autobody. The school has also added culinary arts, cosmetology and health care programs to its curriculum. Students run a restaurant called the Brass Lantern and a beauty salon called Salon Beverly.

But for some incoming high school students, there may be a Vo-Tech "stigma," Snow pointed out.

"I think there's a stigma that maybe it's not the best place for them, that it's not going to offer them enough," he said. "They don't know enough about the programs, they haven't seen enough information and they haven't gone to the school to see it. Students and parents should take the opportunity to get all the information."

Scituate High School sent more students to Vo-Tech this year than in past years, said Guidance Director Vincent Gilarde. Usually about 25 students from Scituate attend the regional school.

"I think a lot of kids are being very realistic as far as setting their goals at a young age," he said. "Parents are being realistic, too, and encouraging their kids to consider Vo-Tech."

Gilarde said the tide has turned as far as the "stigma" Snow referred to. Two decades ago, some students might have felt a stigma about going to technical trade school but that feeling is gone now, he said.

About 85 percent of Scituate High School graduates pursue higher education. "But we still have that 15 percent who need programs like this," Gilarde said.

Cohasset High School Guidance Counselor Mary Babaian said not many students opt to attend Vo-Tech because Cohasset is an academicallyoriented community, with 95 percent of graduating seniors advancing to college.

"For those kids who go and for whom it works, it's a beneficial program for them," she said. "With a thrust on school-to-career training, it's a wonderful opportunity for them."

In past years, Cohasset has sent as many as five or six students to as few as zero kids to the vocational school.

"It really is scattered and not usually a lot of kids," Babaian said. "It has to do with the size of the school and the type of community. There are a whole host of reasons."

Vo-Tech's co-operative program also separates it from traditional high schools. During senior year, students can participate in a co-operative program that allows them to put the skills they've learned in school to work in the business world. The "employable" skills taught at Vo-Tech put students ahead of the game, Kosko said.

"It's no longer good enough to have just one aspect of education," he said. "At Vo-Tech, I think we offer the best of both worlds with a balance of technical and academic education. We tie the two together so they're relevant and have real future meaning for the students."

Students work alternating weeks for area companies like Snow's business and are paid while they learn.

"They're gaining the valuable experience of real job training," Kosko said of the co-ops that vary from electrical contractors to automotive garages.

But the benefits don't stop at the students, Kosko and Snow agreed. Employers gain reliable, responsible, well-trained workers to help with their projects. Most of the time, the co-op turns into a full-time job when the student graduates, Kosko added.

Vo-Tech senior Keith Herzog of Cohasset, a student in the carpentry program, chose the trade school over his hometown school.

"I didn't like Cohasset High," said Herzog, who has wanted to pursue a career in carpentry since age nine.

One of six Cohasset students at Vo-Tech, Herzog said he did not feel any stigma about attending the regional technical school.

"It's different for everyone," he said. "I say try it and if you don't like it, go back to Cohasset High."

Herzog hopes to some day start his own carpentry business with his own crew. Taking three classes a day in wood working and craftsmanship at Vo-Tech along with his academic subjects has helped give him an edge as he enters the workforce, he said.

"I'll have a few less years to train when I get out," said Herzog, 18. "It's been good overall. It's very strict," he said, adding that the school enforces a stringent safety dress code.

Jennifer and Nick Hazen of Scituate are carpentry students at South Shore Vo-Tech.

Lobster lab focus of town meeting

Monday is not an indication of a consensus among selectmen whose opinions on the Hagerty house/lobster lab issue still differ greatly.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who vehemently opposes moving the building to the private boat marina across the street, did not see any harm in re-issuing an RFP right away.

"Town meeting voted 2-1 to have the concept of a marine biology lab. Unfortunately the Lightkeepers withdrew. But I want to think long and hard before we take that building down," she said.

Sullivan also said her research indicated that public toilets might be a necessity at the town boat ramp and thought they could be installed in the Hagerty house and shared with the lobster lab, something that could be included in the new RFP.

Selectman Nan Roth said she favored a new RFP but with stipulations that marketing, programming and fund-raising plans be part of the submittal. She thought selectmen could develop a point system and if the proposal didn't have enough points, it would be unacceptable.

Roth said she recently spent several hours with Ulmer whom she feels has the level of detail the board was looking for in answers to its 85 or so questions but hadn't been able to communicate that.

"I'd like to give him one more chance," she said.

Diane Sullivan's move to reissue the RFP failed 2-3, with Ro[illegible] also supporting it.

Saying annual town meeting endorsed the project with the Lightkeepers' involvement, Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the matter needs to go before town meeting again.

"The town voted for the concept of the lab but they also voted for the concept of the Lightkeepers. I think they are tied together. The Lightkeepers have withdrawn, so now the proposal is different," she said.

A member of the Lightkeepers, Selectman Merle Brown, who recused himself until the Lightkeepers withrew, said he was not in favor of the lobster lab proposal because it would be regional in nature. He also objected to the plan to expand the upper floors of the building.

And Selectman Michael Sullivan, who has been against the proposal all along, said the proposal had no chance without an academic or scientific "anchor" organization.

Steve Bobo, who came to the meeting to speak for Ulmer, said he has been asked to serve on the board of the new corporation which will seek non-profit status.

Bobo, who agreed with Diane Sullivan that some public washrooms and perhaps lockers would be beneficial at the site, pointed out that the Lightkeepers had $25,000 in hand to stablilize the building and $100,000 pledged in grants. This money will have to be reapplied for under the new corporation.

School audit to go forward

"I haven't seen that in part of our annual audit," he said.

Roselli said the audit could range from $2,500 to $20,000 depending on the depth but suggested a seven-day audit would be suitable.

"If after a week, there is a suggestion of serious problems we can go further," he said.

The town appropriated $10,000 for the annual audit which is expected to cost about $7,500. The balance will be used for the school audit with any additional funds coming from the reserve account.

Roselli said selectmen shouldn't be surprised if his firm doesn't find anything.

"This town is well run when compared to other cities and towns," he said.

When the issue was initially raised last month, school committee member Joseph McElroy said an audit can be productive.

Last week, the school committee said reports it is against an audit are premature. Members said they were interested in discussing the matter with selectmen. At Monday's selectmen's meeting, Supt. Stephen Hart, Kidder and school committee members Kathy Ofsthun and Rick Shea did not have objections to the audit.

Benefit dinner fashion show

Friends of the Mary Martha Learning Center will be presenting their Third Annual Dinner Fashion Show, with the addition of a Silent Auction this year. Adults and children from the South Shore will be modeling clothing and accessories from Talbots.

The event is slated for Tuesday, Oct. 7, from 6 to 9:30 p.m. at the South Shore Country Club, 274 South St., Hingham. Tickets are $35 per person and can be obtained by calling Alice Lawless at 749-9595. Tickets are also available at Fleming's in Cohasset village.

All proceeds from the benefit will be given to the Mary Martha Learning Center (a residential educational facility for homeless mothers and their children) mortgage fund.

Zoning board okays communication tower

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Sprint Spectrum received permission from the zoning board of appeals last week to erect a flagpole-style antenna behind an auto repair business on Route 3A.

Members of the zoning board granted approval for Ken Eaves, the owner of Foreign Auto Repair, to lease land at 149 King St. to Sprint so the company can to erect 123-feet monopole and equipment pad.

The zoning board had closed the Sprint hearing last June, but reopened it on June 25 because Sprint changed the proposed antenna design from a lattice-style to a flagpole design.

Sprint needs the new tower to provide uninterrupted cellular telephone service to drivers on Route 3A.

The land for the proposed antenna is in a light industrial zone with a 45-foot restriction on the height of any structure. The antenna is allowed in a light industrial zone with a special permit for height.

Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said Sprint changed the design because of fears that the zoning board was prepared to reject the lattice design.

"This is just such a significant change in design that we felt we could not consider it without public comment," DeGiacomo said.

DeGiacomo said the zoning board was convinced that Sprint did everything it could to mitigate the adverse effects of the tower.

"We were convinced that the applicant through the amended application had made all the changes they could," DeGiacomo said. "We were also cognizant of the Federal Telecommunications Act, which restricts our power to deny communications towers and antennas."

The tower will be placed 200-feet back from the road, and there are no houses within 500-feet.

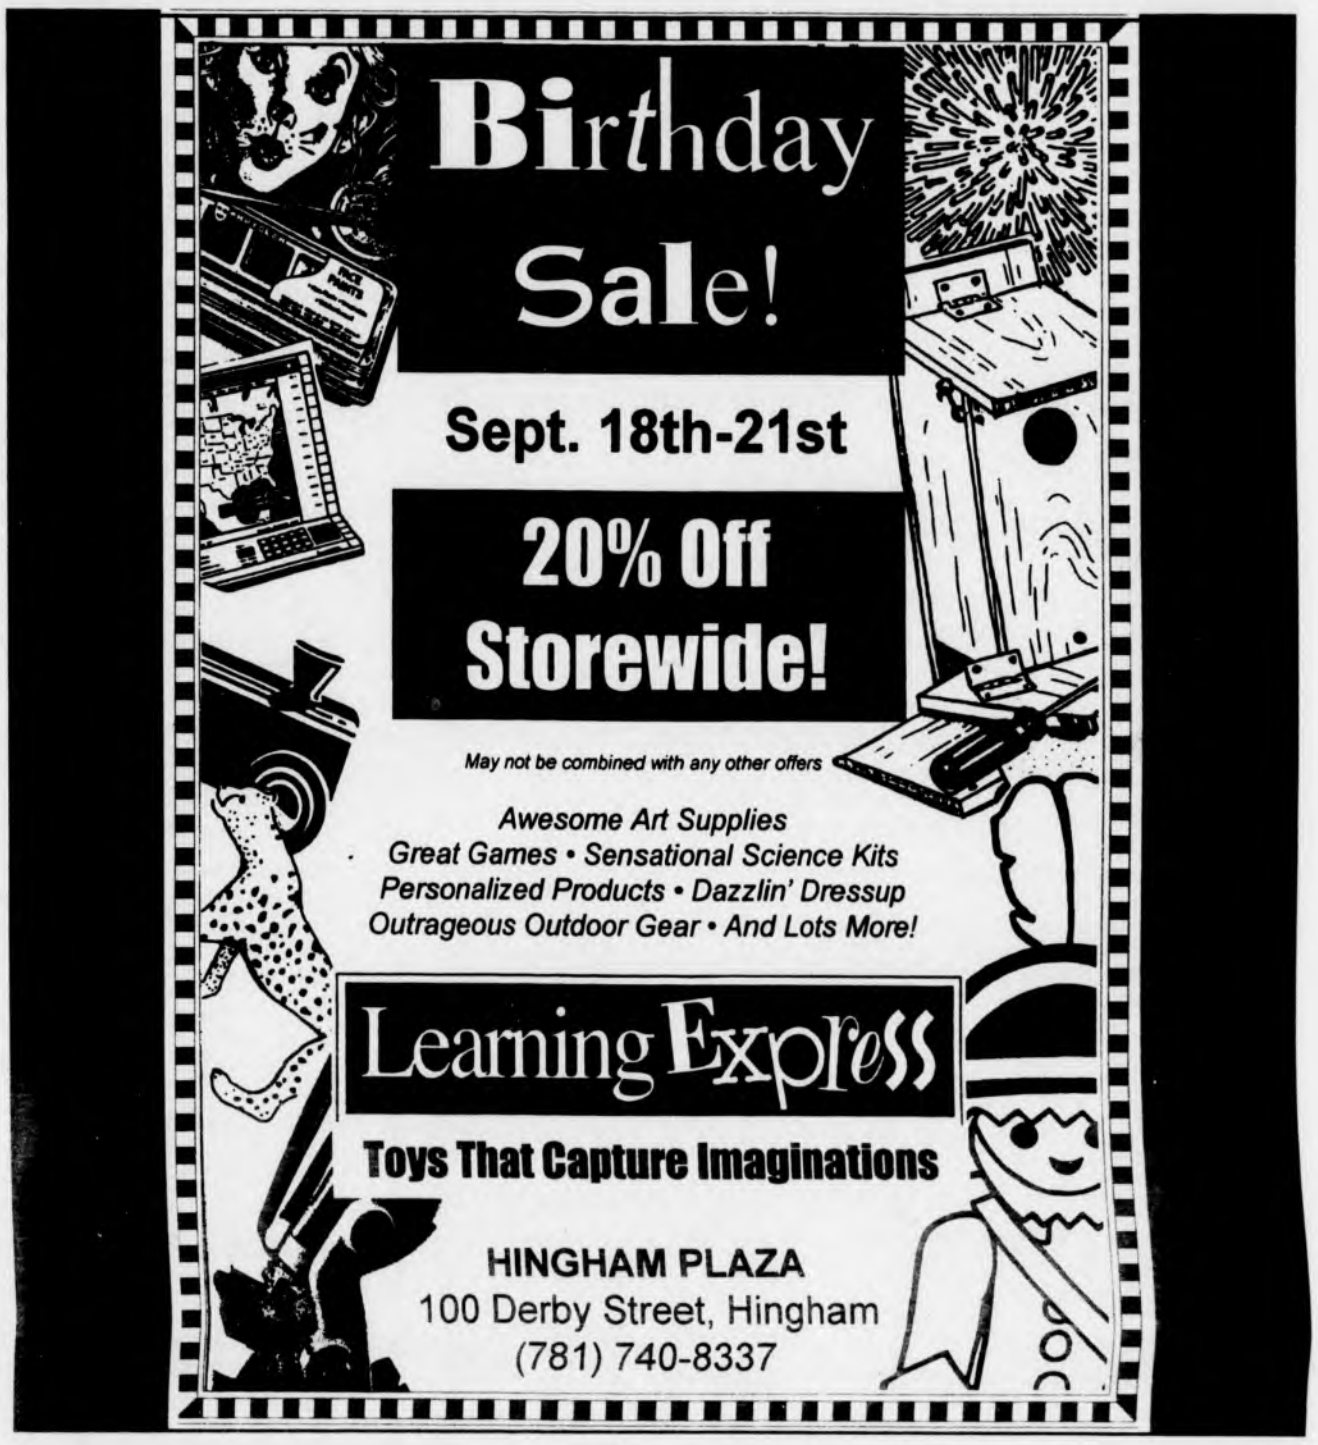
In its decision, the zoning board indicated that the tower is unmanned and will not generate traffic, congestion, hazards to pedestrians, pollution or sewage.

The zoning board also placed several restrictions on the license.

If the tower is not used for 12 consecutive months, Sprint must remove it immediately. No other antennas or attachments may be affixed to the tower. All unregistered cars at Ken's Foreign Auto must be removed as a condition of the permit.

Public reading packet at school department

In an effort to promote communcation, the school department will provide a public reading packet and make if available to local citizens, the school board said last week.



The packet, which will be available in the superintendent's office, will contain recent correspondence and other documents. There will also be an index of documents including items such as teacher contracts and school handbooks, so people will know how to access those.

Supt. Stephen Hart pointed out that his office has provided information when requested. But the school committee said having a packet will make those documents more accessible to the public.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark at 383-9900 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays.

MBTA may lose bid to dismiss train lawsuit

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Federal District Court Magistrate Robert Collings has recommended that the MBTA's motion to dismiss Hingham's lawsuit challenging the transit authority be denied.

Last summer Hingham filed the lawsuit, accusing the MBTA of trying to skirt historic preservation and federal environmental laws by not using federal money to restore the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad.

The argument revolves around the fact that part way through the project, the MBTA changed tracks and decided to use state money to fund the project instead.

In December, then-chairman of the MBTA James Kerasiotes filed a motion to dismiss the lawsuit.

On June 19, the MBTA and the Town of Hingham debated their arguments face-to-face in front of Collings at the Federal District Court in Boston.

> "The Town of Hingham is saying that's an illegal segmentation of the project. This project has been irrevocably federalized by virtue of the amount of federal money which has already been put into the line as a whole."
> — HINGHAM SELECTMAN KATHERINE REARDON

The town has been awaiting his decision since that time.

According to Hingham Selectman Katharine Reardon, Judge Reginald Lindsay initially referred the case to Collings for his recommendation.

While it is only a recommendation, both Reardon and Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan said it is highly unlikely that Lindsay will overturn Collings' determination.

In his remarks regarding his decision, Collings states: "It is further recommended . . . that if the plaintiff (Town of Hingham) wishes to proceed with the improper segmentation theory advanced at the hearing, that the plaintiff must file an amended complaint in which this theory is more fully and specifically delineated."

Reardon said that while the MBTA is accepting federal money for the Plymouth and Middleboro lines and the main line into Boston, the transit authority is saying the Braintree to Greenbush portion is a separate project.

"The Town of Hingham is saying that's an illegal segmentation of the project," Reardon said. "This project has been irrevocably federalized by virtue of the amount of federal money which has already been put into the line as a whole."

Reardon discussed Collings' recommendation with Andrea Ferster, attorney for the Town of Hingham for the Greenbush project.

"She was very positive," Reardon said. "Her assessment is basically that if we can prove the facts relating to segmentation — what happened and when, and where does the line start and finish — then we'll be in a position to prove segmentation is illegal."

Reardon said that information is "not difficult to demonstrate."

If Lindsay accepts Collings' recommendation, the next step would to "move to make our case" by virtue of the lawsuit, Reardon said.

Macmillan calls Collings' determination a "big victory" for the town.

However, MBTA Spokesman Brian Pedro called Collings recommendation a "purely procedural matter."

"It's not a loss for us or a victory for anyone," he said. "We were just trying to save the Commonwealth some time and money (by asking that the case be dismissed)."

Pedro said the lead counsel for the MBTA told him Collings' recommendation is "no big deal."

"We're confident the Greenbush project will proceed full steam ahead," he said. "We will continue to fight the issue out in court."

However, Macmillan said of the 22-page document released by Collings Wednesday, "The federal court magistrate seems to have adopted our arguments in their entirety."

"It determines what we've been saying all along — that the governor was poorly advised by the MBTA, who was poorly advised by their consultant, Sverdrup Corp., that the MBTA could evade federal environmental laws by this device," Macmillan said. "Their efforts have been stymied."

In addition, Macmillan said, the Army Corps of Engineers is taking a very extensive look at all the facts.

"I believe the corps will be recommending within a week or two that the MBTA further study the alternatives to rail restoration," he said.

However, Nancy Buckley of the Coastal Coalition, a grassroots organization which is seeking alternatives to rail restoration, said, "Gov. Cellucci should abandon the project in order to seriously initiate transportation solutions in order to relieve highway traffic congestion. This lawsuit could take years."

Register to vote for special town meeting

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting or election day, may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before each town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists.

If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

The last day to register to vote for the Special Town Meeting, Monday, Oct. 27, is Friday, Oct. 17. The Town Clerk's office will be open from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. Mail-in registration forms are available from the Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library. This form may be mailed or hand-delivered to the clerk's office, but must be received or postmarked on or before Oct. 17.

Concerned taxpayers to meet

The Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers (CCT) have invited taxpayer groups from Hingham and Scituate to attend a meeting from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m., Thursday, Sept. 25, in Bancroft Hall, at the Lightkeepers' Residence on Government Island, Cohasset.

Citizens of Hull and other towns who are not members of formerly established taxpayer groups are also welcome to attend. There is no charge for this event, but because seating is limited to 80, it is requested that you make reservations to attend by calling Cohasset Concerned Taxpayer Membership chairman Florence Jerome at 383-2139 or CCT vice president Lee Jenkins at 383-0024. Please ask for directions to the lighthouse at that time.

After a "surprise" speaker addresses the group, representatives from the taxpayers' groups will talk about their tribulations and achievements.

Refreshments will be served.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

We send birthday greetings to three special people this week — Nancy Snowdale, Fran Mitchell and Arthur Somerville all have September birthdays, hope that they were happy ones and that you have healthy, happy years to follow!

EVENTS AT BEECHWOOD

The Beechwood Congregational Church has lots of events to share with us this week. Their harvest supper tops the list, it will he held Sept. 25 at 6:30 p.m. at the church. That is a guaranteed delicious supper, call 383-1298 for tickets.

BAZAAR, OCT. 18

On Oct. 18, the church will hold a bazaar — this used to be held in December, along with the Village Fair, but they have decided to try this idea instead. We think it's a good one, we'll fill you in on the details as they come in (wonder if they will have the yummy, pretty beach glass candy? Or, the wonderful chowder?)

BEECHWOOD BELL CHOIR

The Beechwood Bell Choir is also going to perform at the fourth annual Bell Jubilee baby shower, sponsored by the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Five different choirs will be performing at St. Christine's Parish House, Route 3A, Marshfield. The date will be Oct. 5, the time from 2 to 4 p.m. Enjoy!

ANTIQUE SHOW

Finally, mark on your calendar right now Nov. 8. That is the date for this year's antique show sponsored by the church. It will be held at the Deer Hill School, and it is always an adventure in antiques. Many dealers, many "finds."

DRIVERS FOR SENIORS

We have a plea for help for our Cohasset senior citizens — they desperately need drivers for their regular van and the handicap van.

Please call 383-9112 if you can assist in any way — as the Cohasset Elder Affairs put it, "Be someone for SOMEBODY!"

DEAN'S LIST AT SUFFOLK

Suffolk University sent a news release for us to be sure that you all know that Judy C. Carey and Diane N. Saldi both have been named to the dean's high honor list for the spring semester of the 1996-1997 academic year. Congratulations to both of you!

THANK YOU

As many of you know, last summer the Sisters of Saint Joseph held a fund-raiser for the Saint Joseph Villa Retreat Center. They would like to extend their heart-felt thanks to all of you for making it a success — the planning committee, the staff of the South Shore Music Circus, The Sisters of Saint Joseph of Boston, the parishes of the Archdiocese of Boston, their business patrons, newspaper and radio personalities, their many friends and neighbors, and, especially, all of you who purchased dinner, concert and raffle tickets.

Open house for Doctor Sceery is Sunday

Dr. Robert T. Sceery, who is retiring, will be honored at a special open house on Sunday.

Dr. Robert T. Sceery, 77, who is retiring after nearly 45 years as a pediatrician in Cohasset, will be honored at a special open house from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday at the Lightkeepers Residence.

A young doctor with a growing family, Sceery came to Cohasset in 1953. Sceery, who had completed his residency at Massachusetts General Hospital, knew Dr. Leroy Eldredge, who had started and pediatrics practice in Hingham. Eldredge persuaded Sceery to come to the South Shore.

Although Sceery has operated his practice at three locations in town: 109 N. Main St., 89 Ripley Road and 95 Atlantic Ave., his devotion to his profession never changed. His willingness to make house calls even in the middle of the night has secured his place in the hearts of many families.

Since 1956, Sceery has been the Cohasset school doctor. He served on the board of health in the early 1970s and help lead the fight to get the town "sewered." Over the years, he has been a familiar figure at town meetings espousing causes such as the onset of zoning laws and last year, the proposal for a new elementary school.

The affection and respect so many hold for Sceery led to his being selected as the 1995 Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year.

Register for Appalachia Service Project

On Sunday evening, Sept. 21, Appalachia Service Project '98 will officially begin with an information and registration meeting to be held at the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset. As they enter their 11th year, the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project is planning yet another wonderful and inspiring adventure to the Appalachian region of our country to spend a week doing home repair projects for poor and needy families. Once again this year there are a limited number of slots available: 48 high school students (10-12th grade — 9th-graders will be placed on a waiting list and added after March 1 as openings become available), 12 young adults (18-24) and 24 adults advisors — making a grand total of 84. Signing on early (with the $50, non-refundable registration fee) is the best guarantee of having a place on the ASP '98 trip. The "tentative" dates for the 1998 trip are June 27 to July 5. Please consider joining for a remarkable and memorable experience. For questions and information, please call Rev. Gary Ritts at 383-0345.

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

Ah, September.

Already the leaves are tinged with red and pumpkins grow plumper by the moment. Once again, school is in session. For the next nine months, Norwell's most precious asset — its children — will wait along the curbside for that big yellow bus or wend their way along our narrow, winding roads.

The bad news is that students will share our roads with commuter traffic. That combination contains opportunities for real disaster if drivers are anything less than eternally alert and vigilant.

Too many commuters let their speedometers creep five or 10 miles past the posted speed limit, gambling with safety rules to save or gain a minute or two.

Children can be so unpredictable. Despite constant reminders from parents and school teachers, youngsters forget to look both ways. They dart out into the street. They play tag at the bus stop. They lack the experience to judge the speed of an oncoming car.

Do you drink coffee? Fiddle with the radio buttons? Light up a cigarette? Chat on a cell phone? Your momentary inattention could cause a tragedy that will ripple through our small, close-knit community leaving a lifetime of regret and heartbreak in its wake.

Before you climb behind the wheel of your car, ask yourself whether anything you might do or any time you might save is worth the life of a child. Remember too, that as the earth moves past the autumnal equinox — Sept. 22 — the daylight hours grow shorter. It's in the dim light of almost day and nearly night that most accidents occur.

It's up to all of us to make sure our children get to school and home again safely. Drive like your life — and theirs — depends on it. They do.

School board clarifies meeting's purpose

To the Editor:

On Saturday, Sept. 20, the school department will hold a Strategic Planning meeting at the Lightkeepers residence. A similar meeting, held in October, 1995, began a planning process which culminated with the issuance of the School Department's present strategic plan. This Saturday's planning meeting is designed to discuss "progress on the stated objectives of the plan, and to modify those objectives where warranted," which is the first of the school department's goals for the 1997-1998 year. The list of invited attendees mirrors the attendees at the 1995 planning meeting and includes: a professional educator/facilitator; two School Committee members; the Superintendent and six school administrators (including the three principals); six School Council members (including three teachers and three parents); two high school students; the PSO President; a representative of the Teachers Association; and one member each from the Advisory Board, the Board of Selectmen and the School Facilities Committee.

A member of the press and several town residents have inquired about attending this meeting. We have declined this request because the meeting is designed as a working session, not as a public meeting. The session is designed to get all 23 participants, who are directly involved in the operations of the schools, to comment critically and openly on our present direction and to brainstorm about possible future directions. To do so in a productive and organized manner in only six hours will be a significant challenge.

Importantly, the school department also has as a 1997-1998 goal to "use the strategic planning process to solicit community input." The ideas and suggestions coming from this meeting will be shared in draft form with the community, and community input will be integrated into the final updated strategic plan. In addition, any member of the community with suggestions relevant to Saturday's meeting may call Ralph Kidder or me prior to the meeting. Good ideas are always welcome!

It's time to sell Hagerty house, reader says

To the Editor:

It's time to reconsider the idea of selling the house on the Hagerty property since one of the reasons the town voted not to sell the house was the prospect of its use as a Lobster Lab.

As I've stated in the past, the town was persuaded to buy the Hagerty Property by a brochure which said the property had a house which could be sold for up to $200,000, thus implying that the house could be sold to help defray the outrageous cost of this property. It's time now to fulfill that promise to the taxpayers.

The house cannot be moved (it's too big to move up narrow Parker Avenue), and it should not be demolished for it would make someone a lovely home.

Selling the house is a win-win-win situation: We get some money to help with the land purchase, the house goes back on the tax rolls, and someone gets a nice home. How can you beat that?

LIFE IN COHASSET Kelly & Robert Ziff

Some tidbits about Cohasset

Much has happened in the nearly 400 years since Cohasset was discovered and there are some interesting facts about the community today that may be little known by its residents. Any information concerning how many people live here, what their taxes are, the size of any dwelling, how many dogs they own, their street address, or virtually any other piece of pertinent data about any property can be found at the Town Hall. It's all on public record. All this can be quite useful to potential home owners or to telemarketers who want to target a specific market of consumer.

Originally, the land the town sits upon was used by Indians. Although the Indians didn't believe in the ownership of land, they named it Cohasset, which means "a long rocky place." When England began colonizing North America, Cohasset, with only a handful of permanent residents, was founded as part of Hingham in 1614 by Captain John Smith. When Cohasset split from Hingham in 1770, it took the Indian name for the 10.06 square mile land mass of the town. Over the next four centuries, the town has evolved into what it is today.

Here are some interesting facts.

Of the 7,873 people that reside here, there are 910 males under the age of 17 and 851 females under that same age, bringing the total to 1,761. There are 5,253 registered voters in the town, 1,108 are democrats; 1,136 are republicans and 2,999 are undecided. The residents of Cohasset who are 17 and over are 2,888 males and 3,244 females, bringing the total to 6,112. Over the past two years, the town's population has grown by 571.

The total number of dwelling units are 2,747, of which, 80 percent are resident owned and 20 percent are rentals. In 1996, the median home sale price was $259,000, and the median condo price, $198,000. The average household income is $62,933, while 2.2 percent of our citizens live in poverty. The average water/sewer bill is $300. The town's budget is $16.8 million dollars per year.

Out of approximately 400 registered dogs in Cohasset, it is not surprising that the vast majority of them are pure bred, and it may also be said that the dog's registration number carries with it a certain amount of a status. For example, Mary Foley, who owns a black Lab named Way, has license tag number "1." This can be compared to an automobile whose license plate reads 100 or something to that effect. Then again on the other hand, Paul Barry, whose spaniel, Shamus' license number reads 9786, could be compared to an automobile license plate that reads "946T3W." Is there a way to get custom dog tags for your dog? The answer to this question is no, town hall no longer assigns custom dog tag numbers. However, at one time that was done, and according to the town clerk's office, "All the good numbers have already been taken, anyway!"

There are 785 residents per square mile, with the median age of 38.6. Just 13 percent of the town's citizens are senior citizens. Nearly one quarter of the population is under 18. College graduates ring in at 66 percent, while currently 86 percent of Cohasset High School graduates are continuing with four more years of education. The median SAT score is 1031. There are 278 students enrolled in grades 9 through 12, with an average grade size of 69.5.

As Cohasset and the rest of the world prepare for the end of the millennium and the beginning of the next, it is easy to lose sight of where we came from. Just a century ago, there was nobody like Howard Stern, nothing like CNN, no information highway, and for someone who lived in Boston, a horse and perhaps a carriage was required for the trip out to Cohasset. Despite the difficulty, turn-of-the-century summer homes were built along the shore, taking advantage of the Atlantic's beauty, many of which are still intact today. So, it is not hard to imagine a Cohasset of 100 years, or even 200 years ago.

Cooperative spirit lacking

To the Editor:

Watching the selectmen's discussion Sept. 15 is further evidence that the Lightkeepers made the correct decision in withdrawing from the Lobster Lab project. Such an ambitious and difficult project is feasible only if the town officials are capable of grasping the vision and capable of seeing concerns simply as problems to be solved cooperatively, rather than the subject of endless nit-picking and punitive lease provisions.

Michael Sullivan's assertion that we couldn't answer the latest round of time consuming and needless questions is false; we certainly could have. However, enough is enough. The Lightkeepers' organization is not a mighty corporation with deep pockets and a large staff trying to foist an odious factory on the town. It is a group of fellow citizens trying to do something constructive for the town with no staff and with limited reserves of time and energy.

Are some selectmen incapable of learning from our withdrawal? In discussing a new RFP, it was suggested that even more strictures be added, more appropriate to some huge carpet bagging corporation than to a group of fellow citizens trying to benefit the town. The proponent of such discouraging nonsense should make up her mind whether she wants a lab, whether she wants some group to respond, or whether she wants to smother the initiative.

The lab was intended to be a free-standing extra-curricular facility, something like the Art Center. But some uncomprehending people persist in a campaign to make it a mere adjunct to the high school.

The original lightkeepers' project worked, not only because of Joe McElroy's dedication and skill at mobilizing support, but because the town was helpful, flexible, and applied no pressure to conform to schedule or cost estimates. The town wisely assumed that the citizens were mature enough to do the best they could, and in the public interest. Management was left to the proponents.

To attract and hold the dedication and energy needed to implement this ambitious project, the selectmen would need to reveal that finally they have grasped the vision, are willing to put concerns into perspective relative to the ultimate promise, are willing to relegate the complex of problems to the status of simply tasks to be undertaken by cooperative effort rather than stumbling blocks, are willing to assign the lease similar to the original Lightkeepers' lease to a non-profit group of local citizens, are willing to believe that the fund-raising and construction-managing proponents are responsible adults, and are willing to direct town counsel and town manager to be cooperative rather than extrapolate "duty" into hostility.

Diane Sullivan and former selectman Peter Pratt deserve the community's respect for understanding and supporting the concept. Ronnie McMorris deserves credit for working to get the RFP issued, and for filtering out the most impractical ideas.

Our statement to the selectmen Sept. 9 urged that Kevin Ulmer's visionary and constructive concept somehow be kept alive and ultimately implemented. The Lightkeepers rescued it rather than let its magnificent potential be lost, but expected sharing of the vision. Part of fiduciary responsibility is understanding the vision of proposals; the positives as well as the negatives.

The July 18 proposal included a building arrangement that would serve the community far better than the original, and the improvement should be supported in future actions by the selectmen. It should be left to the citizens group to develop any compromises to design or schedule that may be dictated by the realities of funding acquisition. Such changes should be reviewed in a cooperative rather than punitive spirit by town officials.

Concerns about CHL expansion

Dear Secretary Cox:

I am writing to remind you of my concerns of the proposed expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill in the Town of Cohasset. You may recall that each time I meet you anywhere, this is one of the subjects which we discuss in our conversations.

The citizens of Cohasset who have opposed any expansion of this landfill have asked me to write to you in regard to the new expansion plans. My constituents and I are concerned about our water supply and the wetlands involved in the area. The new plans will also add a new dimension, due to the fact the height will increase considerably and could possibly be seen from Route 3A.

Please carefully review all that you have received in the past regarding Cohasset Heights Landfill expansion plans, as well as the remarks sent to you by the concerned citizens of my district on the newly proposed expansion plans.

Thank you for your time and consideration. Many thanks for your support of all of my district in the past.

Mary Jeanette Murray
State Representative

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray sent this letter to Trudy Cox, secretary of environmental affairs, regarding CHL's proposed vertical expansion.

Hedlund responds to landfill plan

Dear Secretary Cox:

I am writing to express my great concern for the proposed vertical expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL). Furthermore, I would like to express my support for residents of Cohasset in their petition to require CHL to prepare and submit to MEPA an Environmental Impact Report (EIR) or other supplemental documentation on this proposed expansion.

Last evening (Sept. 14), I had the opportunity to meet with a number of concerned residents of Cohasset and the South Shore to discuss this proposal. Additionally, my office has received a number of telephone calls and letters expressing their objection to the proposed expansion. In my discussion with residents, many of their concerns focused on the environmental impacts the expansion could have, including the potential effect to the drinking water supply and to the surrounding wetlands. Additionally, many residents expressed concern for the visual impact that the expansion would have.

As you are aware, it is believed that in the past, CHL has been responsible for contamination to area groundwater, damage to wetlands, and generating dangerous levels of underground gas. Furthermore, it is reported that CHL's existing storm control structures are inadequate, thus resulting in much of the contamination to the groundwater and surrounding wetlands.

Based on the aforementioned issues, I believe that it is prudent to require CHL to submit an EIR to MEPA, in order to determine if there are any potential negative impacts to the expansion. I am certain that you will also give these issues every consideration and I look forward to working with you on this issue.

Raffle heralds opening of 'new' Cohasset Consignment Shop

Consignment Shop manager Andy Merrill holds the bag for Polly Logan who drew the winner in the raffle which was part of the shop's grand re-opening celebration at Shaw's Plaza.

Staff photo/Mary Ford

Polly Logan, long-time supporter of the Cohasset Consignment Shop, was on hand at the shop Saturday to draw the name of the winner of a Getaway Weekend for Two at the Sheraton Boston Hotel & Towers.

The Sept. 13 drawing celebrated the grand re-opening of Shaw's and the rebuilt shopping mall which includes the "new"enlarged Consignment Shop. The lucky winner was Claire M. Duncklee of Rockland.

The Consignment Shop, established in 1953, sells clothing, furs and small bric-a-brac items. The shop is a non-profit organization, staffed by volunteers, with all the proceeds going to the Social Service League which serves Cohasset and surrounding towns. The shop helps pay for the Social Service League's pneumonia shots, counseling and support groups, new friends program, nursing services and "Keep Well Clinics" that include blood pressure screening, weight, blood sugar testing and nutritional education.

Consignments are accepted from 10-11:30 a.m., Monday through Friday. The shop is open year round Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. To volunteer, call manager Andy Merrill at 383-0687.

More than 125 Consignment Shop volunteers were honored at a luncheon at Kimballs by the Sea on Sept. 16.

SPORT-UTILITY VEHICLES

▶In recent years, the buying public has embraced to a remarkable degree the sport-utility vehicle segment of the light-truck market. Between the years 1990 and 1995, sport-utility sales climbed by 48 percent. Customers now purchase more than 1.7 million of these vehicles each year, with sales expected to reach 2 million by the end of the decade. A large degree of the popularity of SUVs has to do with their off-road capabilities. Most sport-utility buyers choose 4WD models even if they seldom venture off the road because 4WD eliminates the tire slippage in rain and snow for surefooted grip. SUVs also have more towing capacity than the typical car, and their tall ride height imparts a sense of security to drivers.

▶Sports utility vehicles and light trucks can add all sorts of fun to your life because of the versatility they offer. For Your Health

Cholesterol is key to shaking heart disease risk

Don't contribute to alarming statistics

By Julie Wieden
CORRESPONDENT

If the hot-dog-and-ice-cream-filled days of summer are finally beginning to show on your fall waistline, hold on! That extra pudge around your middle could be revealing more about you than just your summertime fare of choice.

Heart disease claimed the lives of more than 734,000 Americans in 1994, and it continues to be the leading cause of death in the U.S., according to National Center for Health Statistics (NCHS) reports. It's also the leading cause of death for all men ages 45 to 64 years and 65 years and over, and for all women ages 65 years and over.

While the numbers are staggering, and they continue to climb, it seems that many Americans are just not taking the warning signs seriously enough.

Weymouth's South Shore Hospital staff cardiologist Charles E. Gaughan, MD,FACC, says that "over 13 million Americans today suffer from cardiovascular diseases. This includes coronary and cerebral-vascular diseases, which can result in either a heart attack or stroke.

"On top of that," Gaughan adds, "there's another 4.5 million people who have congestive heart failure, or a weakened heart as a result of coronary artery disease."

So what is it that puts people at risk for coronary heart disease?

Gaughan believes the hearty American "farmer-type diet" is to blame, along with the lack of regular exercise. High-fat diets can lead to elevated blood cholesterol levels, high blood pressure and obesity, all of which are cardiac risk factors. Lack of exercise and smoking increase cholesterol levels as well. Other risk factors include diabetes, stress, a family history of coronary heart disease, male gender and age (males over 45 years or females over 55 years, or post-menopausal).

So what does the doctor prescribe? Medication for those factors which can't be controlled, such as family history or gender, and modification for those that can.

IN CONTROL

Gaughan says a "Type 1" diet is a good way to control high blood cholesterol levels and weight — "30 percent fat, less than 10 percent saturated fat, and less than 300 milligrams of cholesterol. And that includes children over the age of 2. And regular exercise, three days a week for at least 20 minutes each day." Take his advice, and it just might keep you out of his or any other cardiologist's office in the future.

Patricia Messing, MS, a private Hanover-based nutrition consultant and exercise physiologist who specializes in weight control, low-fat eating, sports nutrition and eating disorders, says you can substantially lower your blood cholesterol levels and reduce your risk of heart disease by substituting healthy, low-fat foods for high-fat foods. "People need to learn how to recognize which foods provide the greatest health benefits: pine nuts instead of peanuts, garden burgers instead of meat, fish instead of chicken. After a while, it gets easier. Then you adapt to the new foods and they become a part of your regular eating habits."

And when it comes to "lower-fat" labeled products? "People make the mistake of assuming that a healthy, low-fat diet can be achieved by replacing regular high-fat foods with "lower-fat" labeled foods," Messing says. "They should instead be making nutritious, low-fat exchanges for the foods they're replacing. Read the labels. It's all about moderation and balance."

FAT AND CHOLESTEROL

Excess fat and cholesterol in the diet can lead to the development of atherosclerosis, a condition in which arterial blood flow is restricted due to the accumulation of cholesterol-forming plaque on artery walls. Over time, a decrease in circulation can result in a heart attack if blood flow is restricted in the coronary arteries, and a stroke if it occurs in the cerebral arteries.

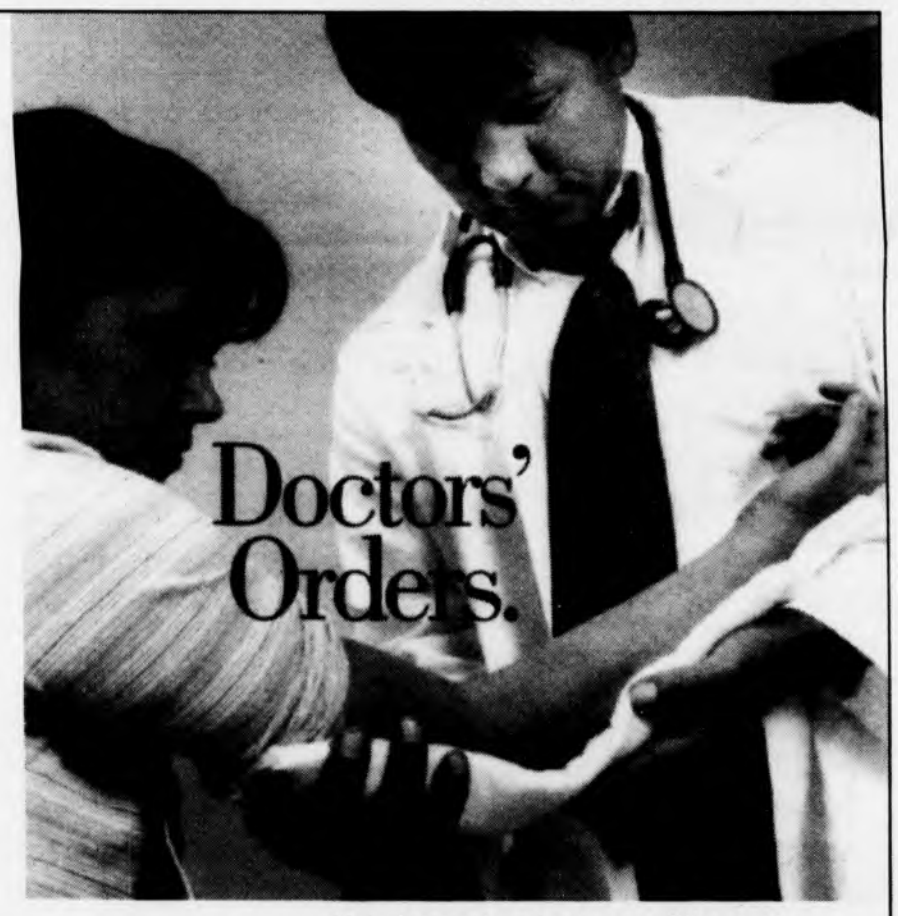
Cholesterol, which is a wax-like substance manufactured by the liver, is present in all of the body's tissues. It lines the the outer membranes of cells, forms a fatty insulation sheath around nerve fibers and is used as a building block for certain hormones.

Cholesterol is carried through the blood vessels in the form of lipoproteins, which are compounds of cholesterol, proteins and triglycerides (fats made by the body or from food). The three types of lipoprotein compounds are VLDL (very low-density lipoprotein), LDL (low-density lipoprotein) and HDL (high-density lipoprotein).

As VLDL circulates through the bloodstream, it carries triglycerides to muscle and fat cells for stored energy use. After VLDL deposits its triglycerides, it breaks up and becomes LDL. LDL then carries the remaining cholesterol to wherever it is needed for cell metabolism. Whatever cholesterol is not used (for cell metabolism), broken down or excreted remains in the bloodstream and adheres to arterial walls, where it accumulates and forms plaque. Because it it is not easily cleared from the system, LDL is known as "bad" cholesterol, or "lousy."

HDL does not carry as much cholesterol as LDL. As it circulates through the bloodstream, it tends to pick up LDL particles on artery walls and returns them to the liver to be reprocessed or eliminated. For this reason, it is known as "good" cholesterol, or "helpful." When digested fat is sent to the liver, cholesterol is produced to distribute the fat throughout the body via VLDL. If too much fat is consumed, the liver produces additional VLDL to transport the fat. If there is an inadequate supply of HDL to pick up the excess LDL particles, the blood vessels may become blocked. If the blocked vessels are in the heart, the result can be a heart attack.

KNOW YOUR NUMBERS



The National Cholesterol Education Program (NCEP) guidelines state that all adults over the age of 20 should check their blood cholesterol levels every five years. Blood cholesterol levels are determined by drawing a blood sample from the arm or finger, and measuring the amount of HDL cholesterol, LDL cholesterol and TOTAL cholesterol. The measurement is recorded as mg/dl (milligrams per deciliter—a deciliter is slightly less than 1/2 cup.)

NCEP total blood cholesterol classifications:

Desirable (Less than 200)
Borderline (200-239)
High (greater than or equal to 240)

Do you know your blood cholesterol level? If not, make the simple test a part of your annual physical exam, or check local listings for blood cholesterol screenings. Don't become a statistic!

D&A committee mulls fund-raising task force

By Stacey K. Powers
CORRESPONDENT

During this month's meeting of the Drug & Alcohol Committee, the possibility of setting up a task force to coordinate fundraising efforts of similar groups in the community was discussed.

Teen Center board members Rose Collins and Melinda Murray voiced their concerns that many fundraising events can too easily become overlapped between the Drug & Alcohol Committee, the PSO, the Community Center and the Teen Center that would warrant a joint effort among the community organizations.

With a task force, fundraising events would be worked on together and any money generated from the events would be divided up among all participating committees.

"It makes sense," Collins said. "We should unite our efforts because we are all working towards a common goal." Under this type of structure, all committees would report to the task force so that each group would support the work of the other committees, instead of possibly competing against them when holding events on the same day, an occurrence which is a major cause for concern.

"Groups like these are an important addition to the whole community," said Cohasset Police Officer Lisa Matos.

"It's also important for kids to be involved in these groups too and for them to look for positive ways to express their feelings," said committee member Nan Hertig.

DANCE CLUB UPDATE

Tony Bramblett, Cohasset High School student and student representative to the committee, told the committee that a proposal to renovate the garage in the town parking lot for use as another teen center has been approved by selectmen. The group, which is in the final stages of finalizing its board of directors, is beginning to organize the fundraising ideas and construction efforts.

"We're looking for more high school kids to get involved with the project," Bramblett said. One issue potentially holding up the project is a problem with the existing sewer system (see related news brief page 2).

"If all proceeds as planned, we are looking at a late spring or early summer opening," Bramblett said.

"Kids need this place," said Rose Collins. "There is no other place like it in town and this will be available for all kids to go and have fun, but in order for it to be successful, it must be run like a business."

Other communities are eagerly tracking the progress of the garage renovation project in hopes that it will be successful and able to be used as an example.

> "It makes sense. We should unite our efforts because we are all working towards a common goal."
> – COMMITTEE MEMBER ROSE COLLINS.

"Kids have taken the lead in this project but they must broaden the support by bringing in younger kids to get involved and form a constituency to keep the efforts going," Hertig said.

The Rev. E. Clifford Cutler also commended the students for doing such a great job with their efforts thus far.

TOLL ROAD BLOCK

In other business the committee is researching the technicalities of various fundraising activities such as setting up a road block at all access roads leading into town where people would be asked to donate to, in the form of a toll, to fund set up for scholarships or possibly to be slated for the proposed garage renovation project in the town parking lot.

Chairwoman Margo Aikens said, "Rockland has been very successful in setting up a similar fundraising project that raised the town thousands of dollars in just one day."

The group has also volunteered its help with Project Safeguard which is planned this year for Oct. 15. Following the success of last year's Project Safeguard, a community-wide event which was held on a school day for the seventh grade students and their parents to participate in various drug and alcohol related workshops and lectures, this year's event promises to be just as informative and fun with a similar format.

Also discussed at the meeting was an update on the committee's CASA (Cohasset Against Substance Abuse) initiative. Approximately 200 families have responded to the initial plea for participation. The committee is publishing a booklet of the concerned network of people which will be distributed for parental use in planning or approving a child's social plans. The first booklet is scheduled to be distributed sometime in October but the committee will continue to accept pledge cards which will subsequently result in an addendum to the first booklet.

SKATEBOARD PARK

A proposed project to build a skateboard park on the land located next to the Little League field on Main Street is currently at a standstill pending additional research into other local facilities as well as the liabilities the town would be subject to with the building of such a park. Towns including Duxbury, Scituate and Rockland have similar parks which are used by inline skaters and skateboarders. A rink at the park could be flooded in the winter for iceskaters to use. Another concern for some people in town is the possibility that this may just be a passing fad but the park can be easily disassembled in the event that kids lose interest in using the facility.

The next meeting of the Drug & Alcohol Committee will be held on Oct. 8 at 7:30 p.m. at the Town Hall. All are welcome to attend.

Drug & Alcohol board meetings

The town's drug and alcohol committee will begin holding regular meetings on the second Wednesday of the month at town hall at 7:30 p.m.

CHS boys soccer ready to Rock in '97

Kickmen look to soar in SSL

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High School boys soccer team had a less than dazzling season last year. The season marked a departure from the traditional winning ways. Formerly a perennial contender in the state tournament, the soccer team has declined in recent years, partially due to the increased numbers in football.

However, fans hope that this year marks the dawn of a new era. Coach Keith Clark resigned and Coach Jeff Martell stepped up from his position as coach of the junior varsity. Martell brings with him fresh enthusiasm, as well as the added advantage of having coached most of the players at the JV level.

Martell seemed very impressed by the role which captains sweeper Leigh Atherton and forward Nate Cotter play. "One of the strengths of this year's team is the unity which the seniors give it. They've become one group, and that's the way they take games and practices. I haven't seen team spirit and strength like this in a long time."

Other seniors include forward scoring phenom Andrew Ross, swingman Josh Flanagan, stopper Pat Leahy, midfielder Eric Moore, and forward Derek Bugley. They are complemented by a strong junior class. Mark Equi, Denis Rooney, Jake Motley, Steve Sceery and Andrew Laney patrol midfield, and they are backed by Justin Maitland, Ben Littauer, and Hunt Pile. Starting goalie Kevin DeVito is the team's sole sophomore, and middie Eric Shea is the only freshman on the squad.

Martell noted that the team was "coming off a really bad year. Our guys have to psychologically overcome the recent legacy of not knowing that they can win games. They need to realize that their play can make a difference.

"We're hoping to rebuild the idea that playing soccer at Cohasset High School is a great tradition, something to want to be a part of, to aspire to. More people have to be aware how great it is to play soccer here."

With the leadership of his seniors and a strong corps of lowerclassmen, Martell seems to be steering the program in the right direction. Indeed, the team won their most recent game, marking the season's first victory, over North Quincy. Good luck to Coach Martell and his team.

FISHING STORY

BY MARK TRASK

Pogies and seaworms and mackerel, oh my!

"Six pogies please."

"Marky, 15 fine pogies."

"Got any fresh pogies?"

"Twenty pogies, two mackerel."

"Two pogies, two mackerel."

"Let's see, six mackerel and a dozen seaworms."

"What are they hitting on?"

"Do you have eels? Yeah? Can I see them? I'll take two dozen…seaworms!"

So starts the bait running out the door on Saturday morning. And shortly thereafter the harvest comes returning to the scale and the Polaroid. Jerry Stevens took a day off from his busy schedule and hosted Bob and Babs Barter of Garrison, N.Y. for a day of chumming and successful fishing near Davis Ledge. Jerry is very generous in the amount of fish he uses for chum, setting up a large slick. Chunks drifted with the slick becoming too enticing for the stripers to resist. Babs' fish weighed in at 23 pounds, 7 ounces. Bob's was heavier by two pounds. Jerry graciously brought up the rear with his 21 pound, 8 ouncer.

Meanwhile over on the freshwater ponds the afternoon kids have been fishing up a storm. When that final bell rings its a mad dash for nightcrawlers and shiners and several precious hours of fishing. Hunters Pond is a favorite spot. Miles Debas, Garrett Barilaro and Jamie Anderson all caught a variety of fish. Largemouth bass and catfish were the bigger ones. Chris Lowrance bagged a hefty largemouth at Aaron River Reservoir.

Some disturbing news for freshwater anglers this week. A Scituate youngster was fishing the shores of Hatherly Pond as generations of youngster have before him. An official from the Widow's Walk golf course (Hatherly Pond is located in the old Boston Sand and Gravel property which was recently converted into a golf course) ejected the youngster, telling him that fishing was not allowed there. Later on that day I went down to the clubhouse to speak to the manager. The manager was not in but the employee in the pro shop stated that fishing was being prohibited on the golf course for "insurance" reasons.

Not so long ago when the golf course was but an idea concerns about losing Hatherly Pond for fishing were aired. Assurances were made that this fine pond would remain open and accessible to anglers regardless of the building of the golf course. This pond is unique. It is shallow. Easily accessible. Away from traffic dangers (unlike most other Scituate ponds). It is loaded with hungry bluegills, sunnies, and perch which have created many happy fishing trips for the kids of Scituate and the surrounding area.

Now apparently those assurances may have become lost in the shuffle during the construction and the heady days of the golf course's opening for business. I call upon the selectmen and town administrator to investigate the situation and again insure that this fine recreational resource (read the pond) will not become absorbed by another fine recreational resource (the golf course). Some underwriter who has no comprehension of what this pond means to Scituate's fishing community should not be allowed with the stroke of a pen to remove this pond from the fishing landscape. We all seek to have many and varied recreational opportunities available. We should be able to work together on this one.

Dave Terry traveled up north to the remote lakes of Calais, Maine. Dave reports they trolled for big lakers using 18 pound leadcore line. After having one snap the line he replaced it with 45 pound leadcore, only to have the next fish on snap that. Must be some big ones there, getting bigger still. John Beal of Hingham was another traveling angler. Recently John was fishing aboard the "Ragin Cajun" out of Key West. The night before the trip out John had a dream about catching a big barracuda. That day his dream became a reality when a 30 inch cuda gobbled his ballyhoo.

Closer to home many anglers are continuing to find that fishing is good. Bill Jordan caught a prize-winning bass at Minot's Light on a mackerel chunk. His 29 pound 6 ounce bass qualified him for a prize (Penn International 80 reel) in the Atlantic Striper Tournament. Dave Lane has persevered through many skunks and came up with a Hull Gut striper. Chris Norton bagged a 16 pounder around Minot, also on a mackerel chunk.

Dave Alexander switched to seaworms and teased a 26 and 1/2 pound tailwalking bass out of the rocks off Sandy Beach. John Talcott and Hunter had a successful trip to the Glades. Hunter brought in a 40-inch bass for a photo. Hank Tiedemann and daughter Emily will tell you about their charter trip out of Hyannis. Four minutes into the trip the bite was on with a 30-pounder being taken. The Monomoy rips gave up four fish more than 30 pounds to the happy anglers and countless numbers smaller. So what were you using Hank? The Niner Rig.

Many smelt fishermen were stirring at reports of schools invading the harbors. Cohasset Harbor was alive with 4 inch herring this week.

Catch one that's hard to carry.

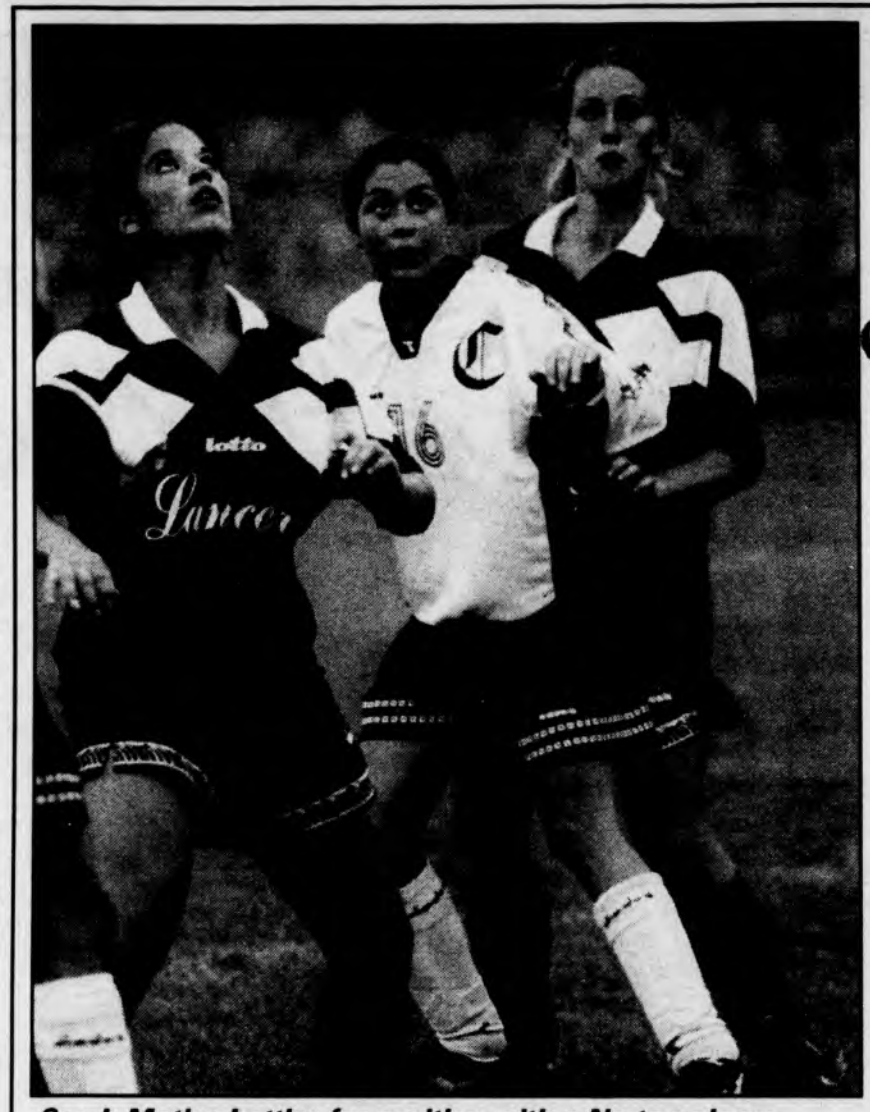
Oceanside Bike Fest '97 rides this weekend on South Shore

The most beautiful bike tour in Massachusetts is taking place Saturday, Sept. 20.

You can join in the fun no matter what level of cyclist you are. The 25-, 50- and 100-mile routes all begin and end at the Duxbury Intermediate School.



The routes wind along the rocky shores of Scituate and Cohasset taking cyclists through area forests and parks as well. What a great way to see the South Shore!

Media sponsors The Boston Herald and The River 92.5 are joining forces with supporting sponsor, Plymouth Savings Bank, to help promote Oceanside Bike Fest '97. Multiple sclerosis is the most common neurological disease of young adults.

Typically striking in the prime of life it affects young people between the ages of 20 to 40. The course and severity of the disease are totally unpredictable, leaving newly diagnosed people and their loved ones with the stresses of an unknown future. In its most severe form, multiple sclerosis can cause blindness, paralysis and speech disorders.

Funds raised from Oceanside Bike Fest '97 will help the Massachusetts Chapter continue to provide a wide range of comprehensive services and programs to the approximately 7,000 families in state affected by multiple sclerosis.

If you would like to register for Oceanside Bike Fest '97 or if you would like more information, call Sharon or Liz at the National Multiple Sclerosis Society at (508) 291-2169.

Church harvest supper slated

Beechwood Church will holds its Harvest Supper Thursday, Sept. 25, at 6:30 p.m. Dinner will include ham, mashed potatoes, Harvard beets, green beans, cole slaw, rolls and a beverage. An auction will be held following dinner. Tickets will be sold in advance only, by calling (781) 383-1298. Prices are $6.99 for adults and $3.50 for children.

Picnic to build fellowship

"We just love to be together," says pastor Gary Ritts of the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset. They have always begun their season with a picnic, because "eating a salad, or a hamburger or hot-dog together helps break down some of the polite walls we erect around ourselves, and it allows new people to get to know us on a more personal level."

The members of this church do indeed like working and being together. A large percentage of the parish work diligently on such projects as their annual Strawberry Festival (in conjunction with Cohasset's "Festival on the Common" every June), the Village Fair (first weekend in December) and, returning this spring, "Congo Capers III," where, under the direction of JoAnn Fichtner and minister of music, Robert Leavitt, they will present as much talent as they can muster in a variety show of musical song and dance numbers.

Some special events coming this fall include a Sunday evening book study on Neale D. Walsch's bestseller "Conversations with God," as well as a second season of monthly spirituality and healing lectures and other monthly social activities such as the picnic (Sunday, Sept. 21, noon at the Cohasset Sailing Club), potlucks, puppet show, hay-ride, coffee house, etc. With worship at 10 a.m. each Sunday (except Sept. 21 when it will be at 11 a.m.), there is an active children's program at the same hour for children from the cradle through ninth grade.

No matter what your faith, find a group with which to share and enjoy and celebrate. In these hectic times, a little anchor can often make the difference in a storm. Set that anchor of faith now, readying for the storms that will come; while in the meantime, enjoying the company of those anchored in the harbor with you!

Soccer pancake breakfast slated

Come to the soccer pancake breakfast Sunday, Sept. 21, from 8 a.m. to noon at the Deer Hill School cafeteria. Soccer players will be selling tickets for $4 each door to door, at local supermarkets and downtown. Support Cohasset High School soccer by buying tickets! Coffee for the breakfast has been donated by the Atlantic Bagel Co. in Cohasset. Have fun and support CHS soccer.

Oktoberfest is Sept. 27

House of Prayer Lutheran Church will celebrate is twelfth annual Oktoberfest, Saturday, Sept. 27, from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. The admission-free festival will be held, rain or shine, under two gaily decorated tents on the church grounds.

An assortment of German foods, authentic pastries, beer and wine will be served throughout the day. Music for listening and dancing will be provided by King Ludwig's Bavarian Bank. A craft boutique will offer handmade items, homemade pastries and bread will be sold at the bake table and the drawing for the numerous fund-raiser prizes will be held at 5 p.m.

The church is located at 916 Main St. (Route 228) Hingham, one mile north of Route 53.

Coffeehouse off the square

Coffee House off the Square season opens with the Slocum/Bustin Epic "Sailing Alone" and Montreal's Versatile Heather McLeod.

On Saturday, Sept. 20, at 8 p.m. the Coffee House off the Square presents Folklorist Dillon Bustin doing excerpts from his musicals "Sailing Alone I and II," and the exciting Montreal folk/jazz singer/songwriter Heather McLeod.

Hingham's Dillon Bustin researched, wrote and performed "Sailing Alone" with over 150 school children and adults from Slocum's final home, West Tisbury on Martha's Vineyard. It is a "Community Musical Celebrating the Centennial of Joshua Slocum's solo voyage around the world."

The evening begins with an open mike offering all singers, poets, storytellers, mimes, instrumentalists, jugglers...a chance to be seen and heard.

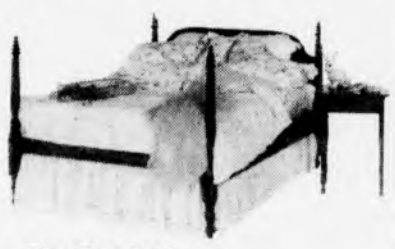
The Coffee House is at the Old Ship Church's Parish House at 105 Main St., Hingham Square, just up from the Loring Hall Theater.

Admission is $10 at the door and a variety of coffees, teas and desserts are available. Profits go to the Unitarian-Universalist Service Committee for Central American medical relief.

For information call Sue Krueger, (781) 545-2798 or Jim Watson, (781) 749-1767.

Beechwood Church bazaar

The Harvest Bazaar, sponsored by the Beechwood Congregational Church, will be held on Sat. Oct. 18 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at 51 Church Street.



Shop early for the holidays. You'll find crafts, fancy work, wreaths, plants, and even a silent auction.

Children will enjoy crafts, a children's table, The Pocket Lady and Mrs. Santa and our highly sought after beach glass candy.

A senior discount will be available at the lunch counter from 11:30 to 1:00. The church will be serving its famous clam chowder. For more information, call 383-0808.

Step back in time on tour of Hingham Cemetery

The 325-year-old Hingham Cemetery, non-sectarian, non-profit, and the town's oldest and largest burial ground, will be open for a free, public tour from 2 to 4 p.m. Sept. 21. The tour is cosponsored by the Hingham Cemetery and the Hingham Historical Society. The rain date is Sept. 28.

"More than any other regions, the villages of New England have outdoor museums of cultural and historical, as well as of natural interest, where thoughtful visitors as well as natives are welcome to stroll tended paths bordered by ancient specimen trees (that are) often uncommon outside these rustic enclosures," explains Philip Swanson, a retired science teacher and history buff, who will be one of two guides for a walking tour which will begin promptly at 1:30 p.m. He will be joined by Lucinda Day, a landscape designer and cemetery director.

In addition to its arboretum, the cemetery contains graves of early settlers, (Hingham was settled around 1633 and, until 1770, included what is now the Town of Cohasset), and of notable local, state and national figures of the Revolutionary and Civil War eras. It also holds monuments dedicated to the First Settlers and Hingham's Civil War soldiers and sailors. Here, too, is the site of the town's original fort, erected to provide an overview of Hingham Harbor in the event of approaching Indians (during King Philip's War) or possibly Dutch settlers coming from New York.

The tour will also feature a Victorian hearse, dated 1870, from the collection of horse-drawn carriages belonging to the Kenneally family of East Bridgewater. Mourning costumes and other Victorian memorabilia belonging to the Hingham Historical Society which will be displayed in the 1886 Queen Anne-style cemetery chapel. Refreshments will be served, and genealogical documents will be available for researching ancestral connections to the cemetery.

Located today on 16 acres of landscaped and terraced land, the site, between South and Water Streets in downtown Hingham, became a burial ground around 1672 because it was adjacent to the town's first Meeting House (now the Old ship Church). The land, then, was used for pasturing cows and by children of the neighborhood at play, as well as for burials, according to the three-volume History of Hingham.

cause members had concerns over parking.

"She's thinking about her retirement and ways to keep her home," McMorris said. "She has a beautiful home and this could be a real asset to the community. I thought it made sense to try and find a way to accommodate people who want to open bed and breakfasts in their homes."

McMorris conceded that neighbors' concerns about parking would have to be taken into consideration. But she hopes that the town will accept changes in its bylaws to include bed and breakfasts.

McMorris wanted to appoint a committee, but selectmen voted to send the matter to the planning board for study.

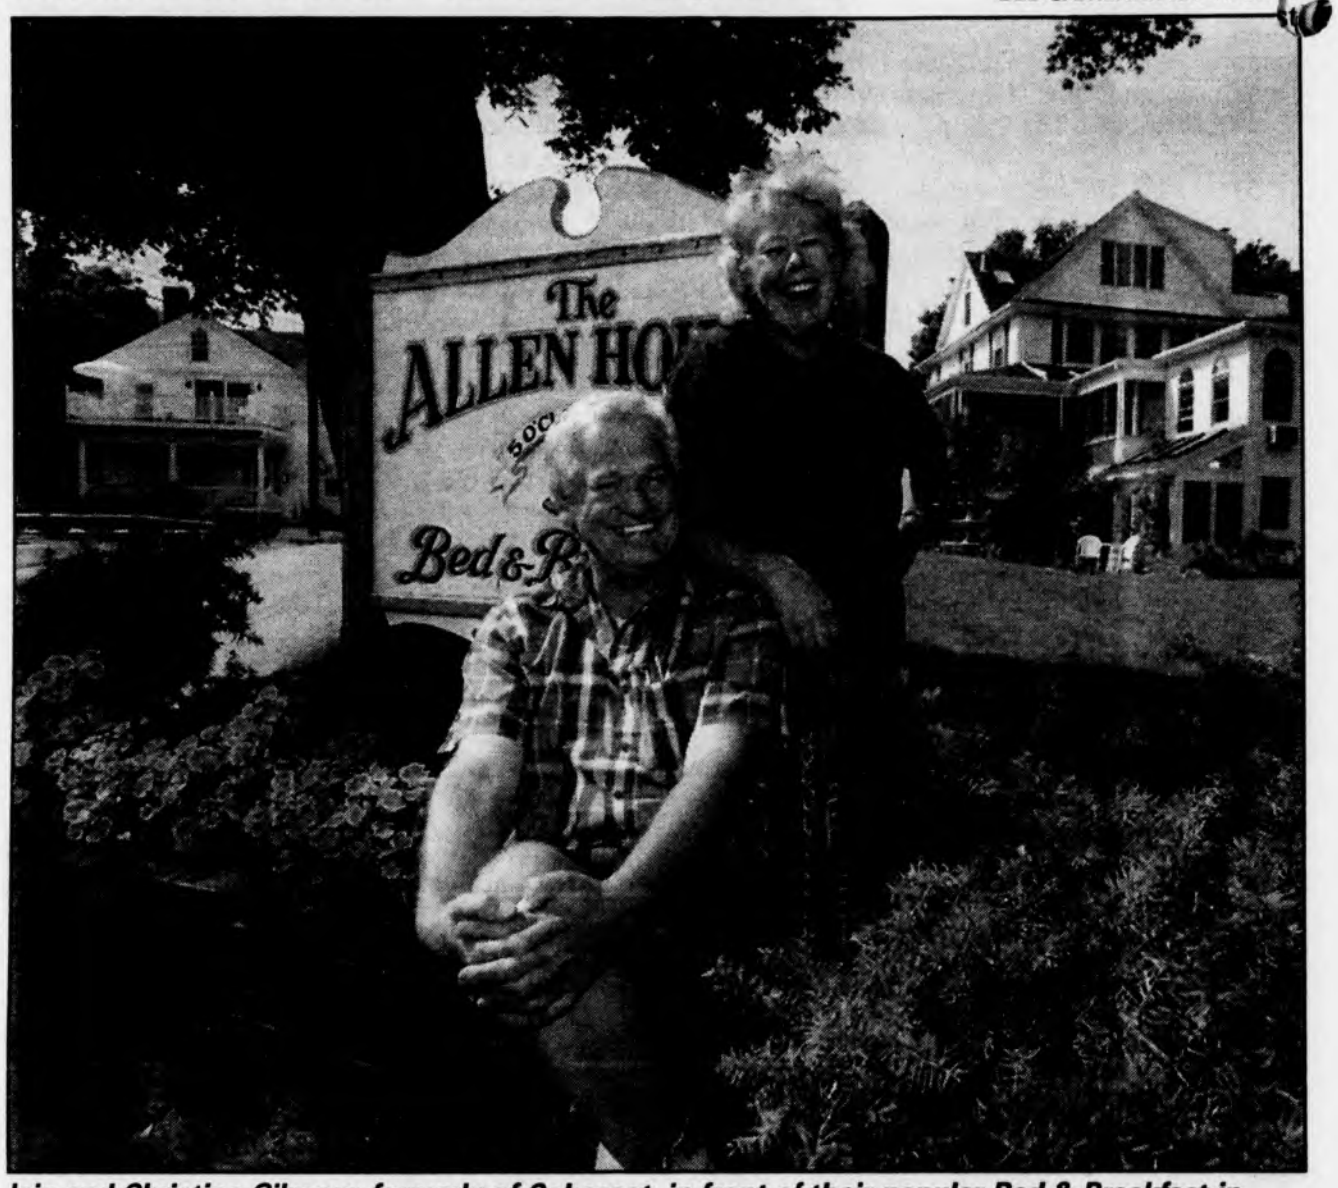
Building Inspector Robert Egan said that any changes to the bylaw to accommodate bed and breakfast establishments would also force changes in the parking regulations.

But Keville believes she had adequate parking at her home to open a two-bedroom bed and breakfast establishment.

"I have space for five cars," Keville said. "There are two spaces at the bottom of my lot, a one-car garage, and space outside the garage for two cars."

But Keville said it appeared zoning board members were uneasy about cars backing out of her property onto the street.

"I wonder how many members of the zoning board back out of their property to get onto the street," Keville said.



Keville said she was disappointed that she was unable to get a special permit. She added that she would help support a planned citizens' petition at town meeting to change the bylaws to make it easier to open a bed and breakfast in a residential home.

Keville ran a successful bed and breakfast establishment called the Capitol Hill Guesthouse when she lived in Washington D.C. She said bed and breakfasts are good for the local economy.

"It helps keep business in town," Keville said. "I would recommend to my guests that they eat at the Red Lion Inn, the Chart House and French Memories."

McMorris said she especially liked the idea that guests at bed and breakfast facilities used local restaurants and shops. She added that she hoped the town would agree to make it easier to open a bed and breakfast, as in the case in neighboring towns like Scituate.

Joan Francis, a secretary in the Scituate building department, said bed and breakfast establishments with less than three guest bedrooms that serve a continental breakfast are allowed by right in residential zones. Lodging houses and boarding houses are also allowed uses under the same rules.

Bed and breakfast establishments with three or more guest bedrooms must obtain a special permit.

Establishment with more than three beds, or that serve a full breakfast are subject to zoning and health regulations, as well as the state sanitary code, said Health Agent Jennifer Sullivan.

Iain and Christine Gilmour, both from England, opened a successful bed and breakfast called The Allen House in Scituate in 1989.

Iain accepted an early retirement package from Polaroid in 1989 and decided to open a bed and breakfast with his wife, a caterer.

The couple lived in a large home in Cohasset at that time, but didn't have enough room for parking. They found a home in Scituate and moved in.

The Gilmours started out with three guest rooms and eventually expanded to their current level of seven guest rooms.

The Allen House has been successful despite some limited, but determined, opposition and two failed attempts at town meeting to impose crippling limitations on bed and breakfast establishments.

"Well, parking is always an issue that comes up again and again," Iain said. "But from a town hall point-of-view, we were very much welcomed when we first opened. There were some subsequent objections."

One of those objections came when the Gilmours wanted to hold wedding receptions at the Allen House.

Many of the guests who stay at the Allen House are in town for weddings. In some cases, the bride and groom stay at the house.

Christine runs a successful catering business, so it seemed to make sense to accommodate wedding receptions.

But neighbors objected to the potential for traffic problems and noise, so the Gilmours abandoned those plans.

Town meeting tried to force bed and breakfasts to serve only breakfast. But Gilmour pointed out that guests sometimes drive from as far away as Pennsylvania.

"After a long drive, they arrive at 11 p.m., hungry, tired, and they would like to have dinner," Iain said.

The article was defeated, as was another that would have restricted bed and breakfasts to houses lots of not more than one acre.

The majority of business at the Allen House comes on the weekend.

The Allen House is busy all year. The Gilmours said business is so good, that they have to hire someone to run the business so they can go on vacation.

"We've only had two days off since May," Iain said.

Christine said it is possible to make enough money at a small bed and breakfast to earn a decent supplemental income.

"The average room rate right now is $100-$130 a night for a double room, so you can earn about $6,000 a year after expenses, which would certainly help pay the property tax bill on an average home in Cohasset," Christine said.

> "This may be the only way for some of our residents to hang on to their family homes."
> — SELECTMAN RONNIE MCMORRIS.

But Iain warned that there's a lot of hard work involved in running a bed and breakfast.

"The idea that a bed and breakfast is glamorous and attractive was fostered by the 'Newhart" show,'" Iain said. "But you have to clean the rooms, make the meals, and do the dishes."

But the Gilmours love what they do, love meeting people, and don't mind the work.

"We try to discourage the idea that we're an alternative to hotels," Iain said. "There's no phone, no TV. Part of the idea is to get away from everything."

The Gilmours success is enviable, but there are examples of successful bed and breakfasts in Cohasset.

Jack and Doris Golden ran a three-bedroom bed and breakfast until last year on Bound Brook Lane cleverly named "On Golden Pond."

Doris said she was traveling through New Hampshire about five years ago when she was struck by the large number of bed and breakfast establishments in business.

She researched the business, contacted other owners, and opened On Golden Pond five years ago.

She originally intended to stay open in the spring and summer, and close down in September or October. But business got so good that she extended her operating calendar into January.

"I got a lot of wedding parties and honeymooners," Golden said. "Many of my guests came from as far away as Scotland, Germany and Italy."

Golden charged $95 a night with a continental breakfast. She said the room price was about average for a bed and breakfast, but expensive enough to discourage raucous teenagers and questionable people.

But now Golden has sold her house to a daughter and moved into a condo on Jerusalem Road. She said she misses the business, but felt it was time to move onto new things.

Under Cohasset bylaws, the special permit for "On Golden Pond" cannot pass onto Golden's daughters.

Golden offered a piece of advice to anyone interested in opening bed and breakfast.

"I love people and my husband loves people," Golden said. "If you don't like people or are paranoid about having people in your home, then you shouldn't get into this business."

MAY I PRESENT

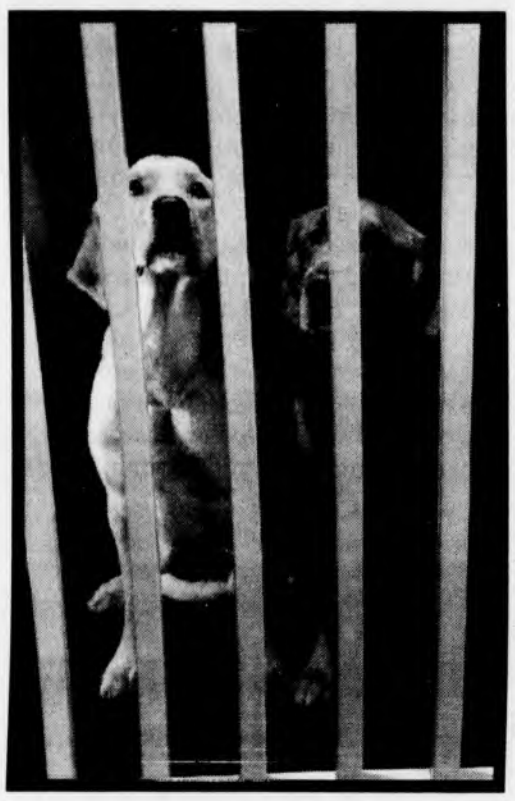
Sallyann Chatterton

Beginning this week, I am beginning a bi-weekly additional column devoted to food and cooking. It is pretty well known that I love to cook, having been labeled a "cook's cook" in the past — recipes will be geared to the seasons, to the grocery store specials, to adults and children. I hope that I will be able to get your special recipe from you or from some "famous" chefs around the area — that sort of thing. I would appreciate your input, comments and suggestions, anything that may help me help you!

This week's recipe is geared to both children and adults, it is a yummy dessert with an unusual flair — it is made in a pizza pan! All apple lovers will adore this!

APPLE CRISP PIZZA

Pastry for a single-crust pie
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
4 medium baking apples, peeled and cut into 1/2-inch slices



TOPPING

1/2 cup all-purpose flour
1/3 cup packed brown sugar
1/3 cup rolled oats
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/4 cup butter or margarine, softened
1/4 to 1/2 cup caramel ice cream topping

Roll pastry to fit a 12-in. pizza pan; fold under or flute the edges. Combine sugar, flour and cinnamon in a bowl. Add apples and toss. Arrange the apples in a single layer in a circular pattern to completely cover pastry. Combine the first five topping ingredients; sprinkle over apples. Bake at 350° for 35 to 40 minutes or until apples are tender. Remove from the oven and immediately drizzle with caramel topping. Serve warm with ice cream if desired. Yield: 12 servings.

PERSONAL FINANCE

Look closely at a company's estimated earnings

By Amy K. Barrett
Worth Magazine

The perceived value of a company – or its stock price – is often based as much upon the prediction of its earnings as it is on the earnings themselves.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

"Stock prices are determined by expectations of the future: What will Microsoft's earnings be in the next 10 years?" says Ed Keon, an earnings analyst at I/B/E/S International. "That is pretty hard to know, but looking at what [the company] might earn in the next quarter or year" helps investors to figure out what the stock price will be.

Wall Street's soothsayers on earnings are the securities analysts. They estimate what a company will earn from the next fiscal quarter to as far out as the next two years – after they have scrutinized companies' costs, the products, the demand for them, etc. and compared the results to their competitors.

Individual investors can use the leg work and financial expertise of these analysts to get the most accurate picture of a given company's fiscal future. In fact, many do. How analysts revise their estimates and how a company's earnings measure up to analysts' forecasts play a big part in how a stock performs – the revisions indicate a change in a company's fiscal outlook, after all.

When Intel, for example, said in May of this year that weaker demand for its products in Europe would dampen its second-quarter revenue and earnings growth, analysts started lowering their estimates. Investors perceived that the behemoth maker of computer chips might be losing the edge that made it the leader of its industry, and made its stock one of the best performers in a two-and-a-half-year bull market. Intel's stock subsequently went from a $80 stock to $70.

However, when Intel actually announced its second-quarter earnings in mid-July, it did not disappoint. As a result of the earlier warning about earnings, analysts had lowered their forecasts from an average of $1.08 per share to 91 cents per share. But then the computer chip maker announced it had actually earned 92 cents a share in the second quarter, slightly above analysts' estimates. Despite the fact the earnings results were below earlier forecasts, investors took them as a sign that the company was continuing to do well. And Intel's stock rose to become a $90 stock the following month.

So, how do you keep an eye on analysts' estimate changes? Well, keep in mind that small companies may not have even one analyst following them. On the other hand, large companies like Intel, Coca-Cola and Gillette can have as many as 40 analysts tracking their earnings, making it a more complicated process to keep up with changes in earnings estimates (not to mention that most firms won't send you their analysts' reports if you aren't one of their customers).

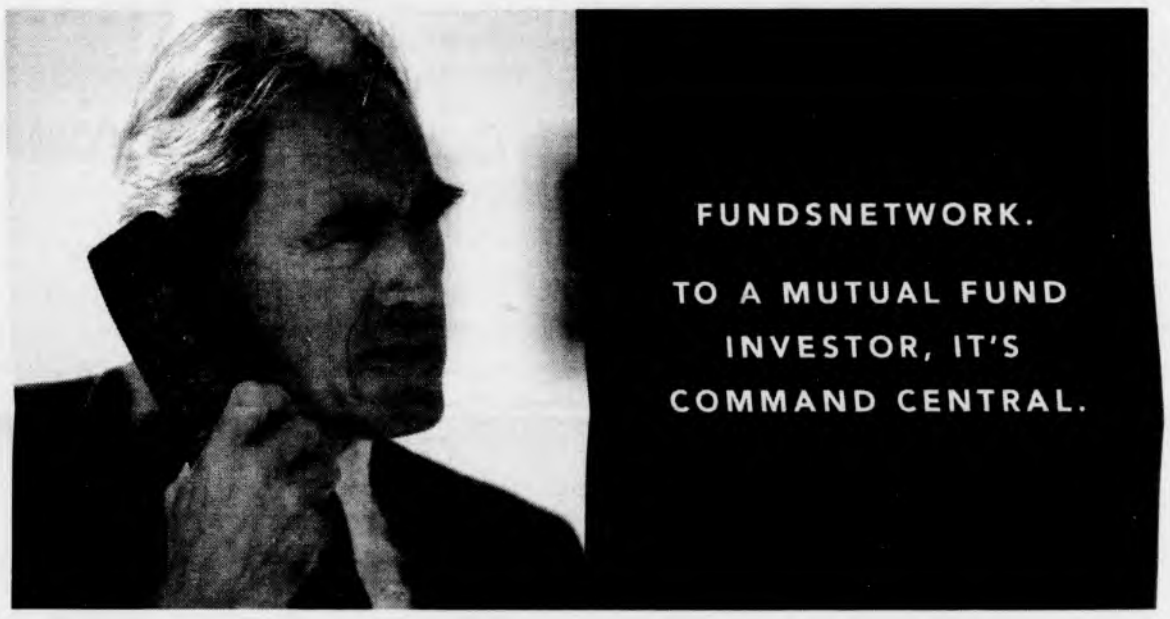
Research firms such as I/B/E/S International in New York, Zacks Investment Research in Chicago and First Call in Boston can do the work for you. They will compile analysts' estimates and track changes for you – for a fee, of course.

Zacks offers its Analyst Watch data in print and on the Internet (www.zacks.com). For a bi-weekly pamphlet that updates analysts' earnings estimates, and also includes Zack's picks of the 100 stocks it expects to outperform the market, Zacks' charges $295 per year. On the Internet, investors are given the choice of only receiving the weekly updates of earnings estimates for $150 or both the updates and the 100 picks for $225.

I/B/E/S also sells its information on the internet (www.ibes.com), giving the investor choices on the amount of information they desire. For $9.95 per month, or approximately $120 a year, one can buy data on 10 U.S. companies, including complex charts, summaries and historical information, broker directories and intra-day updates. For additional money, coverage can be increased to include other services. The Professional U.S. Service choice provides extensive coverage of 1,000 U.S. companies for $999.95 a month.

First Call will give you updated reports on consensus estimates on its Internet site (www.firstcall.com /individual) for $1.50 to $2 per report, depending on how many reports you order in advance. For $75 per month, First Call will fax you a daily list of the companies whose earnings estimates were revised – if you prefer a weekly update instead, the cost is $35 per month.

The best time to be on the lookout for changes in analysts' estimates, says Keon, is right after companies have announced their previous quarter's profits. The results often give analysts a clearer picture of how the next fiscal quarter will turn out. On a typical day at I/B/E/S, some 7 percent of the 18,000 companies if follows will have an estimate change. During profit-reporting periods that amount doubles, he says.



Sometimes a company announcement, such as Intel's, takes analysts by surprise and gives them new information about an aspect of the company. Last month, when Coca-Cola Co. warned that their third-quarter profits would probably come in slightly below Wall Street's expectations, many analysts were jolted. And as a result, Coke's stock plunged about 12 percent in the next six trading days.

Context is everything when it comes to comparing earnings estimates to actual results. Investors reacted harshly to Coke's warning because they did not expect the brand-name soft-drink maker to have problems meeting its financial goals. Under that assumption, the stock of Coke and other consumer product companies have done well in the last couple years. On the other hand, if the earnings of a company in an obviously laggard industry fall below expectations, investors may not have an adverse reaction to the news.

Changes in earnings estimates aren't all high drama. A change in earnings outlook can happen gradually, subtly. "There's a lot of evidence that it takes the market a long time to react to changes in earnings forecasts," says Keon. So staying on top of earnings revisions can put you ahead of the game.

Cohasset Web page opens on information superhighway

By Dave Rogers
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset, now connected to the information superhighway, is making great strides to distance itself from the other Internet small towns of the South Shore.

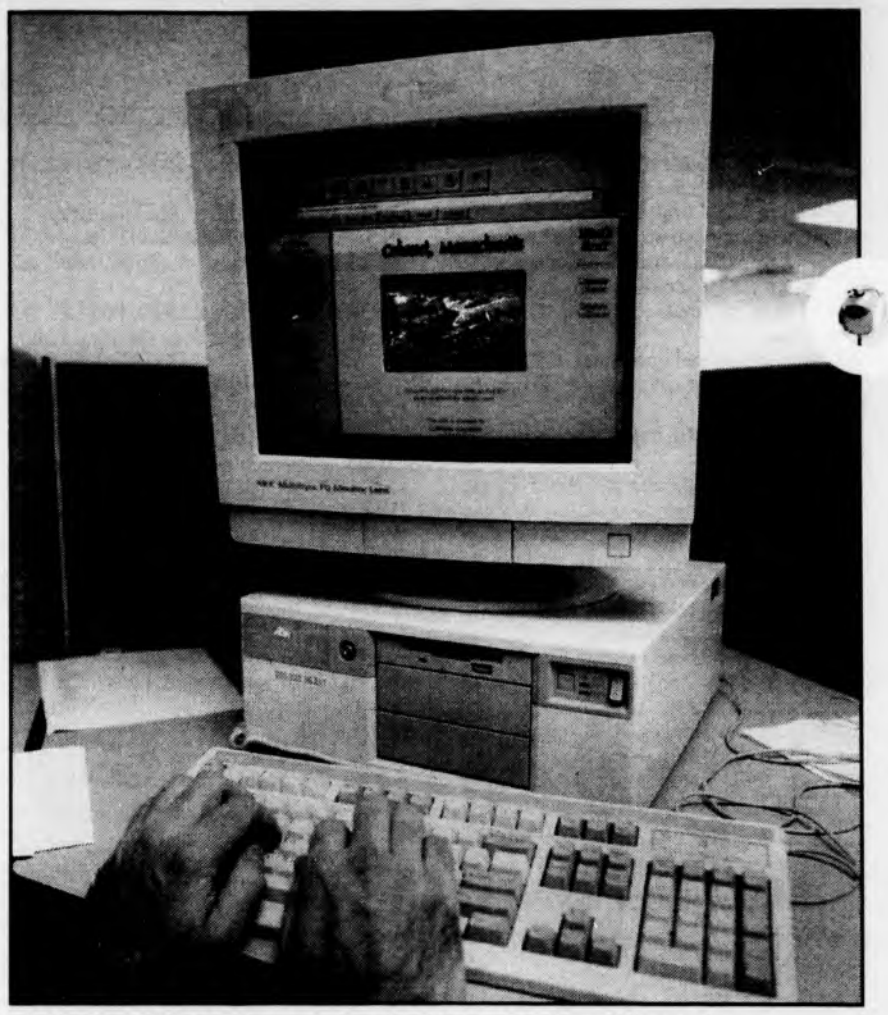
Residents are beginning to notice the work of local volunteers at www.cohassetma.com. The site space was made possible by DreamCom, owned by Wayne Sawchuk of 432 Beechwood St.

"This is a great beginning to something which could be very beneficial for the town," said Sawchuk, who is "housing" the site for free.

Sawchuk envisions the site as a daily news source for Cohasset where residents can check for dump hours, athletic scores, school cancellations and minutes from the town meeting.

Currently the site, which greets visitors with a scenic aerial photograph of Cohasset, carries on-line information about the town and government, schools, community organizations, churches, businesses and a calendar of events.

A Cohasset resident can surf the 'net to find everything from the dog catcher's phone number to how much it costs to file a form with the zoning board.



One can also find detailed directions to Cohasset from anywhere within a 1000-mile radius with a few simple clicks of the mouse.

Cohasset resident James Lagrotteria, who has experience with Web publishing where he works — Glastonbury Abbey of Hingham — has been a major contributor to the Cohasset page.

"My only dream is to keep it current so that people will use it," said Lagrotteria. "I want this to be the first source (of information in Cohasset.) I want people to go to the site before they call Town Hall."

Although Lagrotteria wants to shy away form commercial associations with the page at the present, there is a link to Dean & Hamilton Realtors Homepage.

Tom Hamilton, of Dean & Hamilton, said he believes that for on-line consumers interested in moving to the South Shore, a link to his business from the Cohasset page will be a valuable asset.

Cohasset, Mass. is now on the Internet. Its address is cohassetma.com.

Common barrels not suitable

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission has not approved the new barrels with lids which have been purchased for the common after all.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said there was a misunderstanding and he assumed the committee had approved the two options one of which selectmen subsequently approved.

"This was not the case," he said. "Unfortunately, we have already ordered the barrels and are trying to rescind the order so that I can meet with the commission to get their approval on barrels."

The eight barrels cost $3,000, Haddad said.

Tank at King St. plant possible

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Although the water department is keeping its options open — there's a chance the town's second water tank could be very close to home.

Water commissioners are investigating constructing a $1.8 million, 750,000 ground-level tank in the parking lot at the water department off King Street.

The cost of the tank would be paid for through the new water rates approved at last spring's town meeting, water commissioner John K. McNabb, Jr. said.

The state-of-the-art storage tank would provide the needed back up for fire-fighting purposes through a system of powerful pumps rather than gravity, McNabb explained. The tank would also monitor and maintain maximum water level in the town's existing Bear Hill standpipe.

If feasible, the tank would

Towns will welcome train, MBTA says

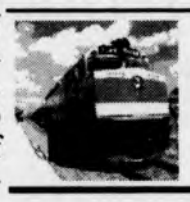
There's no doubt about it.

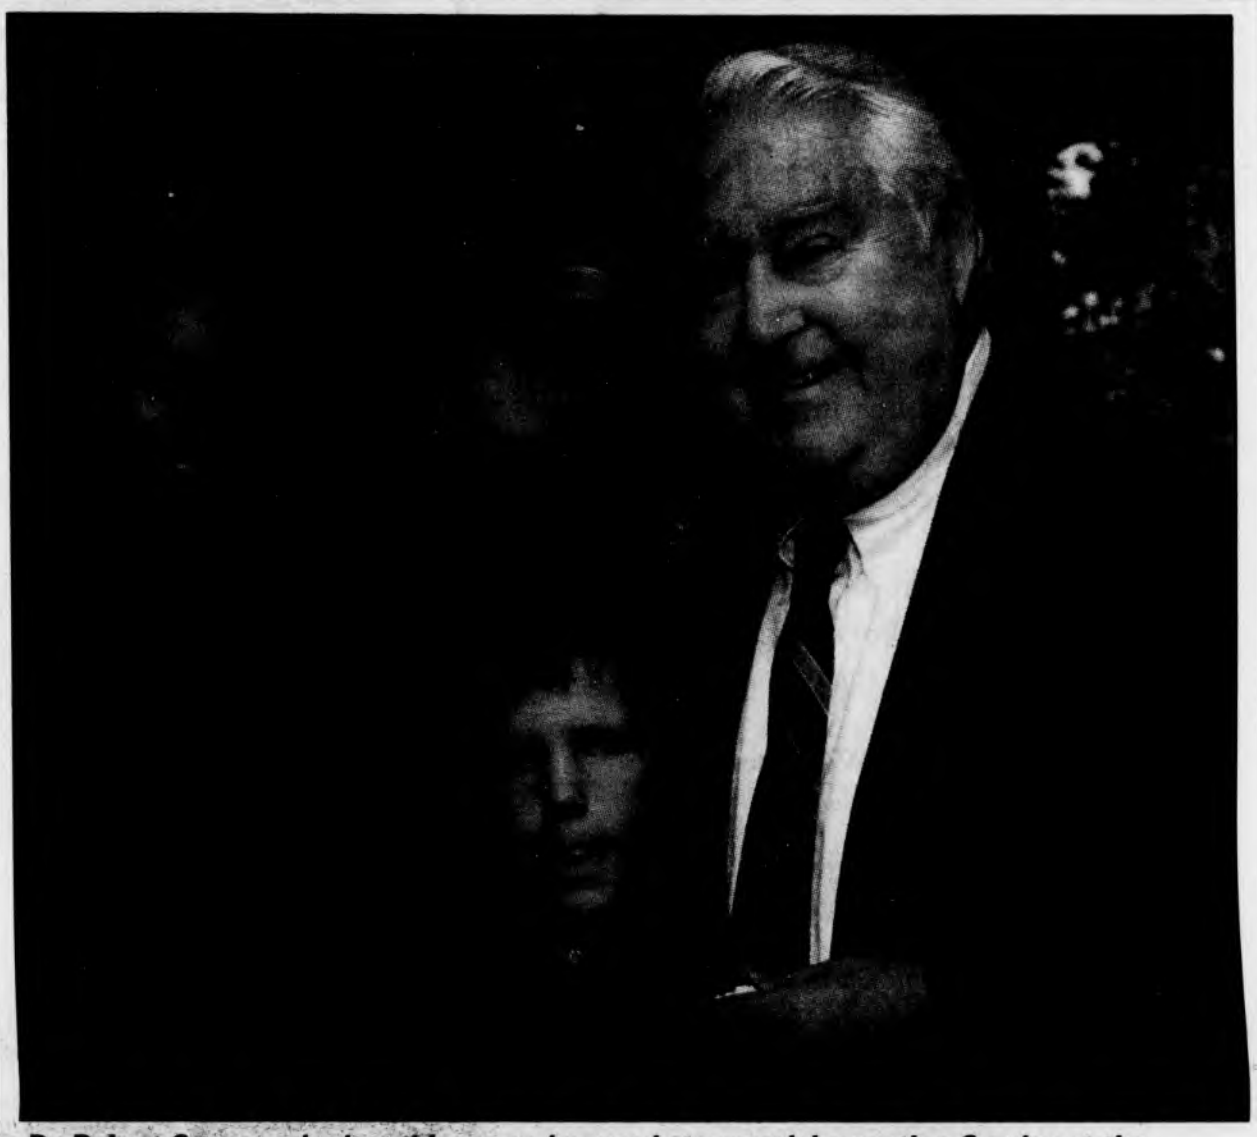
The MBTA loves trains and thinks the South Shore will too.



"In every community the MBTA goes into, there is no evidence of any economic detriment," said MBTA General Manager Robert Prince.

Prince is sure commuters will flock to the Plymouth and Middleboro lines which start up Sept. 29 because — if for no other reason — it will benefit their pocketbooks.

Even paying the train's most expensive fare at $128 a month plus parking — it is still less than half the cost of driving.



"And you'll get there faster," he said.

Prince made his remarks in a recent roundtable discussion on restoration of the Old

Selectmen give razing Hagerty House top billing

Lobster Lab fate up to town meeting

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A majority of selectmen want to put the wrecking ball to the Hagerty house on Parker Avenue.

The board agreed last week to put two articles on the Oct. 27 special town meeting warrant — one to demolish the building and the other to issue a new request for proposal (RFP) for the Lobster Lab which would be housed there. But this week, there was little doubt which the board favored.

Although selectmen say they are opposed to moving the house, a third article — presented by citizens' petition — asking the building be razed or moved has supplanted the selectman's demolition article. (Seeking to secure more harbor access for boaters, Alexander Koines , 380 Atlantic Ave., presented the citizens petition with the necessary 100 signatures last week).

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who supports the Lobster Lab because she feels it is what the town wants, was even unable to get her fellow board members to reverse the order of the articles on the warrant. As it stands now, the demolition article will be taken up first before discussion of issuing a new RFP. She said she hated to close the door on any other suggestions that might come forward for use of the building.

Mrs. Sullivan was the sole selectmen not to support the "demolition or move" article and was the only selectmen to recommend the RFP article be approved.

The proposed Lobster Lab, a marine research facility, for the Hagerty house was backed 2-1 at the spring town meeting. Prior town meetings have rejected selling the building or tearing it down. Over the 4-1/2 years, the town has owned the 2.2 acre Hagerty property, the house — which was once the offices and showroom of Cohasset Colonials furniture company — has fallen into disrepair.

The Lightkeepers Corporation sought to lease the house and proposed raising the necessary funds to fix the building up for the Lobster Lab at no cost to the taxpayers. The lightkeepers withdrew its proposal earlier this month because of lack of support from selectmen. That prompted selectmen to decide to put the possibility of issuing a new RFP for the lab before town meeting

Hazardous Waste Day a success

Selectman Merle Brown reported last week's Hazardous Waste Day was a success attracting 82 car loads.

Flag pole on order

Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan said the new flag pole for the town common is on order and has been discussed with the Common Historic District Commission. The old wooden pole was removed last summer when dry rot was discovered near its base.

Two named to traffic committee

Selectmen have appointed Heidi Salerno, 487 King St., and Michael Barry, 120 Doane St., to the new town traffic study committee. Any other interested citizens should contact the selectmen's office at 383-9900.

Upcoming meetings are noted

The following meetings have been posted at town hall:

Advisory committee, 8 p.m., Sept. 30;

Board of assessors, 6:30 p.m., Oct. 2;

Board of health, 7 p.m., Oct. 14;

Drug & Alcohol Committee, 7:30 p.m., Oct. 8;

Planning board, 8 p.m., Oct. 18;

School Committee, 7:30 p.m., Oct. 2 & 16 (Rm. 10, Cohasset High School).

Sewer Commission, 6 p.m., Sept. 30.

Water Commission, 7:30 p.m., Oct. 2 (water treatment plant).

All meetings are at town hall unless otherwise noted.

Cedar Acres Lane gets attention

This week, the town DPW cut back the brush and patched the roadway on Cedar Acres Lane.

"I would ask members of the board, if you have a chance, to take a look at what we did and let me know if this meets with your approval," Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen in his weekly report. Haddad commended DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield and the DPW for doing an outstanding job.

The matter was in response to residents' concerns on the lane that the street was in bad need of repair and attention. Cedar Acres Lane is one of many private ways in town. Private ways are the focus of a special town meeting "citizens petition" asking the town to accept the streets as public ways.

METCO program teaches diversity

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

A 1960s movement to create racially balanced schools in Boston has yielded positive results in the suburbs.

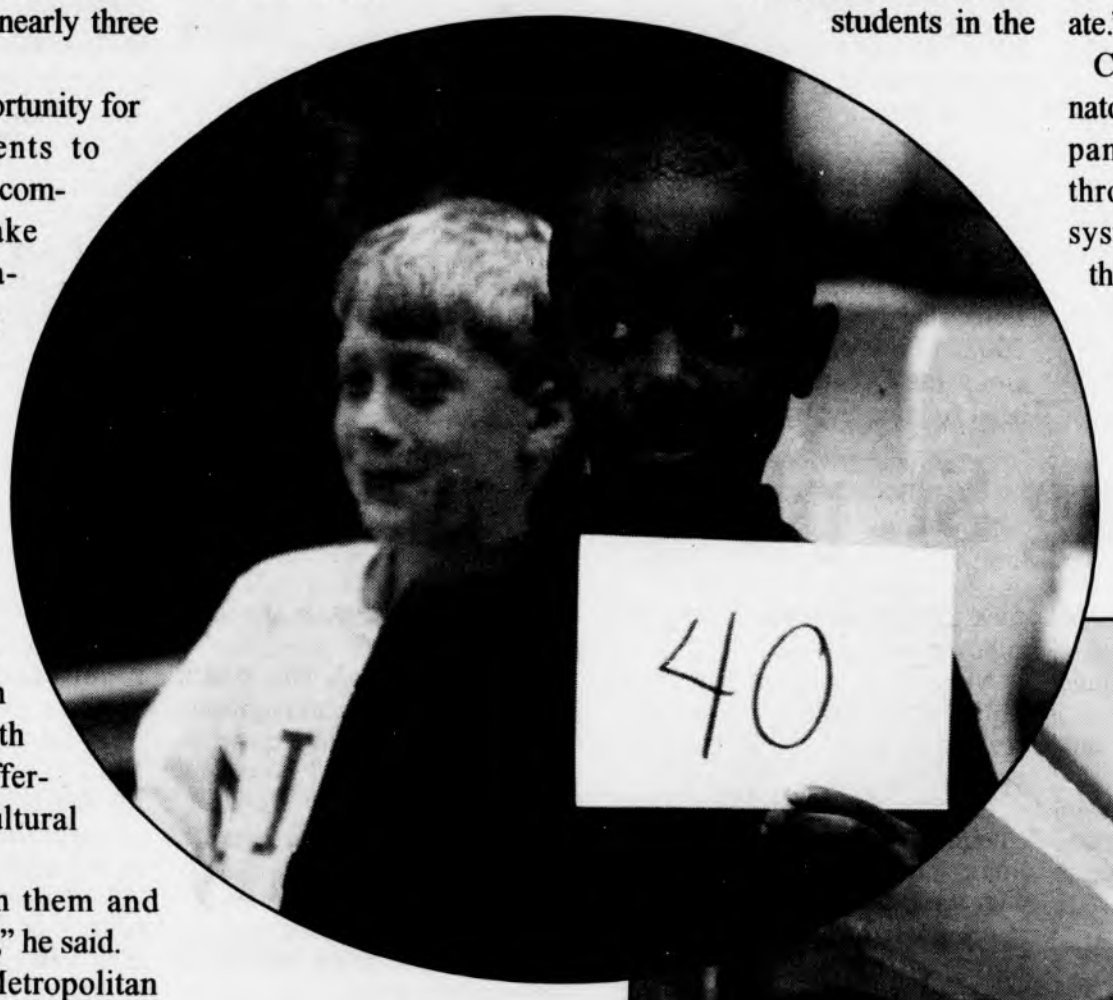
The METCO program — which busses inner city students to suburban schools — has been thriving in Scituate and Cohasset for nearly three decades.

"It's a good opportunity for inner city students to come to suburban communities and make use of the educational resources here," said Scituate School Supt. John P. Kulevich.

Kulevich said Scituate students also benefit from the METCO program by socializing with children from different ethnic and cultural backgrounds.

"We learn from them and they learn from us," he said.

METCO (the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity) originated in 1965, after the passage of the state's Racial Imbalance Act, as a vehicle to integrate and equalize public education. More than 3,000 children are enrolled in METCO, which has a partnership with 37 suburban communities across the state. The college placement rate for students who graduate from the program has consistently been about 75 percent.



"Students who go through METCO are getting an excellent opportunity," said Oni Igartu, Scituate's METCO coordinator.

Sixty African-American, Hispanic and Asian students in grades one through twelve take a bus from their homes in Boston — mostly from Dorchester and Mattapan — to Scituate's schools every morning at about 5:30 a.m. Eleven students attend high school, 26 are at the Gates Intermediate School and the rest have just begun the program in the elementary schools.

"I find it amazing that they get up so early and they come to school with so much energy," she said. Igartu described Scituate's METCO students as "really nice, wonderful and very enthusiastic about school.

"They're just like any other students in Scituate," she said.

Renese Wright, a 17-year-old who lives in Roxbury, has been attending Cohasset Public Schools for 12 years. A senior at Cohasset High, Wright starts her day at 4:30 a.m. and often catches the late bus after cheerleading to arrive home at about 7 p.m.

Cohasset METCO student Justin Reed participates with Parker Berg in an exercise in Debbie McMaster's 3rd grade class at the Osgood School.

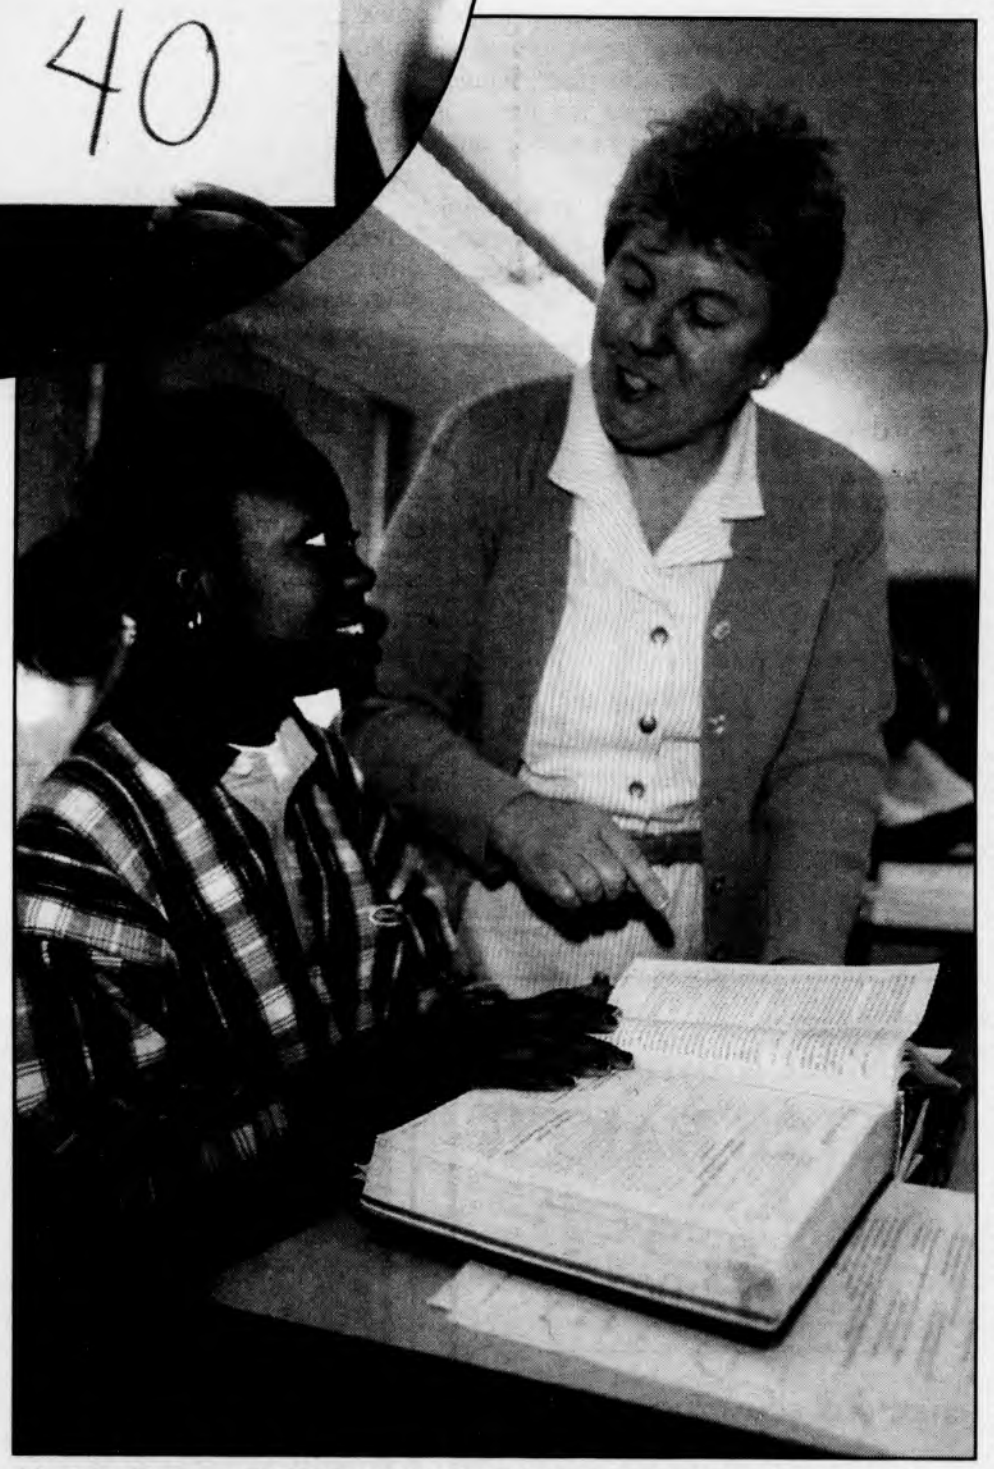
Over the years, she has managed her long schedule and maintained better than a C average — a requirement of the METCO program.

"It's a great deal of experience," Wright said. "You learn about different cultures and diversity. It's a better environment in terms of people and society."

In most cases, METCO students reboard the bus at the end of the day and return to their homes in the city. Some students stay in Scituate beyond the school day with their host families — Scituate parents who open their home to a student the same age as one of their own children. Students who need to stay in Scituate for a school sport, activity or event can stay overnight with their host families.

A small school system, Cohasset has a METCO program comprised of 49 students who are evenly distributed between the primary and secondary schools.



Wright and Rosalind Muniz, 17, of Roslindale agree that small class sizes enhance their educational experience.

"You learn more and you get more one-on-one interaction with teachers," Muniz said.

Despite the fact that students in the METCO program are minorities at school in Scituate and Cohasset, Wright and Muniz said they have made friends easily and fit right in.

Igartu, who became Scituate's METCO coordinator in September, agreed.

"The Scituate kids are really receptive to the (METCO) students," she said. "They're just like any other students in Scituate."

Cohasset METCO Coordinator Yvonne Jones of Mattapan, sent her own children through the Belmont school system via METCO to give them a better education.

"At the time, there was turmoil in Boston. As a new resident, I was frightened by what I was seeing and hearing," Jones said. "I wanted to put my son in an environment he could thrive in."

Jones said the decision to send her children to another town was a difficult one. But to ensure that she would not be left out of her children's education, she became actively involved in the schools' parent-teacher organizations and volunteered at the school.

> "It's been around for 30 plus years. That tells me that something good's going on,"
> -YVONNE JONES, COHASSET METCO COORDINATOR

As a METCO coordinator for four years, Jones encourages parents to participate in Cohasset's school activities and to take a personal day to volunteer at their child's school.

"It's like with any other school system. Do not be a stranger to your child's teachers or the school," she said.

Jones said the METCO program speaks for itself.

"It's been around for 30 plus years. That tells me that something good's going on," she said.

The roots of the METCO program were planted in the early 1960s, when boycotts and protests of inequalities in segregated schools led the state Board of Education to establish the Kiernan Commission — a 21-member committee charged with studying the effects of racial segregation in Boston's schools. In its 1965 report, "Because It Is Right Educationally," the commission concluded that racial imbalance was harmful to both black and white students. Forty-five Boston schools were found to be predominantly black.

Following the passage of the Racial Imbalance Act, "Operation Exodus" — the bussing of more than 400 students from overcrowded black Boston schools to underenrolled schools outside the black neighborhoods — began.

By the fall of 1966, 220 METCO students took the first bus ride to schools in seven suburban districts.

Today, the METCO program has a waiting list of 11,000 students.

Towns will welcome train, MBTA says

Colony Line at the Mariner Newspapers headquarters in Marshfield .

With new handicap-accessible stations, large parking lots, raised platforms, electric doors and spacious cabins — Prince says commuters will find train travel to their liking.

The ad campaign even says: "Snooze. Read. Snooze. Try the passenger seats on the new Old Colony trains." ·

However, while the MBTA is upbeat about the return of rail service, Prince stressed that public safety is paramount.

"The last thing we want to see is an accident out there," he said.

The combined lines have 47 public and nine private grade crossings. The MBTA has worked diligently educating the public and conducting test runs to ensure that all the gates are operating smoothly.

The MBTA has even sent its people to annual safety meetings for school bus drivers in towns along the line, said Howard Hayward, chief of design and construction. It has also added side walk crossing arms for pedestrians where needed and traffic signaling at intersections where some of the parking lots are, he said.

In today's issue, a special section titled "Rail Revival" provides a comprehensive look at the return of the Old Colony line and includes schedules, stops and in-depth stories surrounding this event on the South Shore.

MBTA Deputy General Manager Philip Puccia said the T will take a hard line on vandals and trespassers, such as teenagers who find the tracks an attractive place to hang out and drink.

"We will work aggressively to make sure these people are penalized," he said. "It's a matter of safety."

T officials hope that the popularity of the trains along the Middleboro and Plymouth lines will accelerate the controversial Greenbush project which is not scheduled for completion until 2002. Many citizens in towns along the Greenbush line have been fighting the train's return.

"We think the success of the Middleboro and Plymouth lines will make those on the fence take another look and say 'why don't we have the train?'" Prince said. "Hopefully, it will win people over and expedite the process."

Prince, a former Duxbury resident, said he never would have left if there had been a train.

"I'd still be there if I didn't have to travel the Southeast Expressway every day," he said.

Water tank at King St. plant is possible

eliminate the need for building the town's second tank on Bear Hill behind the high school or on a piece of the former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor property site off Route 3A across from Jonathan Livingston Seagull Square.

McNabb said the ground-level tank, which would essentially be an extension and improvement to the water treatment plant, would be able to operate for up to a month if the town's existing tank had to be taken off line.

A second tank is needed in town to increase fire-flow capacity town wide and to enable a tank to be taken off line for periodic cleaning.

Neighbors oppose the Bear Hill location because of aesthetics and potential impact on property values.

The water commission needed a height variance from the zoning board before it could proceed with the Bear Hill site, approved at the annual town meeting last March. Town by-laws restrict structure heights to 35 feet in a residential zone. The tank would be 65 feet tall. Last summer, the zoning board leaned toward siding with the neighbors, prompting the water commission to withdraw its request for a height variance to site the tank there. Constructing the tank at Bear Hill, at $1.4 million, is the least expensive option.

The Webb-Norfolk site, which is also suitable from an engineering standpoint, would require an eminent domain land taking by the town and an access easement. Siting the tank at Webb-Norfolk is estimated to cost about $1.6 million.

The water commission has placed several articles on the Oct. 27 special town meeting warrant to provide them with flexibility. Commissioners plan to discuss the options at their next meeting at 7:30 p.m., Oct. 2 at the water treatment plant.

The articles include asking for an exemption from height limits on the zoning by-law which would enable the tank to be placed at Bear Hill if necessary; another asks voters to delete the requirement approved at last spring's town meeting that the new tank be placed on Bear Hill; and a third asks for $200,000 for the new tank, money that is in addition to the funds approved for a new tank last spring.

McNabb said the zoning board's probable rejection of the Bear Hill site may "be a blessing in disguise."

He said the commission hopes that after its Oct. 2 meeting, the King Street site will be the choice.

"But every question is on the table now," McNabb said. "....We'd rather not fight it out with Bear Hill again, if we don't have to."

Competition for new sewer pool heats up

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

A lot of people and businesses want to hook into the town sewer system, but the reality is that there has been sewer use ban in effect since 1978.

When the Department of Environmental Protection approved the creation of a new sewer district, it authorized a little perk: a 15,000 gallon per day sewer use pool.

The pool will allow certain properties to hook into the sewer system. But with the high demand for sewer use, the pool is disappearing fast.

About 12,000 gallons of the pool have already been reserved for the new elementary school, the new St. Anthony's Parish, and the community center.

That leaves about 3,000 gallons in the pool and a lot of requests to hook-in to the system.

Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild admitted that the pool isn't going to last that long with only 3,000 gallons left to distribute.

"The state agreed to let the sewer commission authorize 15,000 gallons a day beyond what is already in the system," Guild said. "I don't know when the pool will be exhausted, but we will be very conservative from now on because there is so little left."

Now the spotlight is on the sewer commission, which has jurisdiction over the pool.

Guild said that some businesses are also "grandfathered" into the sewer use pool because of outstanding requests for additional sewer use.

"There's a bed and breakfast that had applied to us but was rejected," Guild said. "They were told to come back when additional capacity became available. Most of the people who planned to apply did so last March when we approved the agreement with the state."

Another "grandfathered" property is the post office. But it is unclear at this time how the post office will connect into the system.

Guild said post office officials are considering a plan to hook in through the community center, although that plan does not seem feasible. He said post office officials may have to determine if there is a sewer stub in front of the property.

The old DPW garage could also be included in the pool so teens can use the building for a dance hall. Guild said the facilities needs would be very small and for a good use.

Some properties could be given higher priority than others for meeting certain criteria.

Businesses in the village will be looked on favorably by the sewer commission to help revive the beleaguered downtown area. Homeowners in the present sewer district may also receive high priority.

But some residents and town officials are confused about how it will be determined who gets to hook into the pool.

The health board has petitioned the sewer commission to allow seven homes, which are adjacent to one another ,to access the pool because one house failed a Title V inspection. The homes are in the Newtonville neighborhood off Atlantic Avenue.

The health board cannot determine who can access the pool, but it can make recommendations to the sewer commission.

On Sept. 3, the health board requested a copy of the sewer commissions' rules about who can access the sewer pool.

In a letter to the sewer commission, Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik, speaking for the health board, recommends that the seven homes be allowed into the sewer system. Godzik states that although only one home failed inspection, all seven use similar septic systems that would also fail if inspected.

The board of health declared the homes a public health emergency.

But Guild said the situation is difficult because the homes are not in the present sewer service area. He said the state would have to approve the request, but would do so only if it had Title V data for all seven homes.

Guild said the situation with the seven homes was very complicated and has been under consideration since the mid-1980s.

Oct. 27 because they feel the Lightkeepers were tied to last spring's town meeting approval.

The Hagerty Property Committee has been studying passive, recreational uses for the site for four years. But so far, no plan has been implemented.

At this time, if the house is torn down, it appears the space will be used for additional parking for those who need to use the town's only public boat ramp which is adjacent to the property.

Reached by telephone, Kevin Ulmer, a marine biologist who would run the Lobster Lab, said he will continue to fight for the lobster lab "as long as the wrecking ball hasn't swung."

He dismissed suggestions that he find another site. The two touted as possibilities — the Olde Salt House on Border Street and Cohasset Cove Seafood across from Kimball's — are much too small, he said. He explained that the lab, which would study marine biology, would need to be in close proximity to salt water.

Ulmer said the project has never received fair treatment from selectmen, who are "hell bent on demolishing the building."

"I will rely on the common sense of the town which has voted not the sell the building and not to tear it down," he said.

The town spent $475,000 to buy the Hagerty property in 1993.

"That's a high price tag for a gravel parking lot that's only used a few days a year," said Ulmer, referring to plans to use the house footprint for more parking.

LENDING STABILITY

Normally, the bones of the spine known as the vertebrae are linked together by a complex network of ligaments that maintain them in relatively fixed positions with respect to one another. However, when the ligaments supporting the spine become stretched due to traumatic injury to the back, it creates an unstable situation for the vertebrae. Now misaligned, they are free to shift backward and forward on adjacent vertebrae to cause severe back pain. Most commonly, vertebral instability occurs in the lower (lumbar) spine, but it can also strike the cervical and thoracic regions. Chiropractic care for this condition centers on spinal manipulation. By moving the vertebrae back into their normal positions, the chiropractor can relieve much of the discomfort that comes from having them out of alignment.

Physical, orthopedic, and neurological tests can help reveal the condition of your spine. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we are uniquely qualified to restore the health of your spine. Along with spinal adjustments and related treatments, we emphasize healthy everyday living. For quality chiropractic care - without drugs or surgery - please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we stress preventive health care for the entire family.

P.S. X-rays prove to be quite helpful in detecting spinal instability.

How to pay for school A/C work disputed

Selectman Brown wants contingency fund used

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

While all agree that setting the stage for air conditioning at the new elementary school is desirable — one selectman is not happy with asking the town for more money to pay for it.

Selectman Merle Brown is adamant that the money needed to install piping and duct work for air conditioning come out of the project's $500,000 contingency fund.

School building committee spokesman Rob Spofford said it was too early in the project to dip into the contingency fund which is reserved for unforeseen expenses. He explained that any money remaining in the contingency fund will be returned to the town once the project is complete. The new school is slated to open next September.

Spofford said the building committee is resolute it will not use contingency fund money for the duct work and will ask the Oct. 27 town meeting to appropriate the $100,000 needed.

By doing the work now as with the rest of the school project, 60 percent of the cost would be reimbursed by the state through the School Building Assistance Bureau. It is also cheaper to install the infrastructure while the building is under construction eliminating the need to retrofit it later.

Air conditioning the entire building was never included in the original project, Spofford said. It was an alternate on the bid but ruled out by the building committee which is determined to bring the project in on budget.

When the building committee awarded the $8.47 million contract in May, general contractor John T. Callahan and Sons of Bridgewater would have added the piping work for an additional $88,000 at that time because it was included as an alternate with the bid.

Brown questioned why the price jumped $12,000.

Architect Sid Bowen explained that a bid is good for 30 days. Once the contractor is asked to come back and "refigure", it costs more.

School committee chairman Maureen Jerz said air conditioning is an extra.

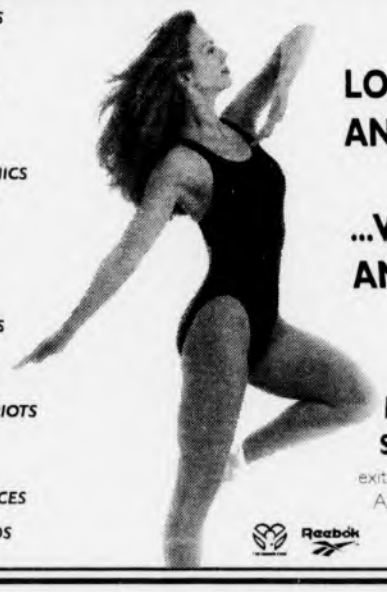
"It's a luxury and it is not prudent to pay for it out of the contingency fund," she said. "The bottom line is that it's the town's decision to whether to put it in. If they don't support it, it won't go forward."

"It's a luxury and it is not prudent to pay for it out of the contingency fund."

— School Committee Chairman Maureen Jerz.

Selectman Diane Sullivan — suggesting air conditioning should have been included in the project from the outset because year-round schools may become the norm — warned the school building committee that it had some "PR" work to do to sell this to town meeting.

Schools Supt. Stephen Hart said to include air conditioning would have meant cutting elsewhere.



"We would never cut something we use on a 10-month basis for a six-week summer," he said.

Selectmen voted 4-1 to support the town meeting article asking for the $100,000 appropriation with Brown opposed.

BRAIN TEASER

Let's start this week with a little brain teaser — this picture was taken in 1929, it is a well-known Cohasset family! Do you know who the family is? Who the baby is? One hint, four more children followed! Mull it over, I'll give you the answer next week!

This picture was taken in 1929, it is a well-known Cohasset family! Do you know who the family is? Who the baby is?

COHASSET ON THE MAP

Did you happen to catch The Boston Globe's article on John Kuntz last week in the theater section? He is surely putting Cohasset on the map! He is appearing at Little Flags Theatre (576-2800) in Cambridge through Sept. 28. He brings back his sublimely zany hit show "Freaks," a series of gonzo monologues mixing parody and pathos in celebration of the neurosis of everyday life. He has some new material which includes John playing detective, suspects and victim. It is a solo performance, and plays Wednesdays and Thursdays at 8 and Sundays at 7 p.m. Try to get there, you'll be happy that you did — from all accounts John is super.

MORE KUNTZ FAMILY NEWS

More Kuntz family news — Midge and Dennis Kuntz are grandparents again! Patrick Charles (PC) Kraemer was born Aug. 4, he weighed 8-1/2 pounds and "has a full head of hair." Patrick joins his sister Nicole (she is five) and Alex (who is two) — you know that their parents, Nancy and Roberto Kraemer, are two busy people! They make their home in Cary, N.C., so you-know-who make several trips there! Ask to see pictures!

CALL FOR ART ENTRIES

Attention all of you artists, the South Shore Art Center has put out the call for entries for the Annual Blue Ribbon members show. The exhibition is open to all members of the Art Center. Work should be delivered to the Art Center Saturday (Sept. 27), from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., and Tuesday (Sept. 30), from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. The exhibition will run from Oct. 3 until Nov. 9. We'll be reporting more information, in the meantime call 383-2787 if you are an artist with a question!

CARLY GUNDERSEN ARRIVES!

Speaking of babies, there's a brand new one in Cohasset! And we are lucky enough to have her living near Red Gate Lane. Her name is Carly Allison Gundersen. She was born Aug. 12 and she weighed 7 pounds 4 ounces. Her mom and dad are Suzanne and Harold Gundersen — they walk a lot, be sure to give Carly a huge Cohasset welcome when you see her!

HATS OFF CELESTE!

Celeste (Prisble) Garvey, the daughter of Dan and Yvonne Prisble, has graduated from Catherine Hinds School of Skin Care with an advanced degree in aesthetics, with a concentration on age management. Celeste received her state license in July. Congratulations!

GET WELL SOON

We certainly hope that Pat Walsh feels better as she reads this, and that she is up and around town as soon as possible!

STORY AFTERNOONS

Do you have a little one left at home, a little bit sad because all of the "big kids" are in school? Well, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is offering what might be just the thing! They will have their pre-school story hour Thursday afternoons at 1 and Friday mornings at 10, starting Oct. 2. Your child must be at le[illegible] 3-1/2 to take part in the progra[illegible] which includes picture book stories, crafts, songs and fingerplays. Please call the library at 383-1348 to register, they do have a super duper time.

FIELD LOOKS GREAT

Hopefully by now most of you have been up to see Alumni Field and how wonderful it looks — people from surrounding towns are in awe of it, too! Naturally you noticed the CHS planted in mums as you drove up! It was planted by Joey Sestito (with Grandpa Carl watching his every move) and Bob Ripley and George Haley doing all of the edging the following week. Tell all of them when you see them how grand it looks! In fact, tell all of the workers who labored so hard to make the opening a success, exactly how much you appreciate their efforts!

EXXON TO REOPEN SOON

Everyone is wondering when Leo's Exxon will re-open, seems like it is taking forever! Bob and Leo must be anxious to get back to work also — and Leo has lots of "around town" news, most of it printable! Before long we'll be there to get gas and coffee, and chat — just like in the "olden days!" Wonder if they will have a pot-bellied stove to sit around while the chatter takes place!

Guarded enthusiasm

There's a lot of excitement and momentum building as the South Shore prepares for the revival of the Old Colony line next week. The MBTA is planning all the hoopla and pageantry possible to mark this momentous occasion following a nearly 40-year hiatus of commuter rail service on the South Shore.

The excitement is also tinged with a certain amount of fear and trepidation. And rightly so.

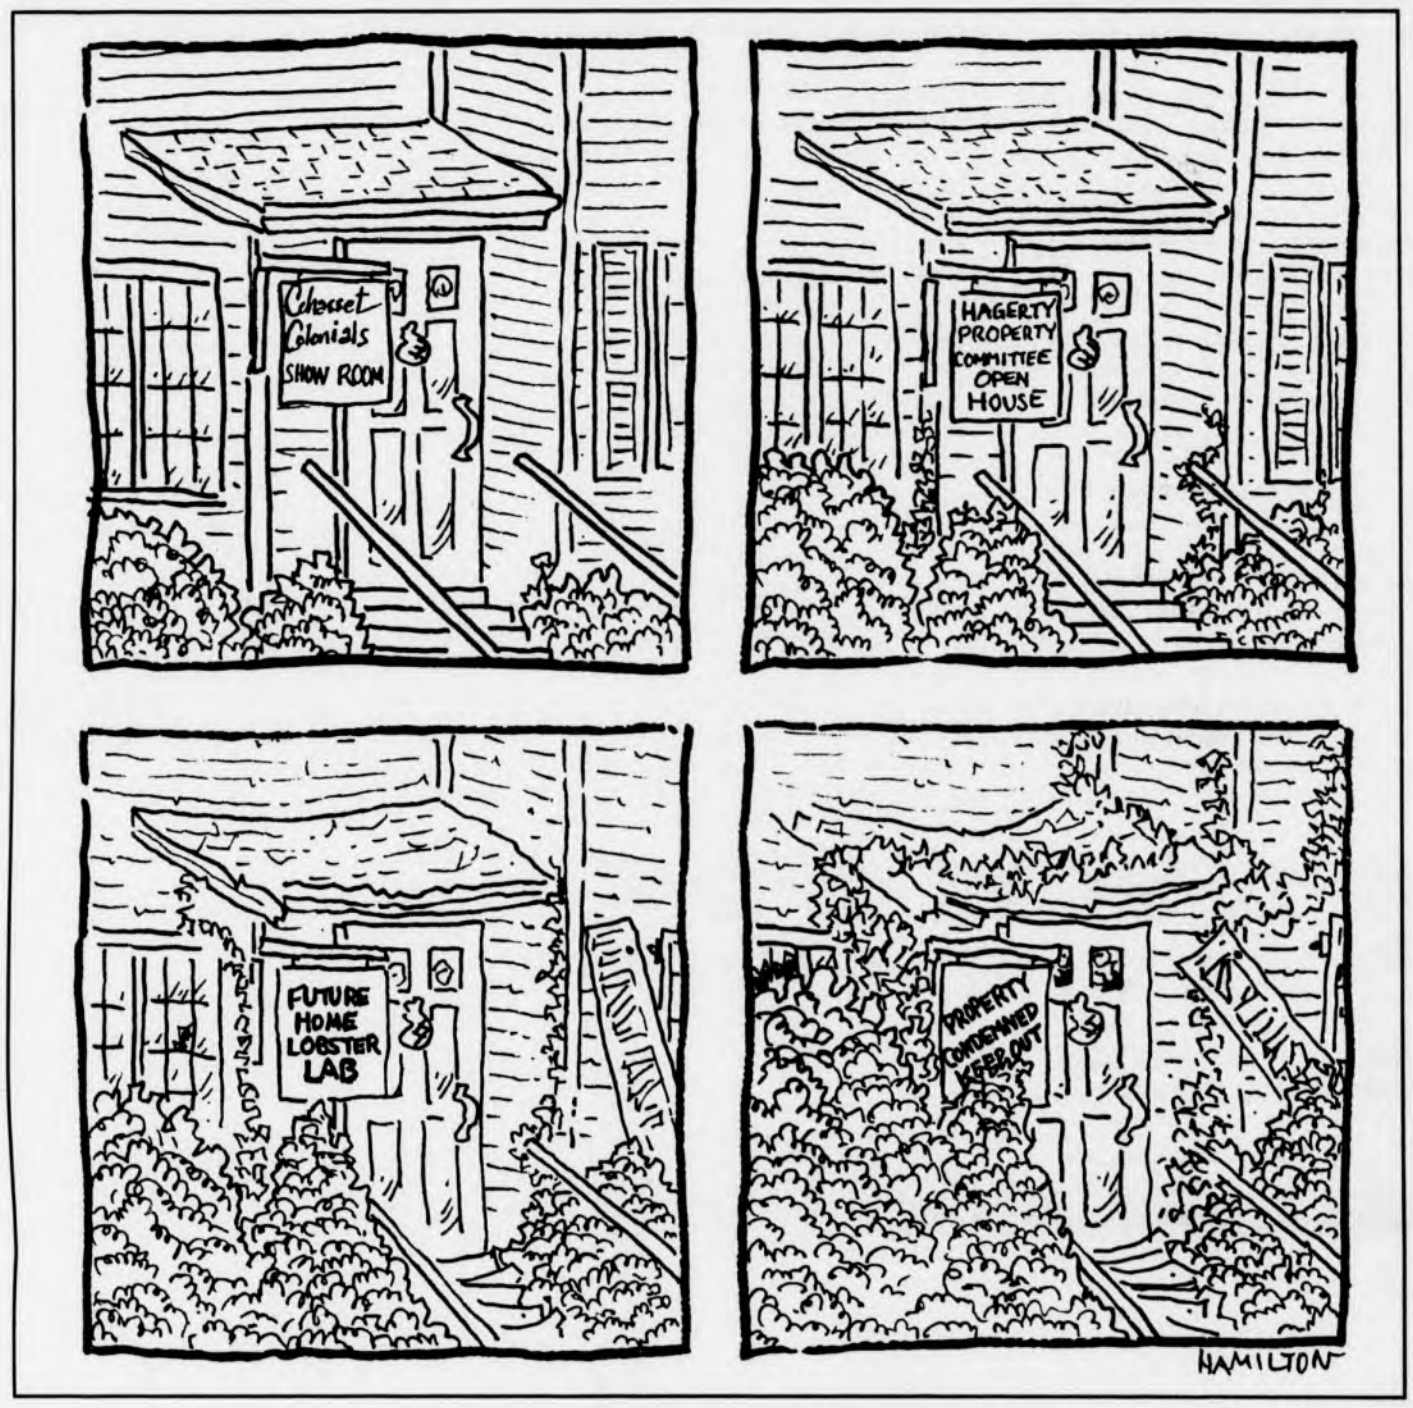
While we welcome the train's return, there are a lot of issues which still need to be resolved. We have always supported the revival of the commuter rail and see it as representing tremendous opportunities for our communities — not the least of which may be an end to traffic gridlock on Route 3.

Anyone who travels the highway to work daily, or even occasionally, knows it is like a parking lot during commuter hours: traffic is at a virtual standstill.

But we are not blind to unresolved issues, such fears and frustration surrounding the Greenbush segment of the train. Clearly, however, our biggest issue is about safety, how the MBTA plans to maintain standards and how it plans to continue to educate the public.

The inordinate amount of grade crossings immediately comes to mind.

In Hingham, through which the proposed Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad would pass, there would be seven grade crossings within nine-tenths of one mile.



The train would pass through Greenbush's 43 grade crossings towns 24 times a day. In communities where the train has been dormant for so long, these crossings pose some serious problems. The MBTA says it is working diligently to make the areas as safe as possible and only time will tell. Our job will be to keep MBTA officials to their word to guarantee they are taking nothing for granted.

Then there's the issue of educating children and others about the dangers of trains. Historically, trains have always held a magical place in our hearts. Many curiosity seekers will be watching as the trains roll past their homes and through the stations.

Teens have also been known to tempt fate on the train tracks. Witness an event recently at the Montello station in Brockton where a youngster reportedly walked deliberately in front of a train and laughed when the engineer had to slam on the brakes to avoid him.

Here again is where we need MBTA officials work with school leaders and other community organizations to make sure the word gets out about the dangers associated with trains. The MBTA must work tirelessly in the months ahead to assure that its public service messages about safety are getting across. (In today's paper we feature a special section titled "Rail Revival" which offers numerous safety tips.)

On balance, the coming of the commuter rail is a positive step and represents economic and social opportunities for the South Shore. We just can't lose sight of the inherent problems it also brings.

Boy Scout cleanup greatly appreciated

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Cohasset Conservation Trust, owner of Bassing Beach, and of the many people who will visit in months to come, I wish to thank members of Cohasset Boy Scout Troop 28 for their good work in cleaning the beach last Saturday afternoon, Sept. 20. In a concentrated two-hour sweep, a dozen Scouts, led by Scoutmaster Phil Lehr and Assistant Scoutmaster Bob Dennis, filled 22 large bags with trash collected from the beach's most-used stretch west of the breakwater. While bagging this debris, they counted and recorded every cigarette butt and coffee cup on a form provided for the purpose by Coastsweep, the statewide beach-cleaning program mounted annually by Massachusetts Coastal Zone Management. A similar effort was made by volunteers on Sandy Beach recently, I understand.

This is the seventh year the Boy Scouts have cleaned this portion of Bassing Beach. Perhaps in years to come the effort can be expanded to the much longer stretch east of the breakwater. Maybe other youth groups in town will rise to this challenge.

The benefits are not just a cleaner beach for all to enjoy but also renewed respect for the land and water's edge by those who take part in the effort.

Congratulations and thanks to the Good Scouts of Troop 28!

John F. H artshorne, President
Cohasset Conservation Trust

Lobster Lab stance supported

Dear Selectmen:

I wanted to take a moment to compliment your recent decision regarding the Lobster Lab.

With all of the controversy the site and various proposals have generated, it was nice that the issue may see the Town Meeting floor instead of being decided elsewhere. Perhaps in the near future this issue will be settled once and for all for the best interest of the town.

It was my understanding that Ms. McMorris presented the motion for bringing the issue to Town Meeting. My compliments to her, and again to all of you for supporting her in this good, community-representing move.

Charlie Butman celebrates a century of living well

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

The only 100-year-old man in Scituate, Charles Butman of Cohasset knows all the secrets to staying healthy, being happy and living long. But he will only tell you some of them.

"I don't believe in giving away secrets. Some of my secrets, even if someone gave me $10,000, I wouldn't even think of giving them away," he said recently from his residence at the Life Care Center of the South Shore.

"I used to swim the whole length of the beach on top of the water. I could jump right in the water right now and swim."
– CHARLES BUTMAN.

But those close to him know one of Butman's secrets to a long and successful life. A pioneer of physical fitness, Butman recognized the importance of exercise long before the general public figured it out.

"In a way it doesn't surprise me that he has lived to be 100," said his daughter, Dorothy. "He was always physically fit. It was very important to him."

Known as an upstanding, trustworthy and honest gentleman, Butman has spent much of his life keeping his word and keeping in shape. Butman celebrated his 100th birthday at the center on July 18 with cake and watermelon.

He was born and raised in Cohasset, where he spent his childhood swimming at Sandy Beach. Butman also raised his two daughters, Dorothy and Betty, and two boys, Charles and Robert, in Cohasset.

Spending time at the beach paid off for Butman in the end, who swam and raced along the coast endlessly — one of his secrets to good health.

"If you swim above the water, you will go faster and you won't use as much energy," explained Butman, who taught the children at Sandy Beach to swim. "I used to swim the whole length of the beach on top of the water. I could jump right in the water right now and swim."

But he never swam in the Olympic Games because "I didn't want to ruin my health," he said.

Butman also enjoyed motorcycle racing, weight-lifting and jujitsu, a weaponless form of self defense. His jobs as the superintendent of the Sandy Beach Association's former bath house, a carpenter and caretaker of the Cohasset Library also kept him active and busy for almost 40 years. He was also a member of the Cohasset Humane Society when it was in existence.

Clark Chatterton, a longtime Cohasset resident, remembers seeing Butman every time he went to the bath house as a young kid.

"He's tremendous, a strict disciplinarian," he said. "We need more people like him now."

Even at 100, Butman keeps active. At the Life Care Center of the South Shore, he visits other residents and tells them stories about the times he spent at Sandy Beach, said his nurse, Brian Hannon.

"He's in good health. He still gets himself around," said Hannon, who called Butman determined in his will to remain self-sufficient. "He's kind of a character. I think he'll be around for a while."

Butman's daughter-in-law, Lois, called him trustworthy and hardworking with a good sense of humor.

"He likes to do all the talking," she said.

The happiest times of his life were spent with his late wife, Eleanor, whom he met at a Masonic Dance in East Weymouth. They were married in 1924.

"We got along good together," he said. "She never could swim and keep up with me. She just liked the sport. I liked the sport but I liked to race, too."

The secret to a happy marriage, he said, is changing the conversation when it takes a bad turn.

Other secrets behind keeping young at heart include staying away from liquor, deep breathing and a special blend of honey and vinegar.

"It's the most healthy medicine you can take," he said. "Take one in the morning and one in the evening."

Town meeting to decide Learning Lab's fate

To the Editor:

The voters will consider again, at the special town meeting Oct. 27, whether to have a Learning Lab for Marine Biology at Hagerty building. It would enrich the lives of many students, and probably be the deciding influence on the careers of more than a few. Yet we have an element in town who think having a few more parking spaces for boat trailers on weekends is more important. Why don't they go a step farther and argue for paving the town common so we could revive bowling at the center?

They try to avoid being seen as Philistines by mumbling that the Lab idea is great, but can be located elsewhere. Where? It's ridiculous for a sea-side town to locate a marine biology lab, that requires circulating sea water, remote from sea water. And it's disingenuous to suggest locations that are far too small and would be prohibitively costly to purchase.

Some resist the Lab on the specious ground that "we didn't purchase the property for that purpose." Well, the warrant article lists several possible uses, and ends with the phrase "and such other uses as the town may determine." Surely, a use beneficial to the town, but not recognized at the time of purchase, should not be rejected out of hand.

The voters should consider whether it is reasonable for the selectmen to require the proponents to provide copies of grant proposals to foundations, lists of potential donors, estimates of donations from each source, etc. as a condition of the lease. Should proponents have to expend their time and energy developing details of the programs to be offered, for the capricious approval of the selectmen, instead of getting on with the all-important task of fund-raising? Why should the background and education of future staff be established, the method of recruiting etc. have to be established before a lease can be granted? (I give the selectmen credit, however, for giving little credence to the town manager's even more unreasonable recommendations).

The citizens' article at the previous town meeting was placed on the warrant not only to obtain voter support for the concept, but to establish the term of the lease as 10 years. Town counsel attempted unsuccessfully, when preparing the warrant, to alter the language to read one year. A proposed amendment from the floor to reduce the term was roundly defeated. (Why would any sensible person expect fellow citizens to expend the tremendous effort to establish a Lab without assurance that the effort would result in a continuing benefit, rather than be subject to termination just as the benefits begin to be realized)? The article was passed with 2 to 1 in favor. Yet the selectmen have asked the proponents to consider deferring the beginning of the lease for a year, and to consider a shorter lease which could be extended as certain goals are met. How on earth can donors be expected to cough up unless it is clear that there is a firm commitment from the town for a long-term lease, and not subject to termination because fund-raising lags predictions, or permitting has created delay, or some other trip wire in the lease triggered? There has to be a flexible, cooperative (rather than punitive) spirit for such an ambitious plan to succeed by the efforts of volunteers.

Parking should be a non-issue, because the lot is essentially unused except on summer weekends when the Lab will not be open. Whether the Lab is there or not, the evidence is that even on summer weekends, the lot is seldom if ever fully utilized. But undoubtedly parking will continue to be the favorite argument of those who oppose the Lab, whatever the real reason for opposition.

Obviously, only Cohasset donors will respond unless the Lab is billed as regional, else there is no hope of attracting money from foundations, corporations and others beyond Cohasset. Yet the realities of transportation would make Cohasset residents the primary beneficiaries. So it's pretty inane to oppose the project, or oppose the lease of Cohasset town property for the project, on the grounds that it's regional.

Either the voters of Cohasset want the Lab, or they don't. If they want it, they must recognize that every competing quibble cannot be honored, every question or concern cannot be resolved at the outset, and reliance must be placed on the integrity, competence and worldly experience of the proponents to do the best they can.

Landfill odor a possibility

To the Editor:

On Sept. 11, Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill filed its application with the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) for its proposed 16-foot vertical expansion, which included its plans to passively vent landfill gas into the air, starting Jan. 1.

Based on air dispersion modeling conducted by CHL, the DEP has concluded that this passive venting of landfill gases — with no treatment — could cause "odor nuisance conditions." Cohasset residents and visitors to Whitney Woods will again experience that noxious odor from CHL that makes it hard to breathe, can make one sick, and creates a nuisance.

Landfill gas is composed about 50 percent with explosive methane, which presently is migrating in high concentrations underground toward the adjacent Norfolk Conveyor property. If this methane gets into a building, just one spark could blow it up.

While CHL does have to vent the gas, to reduce this underground migration of gas, they should be required to actively collect the gas and to filter it to take out the contaminants which cause the noxious landfill odor.

I urge your readers to send comments to Gov. Cellucci (Statehouse, Boston, MA 02133, fax: 727-9725) or call his office at 727-6250. Ask him to stop CHL's plan to vent untreated landfill gas into the air we breathe.

'Thank you Dr. Sceery'

feet proclaimed "Thank you, Dr. Sceery, for the 44 years of TLC." Sceery could be found inside mingling with the multitude, many of whom were his patients as children, others were parents who brought their own children to see Dr. Sceery as patients and some were both. The event was organized by mother and daughter, Joanne Hart and Charlene Riley, long-time neighbors of the doctor, and also acted as a place where residents of Cohasset were able to get together and reminisce about the nearly half century since Sceery opened his doors here in town.

Marion Hailer, Barbara Chase, Joan Graham and Joan McDonald, all of whom were some of the first of thousands of mothers to bring their children to Sceery, and over the years have become personal friends with him, as well as with each other, said, that all their children loved him, for he made them feel at ease. They continued to say that he paid all of his attention to the children to the extent of almost disregarding the parents. He would take early morning phone calls as well as make house calls at any time of the day or night and if his patient was extremely ill, he would drive, with the mother and child in the back seat, to Mass. General Hospital where, due to his affiliation with it, he was able to ensure the very best treatment available.

In the summer of 1953, Sceery moved to Cohasset to begin a pediatrics practice after graduating from Harvard's Medical School and completing his training at Mass. General Hospital.

"It was July Fourth," Sceery recounted, "that I had my first patient. It was a little baby with a high fever. My diagnosis was Roseola and I told the parents that their child would get a rash in three days and that's exactly what happened."

Since then Sceery has watched the town double in size. He has held the position of Cohasset's school doctor since 1956 and has been instrumental in helping causes such as the proposed construction of the new elementary school, putting in the town sewer system, and the enactment of zoning laws. Sceery was awarded the Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year in 1995 due to the high esteem and regard so many in the town hold for him.

John Field, 45, who now lives in Douglas, Mass., about an hour and a half away, said that he wouldn't miss wishing the doctor a happy retirement for the world. He has known Sceery since he was a boy of 7 or 8 when he was one of his patients. Field said that over the years he has looked to Sceery for medical support and he has always been there.

"I broke my back 14 or 15 years ago and Dr. Sceery got me admitted to Mass. General where I was able to make a full recovery. When I was a kid I never dreaded going to the doctor. He is very trusting," he said.

Also in attendance was Mark Cigrino who at age 7 was diagnosed with polio by Sceery for the second time.

"The other doctors thought it was impossible because I had been given the vaccine," Cifrino recalled, "but it turns out that Dr. Sceery was right after all and because of the early detection and proper treatment I was able to walk it off over the years."

When asked if he has any plans for his retirement Sceery, who is now 77, replied, "Not really, for now I will remain as Cohasset's school doctor, but besides that I'm going to try and relax a little."

Local bridge jumping can be a dangerous sport

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Herbert Towle is worried about he has termed a "dangerous, new sport" in Cohasset: jumping off the Cunningham Bridge. Towle is worried about young people who jump off the Cunningham Bridge into the shallow waters below.

In a letter to selectmen, Towle admitted that many Cohasset residents, himself included, have jumped off the Mill Bridge. But the water beneath the Mill Bridge is deep enough for a high jump.

Towle is worried that someone is going to get killed jumping off the Cunningham Bridge, and has suggested a $100 fine to discourage jumpers.

But Cohasset already has a law that allows police to assess a $25 fine for anyone caught jumping off a bridge into the water, according to Police Chief Brian Noonan.

Noonan said he remembers at least two people have died at the Cunningham Bridge in the past. One jumped and one drowned, Noonan said.

Noonan said he is aware of jumping at both bridges, and he is not shy about imposing the fine. Except the fine is not an effective deterrent, Noonan said.

So he has used a more effective strategy: the parking ticket.

"We try to head off jumping as much as possible," Noonan said.

> "We try to head off jumping as much as possible. We tag all the vehicles with parking tickets, which deters jumpers from parking."
> — POLICE CHIEF BRIAN NOONAN.

"We tag all the vehicles with parking tickets, which deters jumpers from parking."

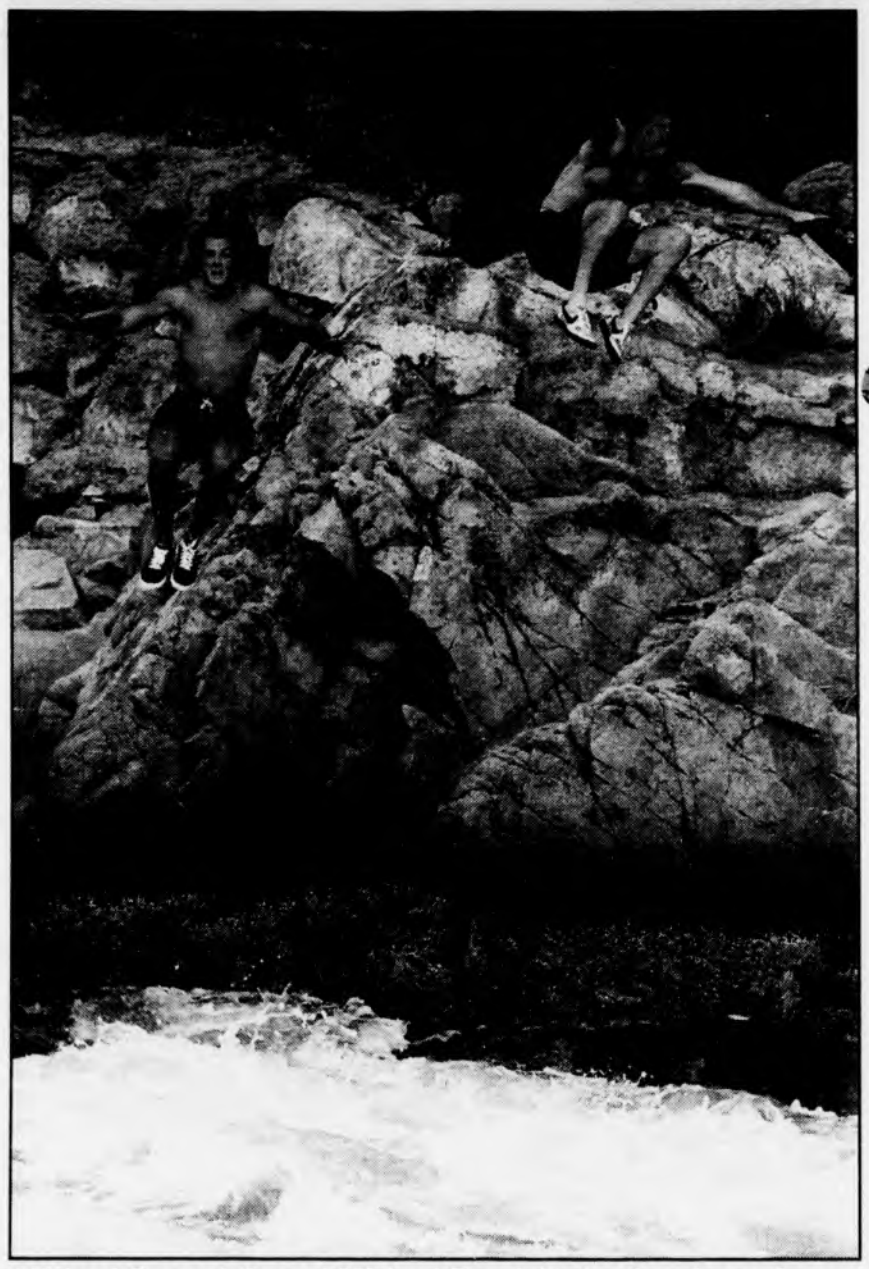
Noonan said people also tend to come running when they find out there's an officer handing out parking tickets.

Noonan said it is difficult for a 17-man police force to cover the town 24-hours a day and still keep an eye out for bridge jumpers.

"We try to curtail with summer postings, but it's difficult," Noonan said. "There are hundreds of them that come throughout the summer and we're constantly shooing them away."

The Cohasset force increase by two officers to 19 men during the summer.

Noonan admitted that more people use the Mill Bridge because the water is 20-30 feet and jumping is less risky than at the Cunningham Bridge.



"The Cunningham Bridge is extremely dangerous," Noonan said. "The water is shallow and there are other problems like rip tides and a strong undertow."

Noonan said many of the jumpers are kids from out of town seeking a thrill.

"Word gets out and we get people from Easton, Brockton, Bridgewater, Holbrook," Noonan said. "They tend to be obnoxious too. They swear at cars, or drop their pants and 'moon' drivers."

Noonan said another problem is what he termed the "stupid factor." Many middle-aged Cohasset men agreed at their high school graduation to meet in 20 years and jump off one of the bridges.

"We just do the best we can to deter jumping," Noonan said.

Michael Coner, left, and Michael Rossini take the plunge from the Mill bridge on Border Street into the Gulf River.

COHASSET MARINER

injuries have hampered Lady Skippers

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

You could forgive girls soccer coach Maureen O'Day-Clark if she's more comfortable carrying around a medical dictionary than a scorebook this season.

Currently on their third goaltender this year, the team has now accumulated almost as many injuries this year (6) as losses (7) after dropping a tough 1-0 decision to Rockland on Tuesday afternoon.

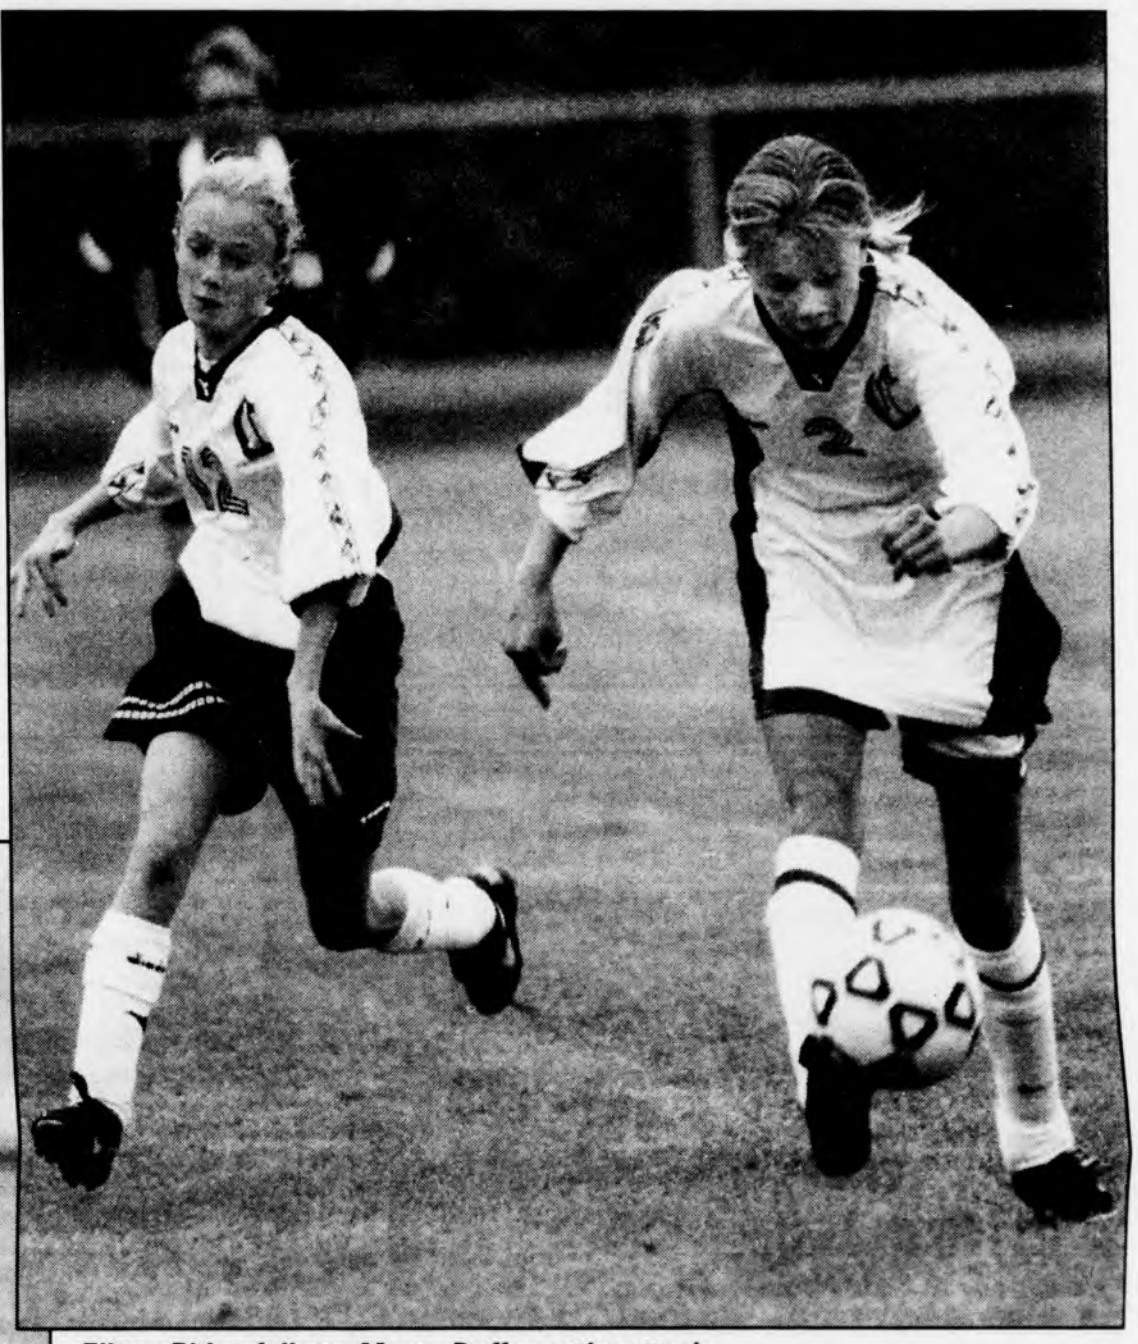
But through each twisted ankle, sprained knee or any other mangled appendage that has happened so far in this winless season, O'Day-Clark said the heart and spirit of the team are still in perfect condition.

"No matter the score has been, the girls have been out there supporting one another and giving it their best effort," said O'Day-Clark. "You cannot fault our effort in these games. We're working so hard that something good has got to happen in due time."

The Rockland game was a case in point. An up-and-down affair throughout most of the game, the homestanding Bulldogs were finally able to get onto the scoreboard when Cara Folino tipped in a crossing pass by freshman goaltender Sarah Kidder early in the second half.

By the end of the contest, the valiant Lady Skippers team gave it their best shot to tie the game but just ran out of gas.

"That's been the story of the year. We play of good first half but by the end of the game we're just tired," explained O'Day-Clark.



With all the injuries, the team has a right to be in need of a breather. The manpower loss has left the team at times with only one or two extra players for most of the year.

"The Rockland game was really our first that I've have a selection of players to choose from," said the coach. "It was exciting. I almost didn't know what to do."

Clara Sceery controls the ball away from a Norton defender.

Besides the injuries, the team has also had to deal with being a young team in transition. Co-captain defenders Ali Kinchla and Hannah Bregan, who are both just back from injuries, are the only senior members on a team dominated by underclassmen.

"Playing young on the varsity level is a great experience, but it's a definite learning experience. Right now we are taking our lumps, but we are going to learn from it," said O'Day Clark.

Also seeing time on the varsity level this season are goalies Alex DeRosa and Alex D'Urso, along with defender Maura Duffy, forward Caitlin O'Neil, midfielder/forward Katie Brister, defender Jessie Zerendow, defender Jenny Chastain, defender Alyssa McNamara, midfielder Zoe Davis, midfielder Jacqueline Kahn, forward/midfielder Eileen Ridge, defender Alyssa Conely, forward Sarah Motley, midfielder/defender Caitlin Stansell, forward midfielder Susan Thompson and defender Clara Sceery.

EXTRA POINTS DAVID WOLCOTT

Why don't these people just get it?

As our beloved New England Patriots prepared for the dastardly Jets over the weekend, there seemed to be something missing. A special little something that's not been there all through this first session of Camp Carroll.

It wasn't a fear and loathing of the man running the show. Although Pete Carroll is as likely to hug a player as Bill Parcells would question some rookie's manhood or talk disparagingly about their mother, it wasn't that.

What was missing this year was something from the daily press chats that Parcells would have with members of the Boston media.

Almost daily, the sports reports would beam home pictures of the Patriot beat writers scratching their heads as The Big Tuna would tell them in the vaguest of terms that one player "gets it," while another player "doesn't get it", which would often be followed by a comment likening the player to a golf ball lost in the high grass.

To whit-: back a few years ago Marion Butts never seemed to get it and was on the first train to Palookaville quicker than a hiccup. One the other hand, Sam Gash seemed to get it so much that Parcells stopped just short of adopting the popular young fullback.

Since Parcells never really defined what makes the difference between a player getting it or not getting it before beating a hasty retreat to the swamplands of New Jersey (don't be fooled by their exhibition season, those four Jets draft picks going to look good in coming years), I will endeavor to answer this burning question.

Curtis Martin gets it, no doubt about it and no questions asked. The stories of his visits to local hospitals are too numerous to mention. He's young, set for life financially, but still is humble to a fault, signs autographs by the bucket, draws strength from his faith and has recently been seen more than once on the arm of sultry diva Toni Braxton.

My good friends, that is a life to behold.

During his rookie year, Martin once showed up unannounced at the Charlie Horse in West Bridgewater because a young fan had mailed him an invitation to attend his birthday party at that establishment. That says it all.

Minnesota Timberwolves man/child Kevin Garnett doesn't really get it at this point of his young life. Garnett recently turned down, with disdain none the less, a six-year $103.5 million contract extension from the team.

Stop and say this with me folks: $103.5 million over a six-year period.

I'd like digress from this column for only a second. If anyone can get a message to the Timberwolf front office, please tell them I'll take over Garnett's power forward spot for the .5 part of the deal. I'm may be only six-feet tall and not in the best of playing shape, but I'm more than willing to cheat like a son of a gun to make up for my lack of talent. If my hero Greg Kite could hang on in the NBA for a decade I must have a year or two in me.

On the other side of the ledger, Garnett's Timberwolf colleague Billy Curley gets it. At his youth basketball camp last month, Duxbury's favorite Timberwolf took as much time teaching players about being teammates, respecting the opposition and working together as he did with the lay-up drills. Who says you can't pick up life skills from sports?

On the other hand, Wil Cordero, Barry Switzer, Allen Iverson and Tony Phillips don't seem to get it. So much money, so much power, so few brain cells in actual use.

San Diego Padres powerhouse outfielder Tony Gwynn gets it, in spades. Anyone who saw the guided tour he gave of the Baseball Hall of Fame on "This Week in Baseball" over a recent weekend could actually see the emotion fill inside him as he talked about the accomplishments of legends such as Satchel Paige and Ted Williams and how they have helped shape the game he loves so much.

He gets it. And now I hope you get it, too.

Johnston a silver medalist at Eastern States National Horse Show

Sydney H. Johnston of Cohasset was the silver medalist at the Eastern States National Horse Show this past weekend and qualified as a national finalist for the Alfred B. Maclay Trophy in the Rolex-Maclay ASPCA Horsemanship Championship to be held at the 114th National Horse Show at Madison Square Garden in New York City this November.

In what is considered to be one of the most competitive annual horse shows in the Northeast, Johnston outperformed 42 other highly skilled equitation riders and was named the silver medalist and Reserved Champion of the Eastern States National Horse Show in Springfield.

Her silver medal automatically qualified her for this country's most prestigious horse show event, the 1997 Rolex-Maclay ASPCA Horsemanship Championship in New York City (Oct. 29 to Nov. 1).

Johnston, a senior at Milton Academy, was also named "Junior Rider Champion" of the Eastern States Horse Show, which is awarded to the rider that ranks the highest in overall scoring at this event. Sydney has also been invited to ride for the Young Riders of the United States Equestrian Team (USET) in Monterey, Mexico, next year to compete with riders from Central and South America.

Kathy Fletcher is Sydney's trainer and is owner of Grazing Fields Farm in Bourne.

IT'S OUR BUSINESS TO SERVE YOU

We would like to deviate from our regular travel information article this week and let you know how we feel about the service we provide to the travelling public. By the reference to "we," we are referring to most Travel Agencies.

Once again, we are being targeted by the airlines. In 1995, most airlines put a cap on the amount of commission we could receive. Now, United, American and Delta have slashed our commission to 8%, an attempt, it seems, to make more huge profits and put the local Travel Agent out of business.

We work hard to try to make your honeymoon or long awaited vacation or weekend getaway a dream come true...but we do a lot more than that. For example, we recently had a client come in to our office because he had to get out to Los Angeles that day due to a death in the family. He had already called United Airlines and was told the "special" bereavement fare was $1005! He asked for our help and he got it. Within ten minutes, he had a ticket for $575, because we knew who to call. Remember, we have access to all the major airlines' fares and rules. Another client called last week because she had to go to San Francisco in two weeks. She knew that the 14-day advance purchase fare was $529, but we were able to offer her a $100 off discount coupon! The airlines don't do that. In fact, speaking of coupons, the airlines tell people to take them to a travel agent to redeem them. Why? Because of the loss in revenue and the time involved.

We at Scituate Harbor Travel hope that you will continue to support your local Travel Agency. We are here to work for you, and get the most for your money. What makes this job especially worthwhile for us is to see the smile on a child's face when he comes in to pick up his tickets to Disney World with his family, or to hear a client say "thank you for your help."

In Toronto, the play is the thing to see

By George Hobica
CNC Travel Correspondent

Here's a little-known fact: Toronto, Ontario is the third-largest theater center in the English-speaking world, after New York and London.

It wasn't always thus. In 1962, there were only two professional live theaters in Toronto. Today, over 200 professional theater and dance companies, including non-profit and commercial ones, put on a staggering 10,000 live performances in a year. That translates, on average, to about 75 productions playing each month, appealing to a wide range of tastes and budgets: musicals, dramas, comedy, children's theater, dinner theater, native theater, avant-garde theater, and other genres.

More than seven million people attend theater in Toronto every year, half of whom are visitors to the city. No wonder that in 1993 UNESCO cited Toronto as the most culturally diverse city in the world. Best of all, you'll pay far less here than you would in New York or London. Average ticket prices range from $8 to $40 (those are Canadian dollars, so deduct 25%), with most selling for around $20. Dinner theatres range from $30 to $75, and blockbuster musicals range from $38 to over $90. With savings like those, you can pretty much pay for your airfare from Boston.

In addition, theater festivals, which showcase new works and rising talents, have become an important part of the Toronto theater mix. The exciting two-week Fringe of Toronto Festival highlights alternative theatre from across North America, and fFIDA (fringe Festival of Independent Dance Artists) showcases over 300 dance artists from around the world every summer. SummerWorks is dedicated to orginal works by Toronto artists, and the prestigious du Maurier World Stage Festival showcases new international works biennially.

Twenty years before New England farming peaked in the 1850s, neighbors celebrated the farmers' craft at cattle shows and fairs. Old Sturbridge Village will re-create an early 19th-Century Agricultural Fair on September 27 and 28.

At Old Sturbridge Village, the living history museum that portrays 1830s rural New England, two very different farms – the Freeman Farm and the Towne Farm – show some of these changes.

Livestock and produce from both farms will be on display during the Village's Agricultural Fair. The Village Common will be covered with pens for handsome and promising young heifers, bulls and sheep and boards will span the pews in the meetinghouse to display examples of the Village's finest crafts.

The galleries will be hung with quilts and rugs and dozens of the Village's finest heirloom vegetables and fruits will be on display. Cider making will take place in Towne's horse-powered mill, with apples from the Village's orchards crushed on Saturday and pressed into juice on Sunday.

On Sunday at 11 a.m., a "Trial of Working Oxen" will take place.

At 2 p.m. on Sunday, there will be a Plowing Match.

On both days, visitors can witness hearth cooking and milking cows or tour the Freeman Farm's root cellar for a glimpse into one of the ways foods were preserved 150 years ago.

Fall family outings: Apple-picking, hayrides, a pumpkin festival and more

Four-year-old Jessica Fisk, has learned that searching for the perfect jack-o-lantern can be a hard task

By Stephanie Maughan
CNC Travel Correspondent

Picking apples and pumpkins at a local farm is a terrific way to spend a fall weekend day with your children.

Thousands from as far away as Portland, Maine, bring their kids to Cider Hill Farm at 45 Fern Ave. in Amesbury to do just that from Labor Day until just after Thanksgiving.

When Ed Cook, a former engineer, and his wife, Eleanor, bought this 130-acre farm in 1978, they envisioned it as a small-scale retirement project. Their son Glenn and daughter-in-law Karen had much bigger ideas.

Together, they have developed an operation based on sustainable agriculture which includes fields where you can pick fruit all summer, a bakery, a cider mill and a farm store.

Cider Hill, which has been featured on the PBS show "Victory Garden," is best known for its apples and cider. The Cooks grow 45 varieties, including Macintosh, Cortland and Mutsu, a green apple from Japan.

Along with the fun of picking their own apples, many also enjoy the free hayride to the orchard. Afterwards, children can play in the miniature barn area with sheep and loads of hay. They also enjoy playing on the "farm swings," made from recycled tires shaped like animals.

Some of the Cooks' apples are harvested and pressed into cider at the mill. That cider has received quite a few awards. In 1993, they won their first statewide Cider Taste-Off, sponsored by the Cider Guild of Massachusetts and the Department of Food and Agriculture, and they've won it several years since.

Cider Hill has also earned a reputation for other products. It's often called the "peach farm" because you can pick peaches and buy peach pies and muffins made in the bakery; the Cooks are working on peach preserves.

They also grow vegetables and sweet corn, blueberries strawberries and raspberries. Perhaps their most unusual crop is honey from their own beehives; they even have one in the store.

The store also sells apple butter, strawberry jam, home-grown dried flower bouquets and specialty foods such as cinnamon plum tea jam. For more information about Cider Hill Farm, call (508) 388-5525.

Smolak Farms, another large farm at 315 South Bradford St. in North Andover, is open from May through December.

Mike Smolak has been running this 160-acre farm since 1974, complete with farm animals, a greenhouse, bakery and store.

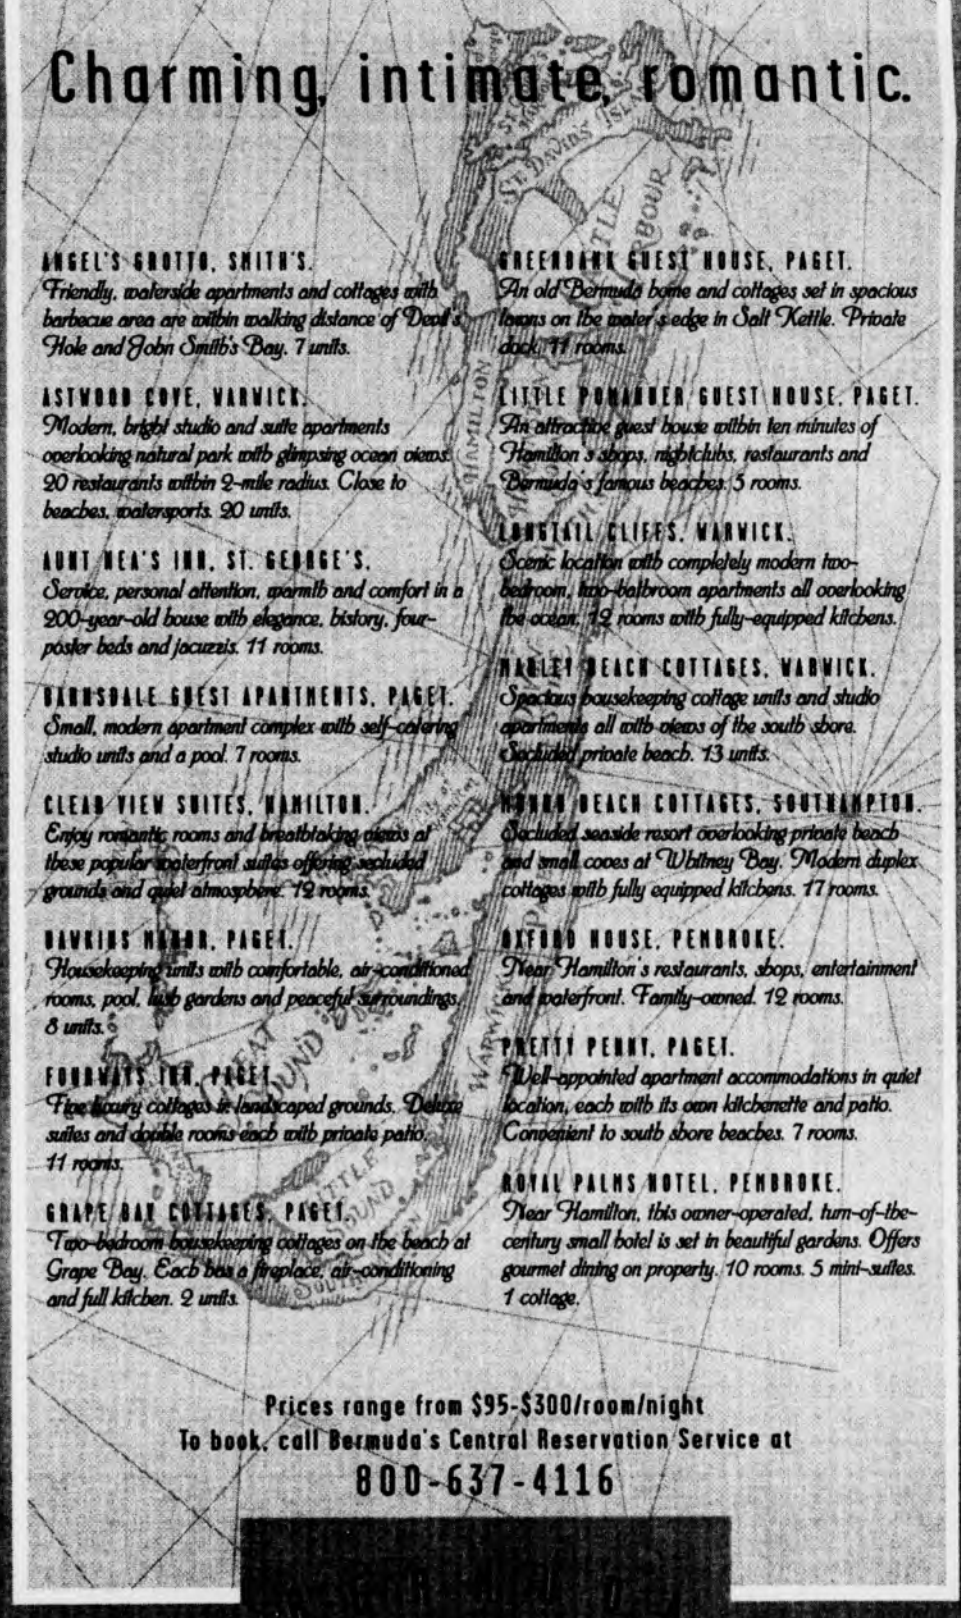
You can start your visit by picking your own crops. Like the Cooks, Smolak grows apples, pumpkins, peaches and strawberries, but he also has nectarines, plums and sour cherries.

Back at the farm stand, your children can feed Smolak's farm animals – pigs, billy goats and sheep – which are in small pens nearby. Afterwards, they can play in the adjacent playground. Just beyond it, the fallow deer are another big attraction.

For lunch, the farm store sells hot dogs, homemade calzones and pizza. You can also buy homemade cider donuts and baked goods prepared from the farm's crops, including apple pie and apple crisp. While there, you might want to show your children the beehive. Afterwards, you can enjoy picnicking by the pond across from the farm stand while watching the swans.

After lunch, you might want to visit Smolak's recently opened "quaking" bog across the road from the main farm. A former cranberry bog, now you'll also see azaleas, wild blueberries and even carnivorous pitcher plants. As you walk the boardwalk, you can actually bounce on it; the rotting vegetation underneath acts like a sponge.

The covered wagon hayrides are very popular. From May through November, many families take group hayrides. You'll ride through the farm, stopping by a bonfire to enjoy cider donuts and apple cider.



Weekends in September and October, Smolak is having covered wagon hayrides, pony rides and face painting. For lunch, there'll be fried chicken, meatball subs, hot dogs and hot apple crisp.

Smolak is famous for his weekend theme festivals, held almost monthly, which feature different aspects of his operation. On October 19, Great Pumpkin Day, you can carve a pumpkin, take a hayride and eat pumpkin pie.

At the Christmas Open House held over Thanksgiving weekend, you can choose a Christmas tree or, if you are more ambitious, cut your own, and buy decorations, including gingerbread houses, at the store. While shopping, enjoy cider and cider donuts. Your children will probably want to see Santa Claus and take a ride on a pony dressed as a reindeer. For more information about Smolak Farms, call (508) 687-4029.

PERSONAL FINANCE

Investing: Setting a steady course

By Amy K. Barrett
& Andrew Peinberg
Worth Magazine

Jane, a 50-year-old single woman from South Carolina, became seduced by the success of the stock market. At the beginning of this year she became convinced that she needed to increase the equity allocation in her $600,000 investment portfolio to 75 percent, from 60 percent (a safe move, it would seem, as the Standard & Poor's 500 Index, which measures the broad market, has gained 100.3 percent since the end of 1994 – 24.2 percent of that gain in this year).

But her financial planner, Cheryl Holland, of J. E. Wilson Advisors in Columbia, South Carolina, objected – not because she thought that a 75 percent allocation was unreasonable, or even that the stock market would plunge soon.

Holland simply referred to the statement of investment principles that Jane had filled out when she opened her account. And the statement showed that a greater equity allocation would be too risky for Jane's financial goals.

"I thought that if her equity exposure got that high and we had a really bad quarter or two, then my client would get out of stocks all together," says Holland. Because there is always a chance that the stock market could suffer a major downturn investors may have forgotten this as the market has climbed to record highs over the last three years.

Jane is not the only investor who has let a soaring stock market or the gangbuster success of an individual company tempt her into making a risky investment decision – one that she wouldn't feel comfortable with if she gained a more detached, rational perspective.

More than a few anxious investors simply take investment cues from the morning newspaper, or anything that promises a 20 percent return, says Eleanor Blayney, a financial planner with Sullivan, Blayney Bruyette, & Blayney in McLean, Virginia. "People who lack plans usually have a very short-term focus."

Taking the time to create an investment policy, or a statement of investment principle, can help investors like Jane stay focused on their investment goals, despite sharp changes in market climate. Holland has all of her clients set investing guidelines that they can feel comfortable with for a period of time.

However, if you assume that an investment policy can predict the performance of the stock, bond, real estate or any other markets – scratch that. Similar to a mutual fund's prospectus, a policy's purpose is simply to keep the financial mission on target.

Hence the first rule in creating an investment policy: Investor, know thyself. Whether an investor draws up a policy alone or with the help of a financial planner, the first thing that she needs to articulate is her big-picture financial goals, her feelings about risk and her expectations of financial gains.

For instance, when Jane sat down with Holland to describe her attitude toward risk, she stated that her threshold was a 12 percent loss on her investment. And that assessment led to Holland's suggestion that she allocate 60 percent of her funds into stocks and the remaining 40 percent into bonds.

By putting more than the designated amount into equities, Jane would have increased her vulnerability to loss as well as her exposure to gain.

Graduating to a 75 percent equity holding, with the balance in bonds, would leave her exposed to a potential loss of 19 percent, Holland says. After re-reading her own description of her attitude toward risk, Jane realized she didn't want to increase her equity holdings.

Investors should review their portfolios periodically to determine whether the investments are still worth holding onto. This will be particularly helpful when one or more of the equities are not performing well.

The best investment policies require you to examine the purpose of each investment within your overall plan, forcing you to articulate the reasoning behind your investment choices. For example if you invest in a fund that tracks the S&P 500 index, you should determine what makes you choose that fund over others with a similar focus. It could be simply that your choice of fund has a lower expense ratio or has been around longer.

Investors should review their portfolios periodically to determine whether the investments are still worth holding onto. This will be particularly helpful when one or more of the equities are not performing well.

You can go down your check list of the reasons you bought the investments in the first place; if your reasons are still sound, keep them and endure the bumpy ride. The investment policy will serve as a brake on any rash decisions triggered by anxiety.

And regular check-ups are necessary for keeping your portfolio balanced as well. One of your asset allocations may have grown out of proportion, requiring you to sell some of it and invest it in the laggard allocation in order to re-balance the portfolio.

While most financial advisors will do a good job of translating your risk tolerance and your financial goals into an appropriate portfolio, investors who can't afford one can use other resources to construct their portfolio.

Some money management firms have printed material or software programs that give investors a chance to plug in variables like age, assets, desired financial goal, etc.

Using past performance of stocks, bonds and cash, an investor can determine which asset blend might fit best with her financial profile.

The Vanguard Group, for example, offers an investment planner kit at no charge and a more sophisticated software program called "Retirement Planner, Retirement Manager" for $15.

Holland recommends a product called Roger Gibson's Asset Allocation, which costs about $50, and has more in-depth and sophisticated advice. "You have to spend some time with it, you can't breeze through it," she says.

The most important part of the process is making a well-suited plan and then sticking to it. Don't forget to review it every so often to make sure it is still aligned with your goals.

Time can alter your investment objectives: A policy that works when you are 30 years old might not be the one you want at 40.

Inmates paint town hall

Thanks to the Braintree Alternative Center, the inside of town hall is getting a new look.

The vestibule in the auditorium, restrooms and meeting rooms in town hall are being painted for the cost of materials and lunch, Building Inspector Robert Egan said.

"They gave us three weeks and we'll go as far as we can in those three weeks," he said.

Over the years, the Braintree Alternative Center has reshingled the roof at the John Smith Pavilion in the harbor and helped at the Lightkeepers residence, among other projects.

It's a good deal for the town because the labor is free.

And it provides inmates at the Center with community service, explained project supervisor Bill Chaisson.

The Braintree Alternative Center is a minimum security correctional facility that houses non-violent, carefully selected offenders. Inmates are placed into community based work programs and are given the opportunity to participate in other programs such as alcohol counseling. Sixty percent of the inmates were convicted of operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol (OUI).

The 56-bed Center is part of the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office programs and services.

Inmates from the Braintree Alternative Center paint the selectmen's office.

HEALTH NOTES

October flu clinics slated

The Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health will sponsor Flu Clinics in October for Cohasset residents.

It's time to "winterize and immunize!" The best way to protect yourself from the flu is a yearly flu shot. Who should get a flu shot?

People who are 65 or older. Children or adults with lung disease (including asthma), heart disease or other chronic health problems. Children or teens who, for medical reasons, take an aspirin every day. People who live with or take care of someone who is at risk of getting the flu (health care worker, primary care givers, etc.). Anyone wanting extra protection during the winter months from the current flu strains.

There will be two flu clinics for seniors: Tuesday, Oct. 14, 10 a.m. to noon at Second Congregational Church and Friday, Oct. 17, 10 a.m. to noon at Harborview Senior Housing.

Community flu clinics for all Cohasset residents: Saturday, Oct. 18, 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset Town Hall; Saturday, Oct. 25, 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset Town Hall; Tuesday, Oct. 28, 7 to 9 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall.

Note: Please try to wear a short-sleeved shirt.

La Leche league to meet

The Tri-Town La Leche League will hold its monthly meeting Tuesday, Oct. 14, at 7:30 p.m. at 453 Tilden Road, Scituate. The topic will be "Birth and Breastfeeding." The league is a non-profit organization offering information and support about breastfeeding and parenting through informal meetings and phone help to all women. Free. For information, call 545-0815 or 545-5392.

Youths flee from beer party

Police described a 16-year-old Cohasset boy as being verbally abusive to the arresting officer Friday night following a beer party in Whitney Woods.

Officer Jeffrey Treanor responded to a complaint about noise and discovered a campfire with about 30-to-40 youths who dispersed when he approached.

The officer apprehended one of the youths who was charged with minor transport/carrying alcohol and resisting arrest. The youth tried to pull away and became verbally abusive. The teenager had a backpack with five 12-ounce cans of beer, police said.

Police would not release the perpetrator's name because he is a juvenile.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the incident is part of a disturbing trend of younger and younger kids with alcohol.

He said the next day a couple from Quincy were walking their dog in Whitney Woods and stopped to clean up the dozens of beer cans and other debris the youths left behind.

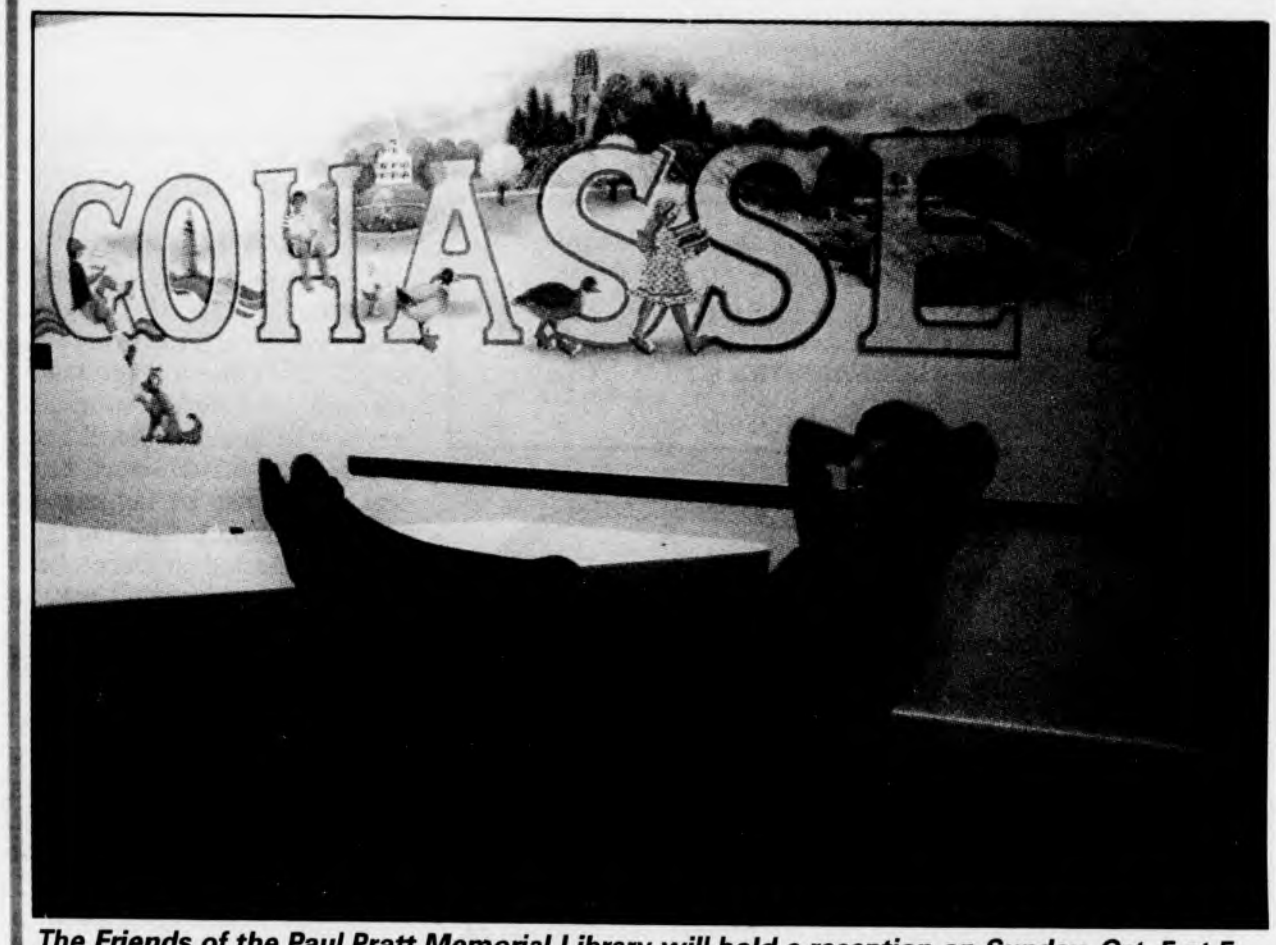
Residents can't wake up from septic nightmare

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER



There doesn't appear to be an easy answer for eight homeowners in the Newtonville neighborhood off Atlantic Avenue.

The residents are caught in the proverbial "Catch-22" situation — in which Title V acts like a cudgel over their heads.

And at this point, not even a board of health state-of-emergency declaration that their neighborhood with its oozing septic systems to be a public health hazard will guarantee them the sewer hook up they so desperately need.

The residents want a guarantee that if they allow Title V septic system inspections and subsequently fail, the sewer line will be extended to their homes. Otherwise, they are refusing to permit the inspections because a failure will start the legal clock ticking. Once a system fails under Title V, the homeowner has

New mural lights up library wall

By Margo Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

This is a story about a wall that used to be orange but isn't anymore..

Once upon a time, in 1975 to be exact, the wall in the Children's Room at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library looked sort of nice with a spanking new orange graphic.

But times, tastes and color schemes changed. Jammed inside a red and blue room, the old orange wall started to look plain.

In fact, the old wall made the whole scene look like a bit of an Ugly Duckling story.

It was time to act, according to Chief Librarian Richard Hayes.

"The library trustees, the staff and friends all thought it was time to do something with that wall," Hayes said. "We'd grown tired of it."

So the group got busy and came up with some ideas for a new wall, connecting pictures of favorite books, true friends and familiar Cohasset places in a mural.

The mural can be previewed now in the Children's Room, but an official reception is set for 5 p.m. Sunday afternoon at the library. An exhibit of watercolors is also featured.

"It's a very Cohasset and library-oriented design," Hayes said, as he described the 18-foot long panorama, a gift paid for by the Friends of the Cohasset Library. The town's name is spelled out in big building block style letters, and artist Becky Haletky of Rockland also used the serifs and edges of the letters as the scaffolding to mount scenes of children and grown-ups reading beside hometown landmarks, such as

Proponents float swim center plan

When Joseph McElroy speaks about a project — selectmen listen.

They know the man who founded the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, which refurbished the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island, is on a roll.

Not even a painful back could keep McElroy away Monday from presenting an update on the proposed $1.2 million swimming pool project.

McElroy formed the now 30-strong Friends of the Cohasset Swim Center whose mission is to make swimming and fitness programs available year round to area residents.

He explained that he's put out "feelers" in the past few months to gauge community interest.

"The response has been extremely encouraging," McElroy said.

McElroy said he became interested in the project about a year ago when he was concerned at the disrespect a huge gang of local youngsters showed police last Halloween. As many as 100

Family and friends pay tribute to Johanna Butler

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Family and friends gathered at St. Francis Cabrini Church Wednesday morning to remember and bid farewell to a dear friend.

Twenty-year-old Johanna Elizabeth Butler, a 1996 graduate of Scituate High School, died following an automobile accident at the intersection of Beechwood Street and Route 3A in Cohasset Saturday morning.

Family member Lynda Doody spoke fondly and tearfully of Johanna, whom she called "precious" and "an angel."

"In her short lifetime, she added a unique dimension to our family that most are not fortunate to have," she said. Doody remembered Johanna's love of life's simple pleasures — spending time with her three cats, eating ice cream sundaes with five toppings, taking walks, shopping and horse-back riding.

"She was a wonderful girl who touched a lot of lives."
—LINDA GAMBELL, TEACHER

Members of the community are also mourning the loss of Johanna, a sophomore at Massasoit Community College, who volunteered much of her time to the Scituate Animal Shelter and enjoyed theater and chorus.

A shy, gentle woman, Johanna was in her element caring for animals at the shelter, said director Joan McCafferty.

"The animals really got her out of her shell," she said. "She loved the animals."

Busy with many activities, including a job at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, Johanna dedicated three afternoons every week to the shelter. She often brought them treats and talked to them, McCafferty said.

"It's hard to find many kids like that who stick it out," she

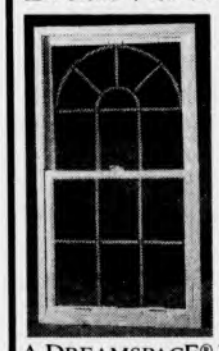
Interim valuation planned



Assessors told selectmen this week they plan to do an interim valuation of properties in town. They are asking town meeting for $2,000 to hire a consultant to perform the interim valuation. Assessor/Appraiser Cheryl Pooler explained that assessed property values may be lagging behind the market. The changes will be reflected in December's tax bills. Tax abatements may be filed between Dec. 31 and Feb. 1.

At a cost of $2,000, assessors also plan to conduct an assessment of all town buildings for insurance purposes. James Lagrotteria of the board of assessors said the office does not have the staff to evaluate tax-exempt properties.

Another $1,200 is needed to provide a tape transfer to send the new values to the treasurer collector's office. The two offices are on separate computer systems.

The $5,000 total will come from overlay surplus, which is money put away for abatements and exemptions but not used.

Town meeting will also be asked to consider spending about $70,000 for a new state-of-the-art computer system for the assessors' and treasurers' offices. The assessors' new system will have the capability of storing photographs, sketches and maps.

Junk license awarded

Selectmen agreed to grant Karin Gorman, owner of Reflections Antique and Craft Consignment at 808 Jerusalem Rd., a junk dealers' license.

The license was approved with the stipulation that Gorman's business meets all fire department regulations, that her outside display of merchandise meet the 15 feet setback and that she brings as much as possible in at night.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who lives in the neighborhood, voted against granting the license.

Sullivan objected to the goods being left out over night. She said the items which are left out "tear down the value and appearance of West Corner."

Selectmen objected to Gorman placing items on the sidewalk.

Gorman aid she was being singled out and that many businesses in the village use the sidewalk for display.

Selectman Merle Brown said the village is a separate case because those businesses don't have any grassy area to display merchandise.

"You have a display area," he said. "I'm asking you to be polite to the whole situation and put the items on the grass not on the sidewalk where someone might trip."

Gorman explained that displaying items outside attracts customers to her shop.

Village revitalization meeting

Dean Rizzo of the Chamber of Commerce said a public forum on plans to revitalize the village will get underway at 7:30 p.m., Oct. 23 at the Lightkeepers Residence.

OLD COLONY TRAINS ARE ROLLING AGAIN

By Alice C. Coyle
STAFF WRITER

Well before 8 a.m. Friday the new Old Colony Railroad's Kingston station was bustling with activity. Balloons waved in the breeze and the Silver Lake Regional High School Band played on as state Rep. Thomas O'Brien, D-Kingston, lauded the arrival of restored commuter rail service to the South Shore.

Just west of the Plymouth rail corridor a similar scene was going on along the Middleborough line which also made the historic trip into Boston.

Hundreds boarded the trains bound for Boston's South Station for the inaugural run of two rail lines that were more than a decade in the planning.

Festive fanfare met the trains at every station stop along the way. Inside the refurbished commuter coaches legislators, railroad buffs and regular residents enjoyed a smooth, scenic ride past Plymouth's Jones River through Kingston's cranberry bogs and rural farmland in Whitman.

"It's like dying and going to heaven for a commuter," said former Kingston selectman Ron Maribett. Maribett,who works for the state Department of Environmental Protection, is a daily commuter into Boston, and has been a long-time proponent of the rail restoration project.

"I was supporting the line in the early '90s when there was great opposition. It just goes to show, that if you participate good things happen," Maribett noted.

The trip was especially nostalgic for former Whitman Selectman Herbert Corliss, a self-proclaimed railroad buff also on board for the new Old Colony's maiden trip. Corliss' father was a baggage master on the old Old Colony Railroad and he remembers well riding his bike from Summer Street in Abington and meeting his father's train.

Dressed like a pint-sized engineer, Jimmy Hedson,of Rockland gazed excitedly out the window of the train during Friday's trip into Boston. "He wants to be an engineer," said Jimmy's mom, Nancy, who along with her husband Ken, is looking forward to taking the train into Boston for events.

Recently retired teacher Joseph Keating from Hingham's South School, said now that it's up and running he'll suggest that teachers plan on taking students by train into Boston for school field trips.

"I'll tell the teachers to drive over to South Weymouth and take the train into South Station for trips to Chinatown, the New England Aquarium, the Children's Museum, and the Boston Tea Party museum," he said.

Wearing an old railroad Brakeman's hat, "Back on Track" founder Bill Grimes was mistaken as an Old Colony conductor by many on board the train. Grimes was joined by fellow back on trackers Richard Prone of Duxbury, and Ross Hall from Hingham, who donned a skimmer with a small green bush stuck to the top to make his support for the Old Colony's third rail line loud and clear to acting Governor Cellucci.

> "We have to get through a court battle, but we're committed to building that Old Colony line. It's the best decision economically and environmentally for the region."
> – ACTING GOV. PAUL CELLUCCI .

But railroad buffs and train supporters weren't the only folks along for the ride Friday. Rail foes Richard Cook and Alexander Macmillan of Hingham and Debbie Cook of Cohasset—all three members of the state appointed Citizen's Advisory Committee reviewing the project—were aboard for Friday's historic ride.

"Air conditioned comfort!" exclaimed Macmillan, when asked what he thought of the new train. "It's an historic moment," said Macmillan, who has been instrumental in launching the lawsuit that could derail the Greenbush spur of the Old Colony railroad. Macmillan is still hoping the MBTA will be forced by federal transit officials to build a tunnel under historic Hingham square protecting the national register Lincoln Historic District.

Debbie Cook said she was glad to see these two lines running, but does not support reactivating the Greenbush spur. "The cost and the environmental impacts far outweigh the benefits," Cook said.

Like so many of his constituents, state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, is wondering when or if Greenbush corridor commuters will be riding the rails any time soon.

As a commuter, Hynes shares South Shore residents' rush-hour frustrations. "It's not just being in traffic. It's the lack of reliability. I can't make any appointments during rush hour because I don't know when I'm going to get there," he said.

At this point, Hynes said the project is out of the politicians hands.

"Whether it is built or not now will depend on environmental is-

Opponent calls press conference on the tracks

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Rail restoration proponents and train buffs enjoyed inaugural rides on the new Plymouth and Middleboro lines of the Old Colony Railroad last Friday.

But Nancy Buckley of Hingham was lamenting the return of commuter trains to the South Shore. She is co-founder of the Coastal Coalition, a grass-roots organization which is seeking alternatives to the restoration of the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad.

"The public is basically not aware of the negative side of rail restoration," Buckley said. "But this is a pivotal time for rail opponents to let (supporter) Acting Governor Paul Cellucci know how they feel and to voice their opposition."

While many were celebrating the return of rail service to the area, which was discontinued in the 1950s, Buckley, was being treated like a celebrity in her own right.

Surrounded by Channel 4, Channel 5 and Fox 25 television cameras and other members of the media in Hingham Square last Friday, Buckley spoke about Hingham as a thriving economic center.

> 'Some 1,100 people are employed in Hingham's business district, and the train would have a negative impact on it.'
> – NANCY BUCKLEY OF THE COASTAL COALITON.

"Some 1,100 people are employed in Hingham's business district, and the train would have a negative impact on it," she said.

Buckley, who invited a wide range of media representatives to a "press conference" that day at noon, said she did so because she had already been contacted by television stations and wanted to include other reporters as well.

"On the day the Cellucci administration was celebrating the opening of the Old Colony Railroad as a modern and progressive solution to the South Shore's transportation problems, I wanted the truth to be told that the state was opening new train lines in direct conflict with federal safety initiatives." Buckley stated.

The Federal Railroad Administration is strongly encouraging the closure of railroad crossings across the nation due to the high number of fatalities which occur at these grade crossings. (In these areas, trains cross the roadway without stopping.)

Channel 56 reporters met up with Buckley later in the day, and Channel 7 gave her an opportunity to share her concerns last Wednesday. On Sept. 29, New England Cable News aired a live segment of Buckley in Hingham Square, repeating it throughout the day.

As a small crowd gathered around Buckley on Friday, she told reporters:

"If any one of you were appointed secretary of transportation and assigned the task of designing a transit system to get people from the South Shore into Boston, never in a million years would you design a system that crosses 43 roads in 17 miles." There are seven grade crossings within nine-tenths of a mile in Hingham.

According to Buckley, the reporters were "astounded when they learned the facts."

"It was a great press conference," she told the Hingham Journal. "At first the reporters appeared to be skeptical that anyone would oppose a commuter rail line, but upon learning some of the basic facts, including safety issues, and seeing where the tracks are within eight feet of some homes, they clearly began to comprehend the reasoning behind the opposition."

sues. Greenbush will go forward or fall by the wayside depending on the environmental review. No more political pressure can be brought to bear on either side of the issue. The regulators have to do their job now," he said.

As the MBTA works to finish its final environmental impact report on the 17.7-mile Greenbush line, the project is currently in the hands of the Army Corps of Engineers—the lead federal agency reviewing the proposal and its environmental impacts.

Despite the controversy surrounding Greenbush, state transportation officials and Cellucci remain committed to building the Old Colony's coastal line.

"We have to get through a court battle, but we're committed to building that Old Colony line. It's the best decision economically and environmentally for the region," Cellucci said.

State Secretary of Transportation Patrick Moynihan echoed Cellucci's comments.

"It may take a while, but we'll get there," Moynihan said.

Christine Monahan, a conductor for the MBTA's commuter rail line in Franklin, worked the inaugural run of the Old Colony's Plymouth line and is hoping that Greenbursh spur is not far behind.

A Hingham resident, Monahan is well aware of the local opposition to the project, but said train foes are not unique to this area.

"Needham didn't want the train either. Now you can't get them off it," she said.

"The train is a nice way to travel and there is no better way to get 1,000 people into town all at once," she said. A commuter herself, Monahan must drive into town and said she has almost missed her own train due to Route 3 gridlock.

"Even if the train doesn't come to Greenbush, they have to do something. Buses don't cut it—you have to get people off Route 3."

During a half-hour opening ceremony at the end of the line—Boston's South Station, Cellucci called the rail project "good news for the economy and the environment and great news for South Shore commuters."

The acting Governor also thanked all those involved in building the restored rail lines including Federal Transit Administration which contributed 80 percent of the $537 million costs.

"It's been almost 40 years since the Old Colony brought people on the South Shore into the city," Cellucci commented. The trains stopped running in 1959 when the Southeast expressway opened and "the train took a back seat to cars," Cellucci said. "I think we see the results today of relying on that form of transportation," he noted. "South Shore commuters face long, hard, frustrating commutes," he said, but the new trains will put an end to endless trips into the city.

Towns join forces to study Greenbush issues

Towns along the Greenbush corridor are beginning to see where there could be strength in numbers.

Representatives from five towns — Hingham, Braintree, Weymouth, Cohasset and Scituate — have met to discuss issues of general concern about the proposed restoration of the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad.

"They're seeing the value of perhaps negotiating together with the MBTA from a position of strength on mutual issues," said Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan.

Those issues include air quality, noise and vibrations. The group has met informally to discuss what their strategy will be.

According to Macmillan, the Hingham, Scituate and Cohasset boards of selectmen have discussed funding to hire a consultant to "grapple with the issues and express our views to the MBTA." The general concept has been accepted by all five communities.

Last week, representatives from all the towns gathered in Scituate. At that time, the group tentatively decided to invite John Bewick, a former secretary of environmental affairs, to discuss environmental issues, including air quality, at their October meeting.

"He's someone the MBTA will have to take seriously," Macmillan said.

Bewick is an environmental consultant who works in locations around the country.

Also tentatively proposed for some time in October or November is a hearing hosted by the legislative committee on transportation. That committee is chaired by Joseph Sullivan of Braintree.

"Sheehy and Associates (lobbyists hired by Hingham), Sen. Robert Hedlund (R, Weymouth) and Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R, Cohasset) have worked with Sullivan, who has agreed in principal to hold the meeting," Macmillan said.

The hearing would provide an opportunity for towns along the Greenbush corridor to express their views to a different audience comprised of legislative representatives, Macmillan said.

Hingham Selectman Michael Holden pointed out that Sullivan is a strong proponent of train restoration.

"I'd expect he'd have an interest in extending the line further from Braintree instead of Braintree becoming a huge parking lot," he said.

Selectmen don't douse chief's bid for more radios

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln won't have to seek support for six new radios at town meeting without the backing of selectmen after all.

The chief needs $5,500 for the six radios which would bring the department's total to 21 — enough for each fire-fighter to have one of his own.

He's asking for the money through a special town meeting article which, in a complete turnaround, selectmen decided to support this week.

In a telephone interview, Lincoln explained the six radios were a compromise. Last year, he asked for 12 but accepted the compromise to ask for six then and six more this year. The town purchased 10 radios in fiscal year 1996. Lincoln explained one radio was lost this year in the harbor when firefighters responded to an incident.

To Lincoln, the radios are an essential part of each fire-fighter's equipment.

"Each fire-fighter should be protected to the max," he said in all situtations including fires, emergency medical service or hazardous materials incidents.

Lincoln explained that firefighters go out in such small groups, that it is easy to become separated.

"Each firefighter needs to be in communication with his colleagues and with the dispatch center," he said.

He said in a small department where a small number is on duty at any one time, the call-back system is relied on.

"Firefighters grab their radio out of the charger and take it with them," Lincoln said.

He also explained that more radios used less often increases the life of the radios and requires less maintenance because they are changing hands less often.

But a majority of selectmen think one radio per fire-fighter is a luxury. They decided to support the article this week because the amount of money involved is not that much.

> "Each fire-fighter should be protected to the max."
> — FIRE CHIEF ROGER LINCOLN.

Radio supporter Selectman Ronnie McMorris was unable to persuade her counterparts to support the chief's request last week.

"Roger (Lincoln) recommends this for safety reasons," she said.

But this week, Selectman Merle Brown said he'd had a change of heart. He explained that these radios are carried in the firefighters' upper pocket and are not hand held. The pockets are now covered with velcro so the radio won't fall out, he said.

Selectman Nan Roth said it was not enough money to argue about but would like to see the fire department reduce other expenditures. Both she and Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said they could not understand the safety issue.

Rec. commission concerned about skateboard park

By Margo Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

A teen campaign to get a skate park built in the gravel pits next to the Harold Barnes Little League field received a small setback, after the Recreation Commission voted unanimously to go on the record with questions about traffic safety and public safety in the vicinity of Red Gate and North Main Streets.

In explaining the reason for the board's early action, commission Chairman Richard Barrow acknowledged the teen's proposal has not yet officially come before the commission for a review. Nonetheless, he said, the commissioners were responding to input from area residents worried about a potentially negative impact on their neighborhood.

"I like to do things for kids," Barrow said. "But I don't want to create a problem for other people."

As an example of potential problems, Barrow cited recent difficulties nearby Rockland experienced when its skate park attracted youths from other communities. "Supervision's going to be needed, I think," he said, if the selectmen opt to go ahead with the skate park.

The push for a new park started this summer when several Cohasset teens and their parents undertook a search for a safe place for youths to skate. Their search quickly focused on the gravel pits, which comprise roughly nine acres of town-owned property, but are located in a residential zone.

Barrow also expressed some misgivings about exposing the taxpayers to liability, due to the possibility of lawsuits from injuries in a town-operated facility.

Nonetheless, the skate park proposal, which has sparked the imagination of numerous town officials, is by no means dead. The selectmen are expected to take up the discussion at an upcoming meeting. Meantime, on Monday, Recreation Commission Director John Worley indicated he is still eyeing the gravel pits, which are part of a nine-acre town-owned parcel, as the right place to build a new sports complex, with room for a second ball field as well as the potential for a winter ice-skating rink and horseback riding trails. If accomplished, the project would revive a long-standing hope to expand the town's recreational opportunities.

> "I like to do things for kids. But I don't want to create a problem for other people."
> — RICHARD BARROW, RECREATION COMMISSION CHAIRMAN.

"We have a land surveyor drawing up plans now"" at no charge to the town, Worley said. He also indicated a meeting has been set for Saturday with the youth baseball league. Earlier, the league expressed a desire to see a new ball field constructed for little league play.

"I think it's doable," Worley said, playing down the negatives. "There's enough room for both" the park and the field."

Nonetheless, in a Sept. 17 letter to selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, Worley reported the recreation board's comments about public safety as well as concerns from the neighbors and repeated his previous suggestion that an open meeting should be held to review any prospective site for a skate park.

and give the public a chance to comment.

Worley also noted the commission had suggested an alternative site for the skate park inside the swim center parking lot which is under-used, he wrote.

However, the swim center property is owned by a private trust, according to Joseph McElroy, of the Friends of the Cohasset Swim Center.

McElroy, though enthusiastic about opening up recreational opportunities for youth, said Tuesday he thought any plan to put the skate park in the parking lot should be presented to the Cohasset Swimming and Recreation Trust. Because the trustees are currently considering the option of keeping the swim center open year round, the parking lot might be impacted.

youngsters pelted local officers with eggs.

"I started digging in and found frustration among youngsters," he said.

McElroy, noting an indoor pool would be nice for his ailing back, said while the pool would also be available to all ages, it would provide a constructive outlet for young people's energy.

The Trustees of the Cohasset Swimming and Recreation Trust, a private group, which owns and operates the existing pool would remain in charge. At a recent meeting, the trustees gave the friends the go ahead to pursue preliminary plans for the enclosure, McElroy said. Plans also may include a fitness center in the basement of the pool house.

The pool area would be enclosed by a structure with a retractible roof. McElroy hopes to enlist the help of the local garden clubs to landscape the area so it looks like the German swim baths he enjoyed while he was in the Army.

McElroy pointed out the amount of money to be raised is a huge task.

"It's three times what we raised for the Lightkeepers," he said.

Selectmen were generally positive.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said he was concerned that covering the pool would make it loose "its summer feel" and wondered if a separate enclosed pool could be built.

That was ruled out as too expensive, but Sullivan was assured that the glass walls and retractible roof would be open on summer days.

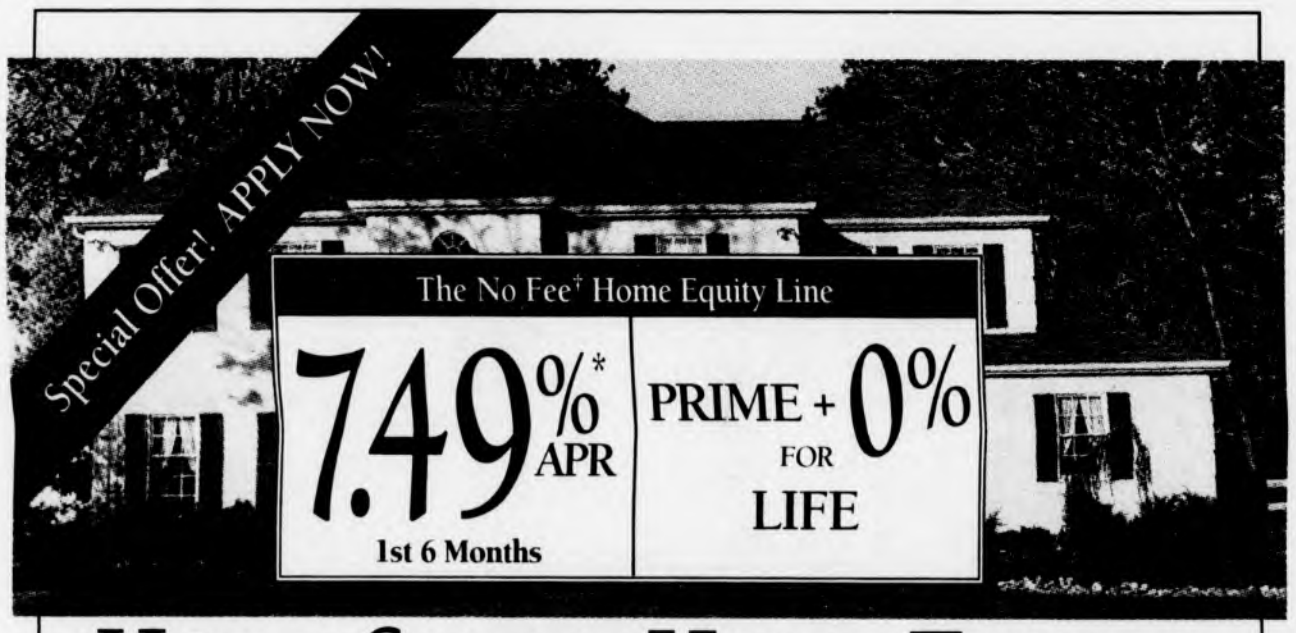
Selectman Nan Roth asked if the fees would increase. The annual fee for a family to join the pool for the summer if $185.

McElroy said a figure had not been arrived at but the trust charter allows for scholarships for those who cannot afford to pay.

Friends member Glenn Pratt said the fitness area would be more of a "work out" center and would not compete with the fitness center in the village.

The pool could also be used by the Cohasset High School swim team which now must go to other towns for practices and meets.

The friends plan a discussion at 7:30 p.m., Oct. 8 at the community center with abutters and neighbors to the site; at 7:30 p.m. Oct. 15 at the Lightkeepers' Residence, a presentation for all interested citizens is planned. And from 2 ot 5 p.m., Nov. 9 at the Lightkeepers, the first fund-raising event is slated.



The trustees investigated enclosing the pool, which was a gift from the Bancroft family, ten years ago but at that time the project didn't get off the ground.

Children's mural to be unveiled

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library will hold a reception on Sunday, Oct. 5 at 5 p.m. at the library, 106 South Main St., for Rockland artist, Becky Haletky, who painted the magnificent new mural in the Children's Room at the library. A framed, matted and signed prototype of the mural, done in watercolors will be raffled by the Friends of the Library, with tickets being sold at $5 each or three for $10. The winner will be drawn at the Village Fair in December. Tickets may be purchased at the library.

Also on exhibit are many other of Becky Haletky's watercolor paintings.

Her paintings at the library are for sale and will be on exhibit until Oct. 30.

Help with tax roll-back question sought

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Local concerned taxpayers heard the rallying call last week when Francis J. "Chip" Faulker asked for their help in getting enough signatures to get the tax roll-back question on the state election ballot.

The effort would roll back state income taxes from 5.95 percent to 5 percent over a three year period.

Faulker, who is associate director of Citizens for Limited Taxation (CLT) was the keynote speaker in a special concerned taxpayer meeting in Cohasset last week. Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers invited its counterparts in Hingham, Scituate, Marshfield and Weymouth to a joint meeting to hear Faulker and to air concerns about rising taxes in their towns.

CLT is the group that provided the impetus behind Prop. 2-1/2, the state law enacted by citizens petition in 1980, that caps the amount cities and towns can raise property taxes in any given year.

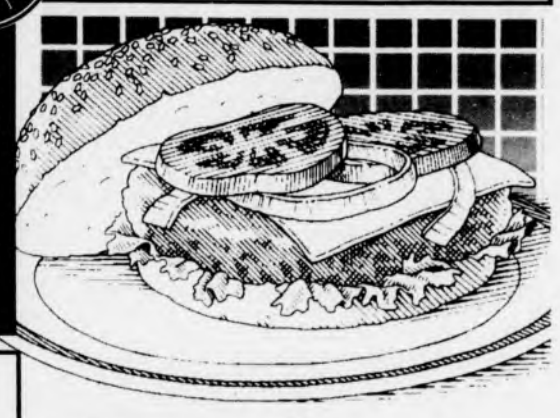
Faulkner explained that the increase in state taxes from 5 to 5.95 percent was billed as "temporary" when then Gov. Michael Dukakis raised taxes in 1989. He pointed out the Massachusetts has one of the highest state tax rates in the country because the state doesn't allow many deductions.

CLT has about nine weeks to collect 65,000 signatures to get the question on the 1998 ballot. He asked those in attendance to take the signature sheets to local recycling centers and supermarkets to help with the cause.

CLT tried to repeal the tax hike in 1990 and failed. (The group was out foxed by the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts which successfully launched a counter effort saying "Question 3 goes too far.")

Following Faulkner's talk, members of the various taxpayer groups vented about their disgust with local government (see editorial page 10). They asked for advice from one another on how best to proceed.

Cohasset Concerned Taxpayer president Roy Fitzsimmons complained bitterly about the "unbelievable arrogance of elected officials."



His remarks prompted another to say, "the obvious solution is get an election to boot 'em out."

BOY SCOUT CAMP

This past summer, three boys from Cohasset attended the Boy Scout National Jamboree in Virginia. Here they are, standing in front of the Capitol Building on their way to encampment. From left to right they are, Alec Schmidt, Will McArthur (both of Troop 28, Cohasset) and David Krueyer (Troop 78, Norwell).

While at camp, they really made use of and enjoyed the Action Centers. According to Will and David, repelling down a 40-foot tower was unforgettable! Alec thought the motor-crossing and bike-a-thon was exciting. Another highlight of their Jamboree excitement was hearing President Clinton speak at the opening ceremony—-they met Scouts from all around the world, and undoubtedly made lots of friends for the rest of their lives!

WELCOME TO ADAM GAME!

We ran into Ruth Sisson the other night, she was treating her Grandson, Sam Game, to an ice cream cone at Wilbur's. They were both excited beyond belief, because Sam had just become a Big Brother! He now has a little brother, Adam Burleigh Game, who was born on Sept. 22, and weighed 8 pounds 14 ounces. Mom and Dad, Sally and David, are thrilled of course—-they have had a busy time lately, they moved to Cohasset last summer, new baby, living near Grandmother Ruth (they bought her home in Cohasset on So. Main St., Ruth moved to North Scituate). Everything is just so exciting! Naturally Adam's paternal grandparents, Mr and Mrs. Roger Game are overjoyed at his birth, but they aren't as lucky as Ruth—-they live in Reading, England!! You can bet they'll be making a trip to our town as soon as they can! Congratulations to all of you!

FONE FAMILY NEWS

Ken and Sue Fone live in Maine now, but they left tons of friends behind them here, and they want to share all of their recent events with. all of you! Joanna got married last month (August 31st); she and her brand new husband Tommy are living in Florida after a wonderful honeymoon in Nantucket. Their son, ,Scott, received his M.B.A. from New Hampshire College on Sept. 14, which was a wonderful event for all of them. Ken, Sue, Scott, Nannette and their "little folks" (Delaney, who is 5 and Zacharey, who is 3) stayed overnight at the U.N.H. Campus on Saturday morning. Scott took night courses for four years to accomplish this program, and Ken and Sue are ever-so proud of him, and his family!

Pop Fone is "hanging in there"—-not as spry as he used to be, but he still remembers Cohasset fondly, and he and Ken talk a lot about our town and his discussions with Dr. Pompeo, whom he adores!

DR. POMPEO UP AND ABOUT

Speaking of Dr. Pompeo, isn't it great that he is feeling so well, is up and around, and back at work!! Just goes to show you that the old adage "you can't keep a good man down" is true, even after double hip replacement surgery!!

ATTENTION CAT LOVERS

Attention all of you cat lovers!! A beautiful cat came to our door last summer, gray and white. It has a wonderful personality and adores children—-we have fed it all summer but now it's time to panic—-we already have three cats inside, and introducing a fourth would really send "fur flying". We think that someone "dropped it off", as it is a people cat that has known lots of love. It you or anyone you know is looking for an awesome cat, please give me a call at 383-0560 (we think it is a she).

ARTIST RECEPTION IS SUNDAY

The friends of the Paul Pratt Library are hosting a reception fro Artist, Becky Haletky, who painted the beautiful new mural in the Children's room of the library, at 5 p.m. on Sunday, Oct. 5. They will also be selling raffle tickets for the original water color painting of the mural. Be sure you whole family sees this magnificent painting!

BECOMING RATTLED?

▶ One of the most common noises that drivers hear coming from their engines is a rattling sound that occurs upon acceleration. This noise, known as pinging, results when the mixture in the combustion chamber explodes before or after it should. If left unchecked, pinging (detonation) can lead to serious damage to the pistons. The first step to find a cure involves a check of the owner's manual to make sure that the car is using the correct octane gas. If pinging persists, the car should be checked for overheating. A faulty thermostat or loss of pressure in the cooling system can cause the engine to run so hot that it pings. Proper engine timing is also critical in preventing ping. Ping can also result from a hose or wire disconnected from an emission-control device.

▶ Pinging can be an easy noise to correct -- with the right gasoline. But sometimes, it takes more than gas to fix it. If your car makes persistent noises which worry you, whether from the engine or elsewhere, get the help you need. At SOUTH SHORE CHEVROLET-GEO, we are accurate in diagnosis, precise in repair, and easy to work with. We pay close attention to your requests because we want to see you here again. We earned our reputation for service excellence the hard way -- one customer at a time. We're at 828 C.J. Cushing Hwy., Rte. 3A (383-9090).

The switch to a higher octane fuel should only be made when no other cure provides a fix for ping.

Tax watchdogs

"Our new Constitution is now established, and has an appearance that promises permanency; but in this world nothing can be said to be certain, except death and taxes."

— Benjamin Franklin.

Mr. Franklin's words have as much meaning today as they did in 1789. Most of us greet taxes like death with a mix of fear, dread and acceptance of the inevitable.

But when taxes start to get out of whack — citizens in a democratic society have a right and a duty to rise up. That's what happened in 1980 when Prop. 2-1/2 put a legal cap on property taxes.

But the other day, an angry reader said to us:

"That's from those people who don't like to pay taxes!"

Those words gave us pause, because the proliferation of tax watchdog groups in our towns, which are facing huge public works projects, should be welcomed.

The statement is similar to others we're hearing and makes us think that these groups have a public relations problem.

With 1997 tax rates of $15.71 per $100,000 of assessed valuation in Hingham; $15.05 in Cohasset and $14.80 in Scituate, it's no wonder that taxpayer groups have either sprung up or sprung back into action in the three towns. (Those numbers translate into annual tax bills of $4713 in Hingham, $4514 in Cohasset and $4400 in Scituate for a house valued at $300,000).

Tragically, those being squeezed out by higher taxes may include families who have made our towns their home for generations.

In Hingham, there's the newly formed Friends of the Hingham Taxpayers; in Cohasset, it's the Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers and in Scituate, it is Scituate Citizens for Limited Taxation.

The groups are energized by recent (or proposed) school projects which involve hefty tax increases in their respective towns.

Last week, the leadership of those groups and some of the rank and file met in Cohasset to swap war stories. They were joined by a handful of concerned taxpayers from Weymouth and Marshfield.

What the groups have in common is a sincere concern about taxes, governmental waste and the perceived or real arrogance of local officials.

The meeting began with an interesting talk by Francis J. "Chip" Faulkner of Citizens for Limited Taxation, the state group that propelled Prop. 2-1/2 into law 17 years ago (see related story page 5).

But after that, the gathering became more of a venting session — with the press and government officials as the main targets.

Words and phrases such as deliberate, suspicious, voter anger, useless, mad, appalling, and so on were bandied about. Even the venerable old town meeting took a thrashing because it can be "stacked."

One man said, "we're around town now, and they're afraid to ask for a dollar!"

Getting all this off their collective chests surely made these taxpayer members feel better.

We'd like to make it clear, that we support the positive steps these groups have brought forth. Still in its infancy, the newly appointed Hingham Task Force on Affordability is looking at ways to help ease the burden on some of the town's most vulnerable citizens. In Cohasset, the switch to a town manager form of government will mean more efficiency in the future. Both these actions are a direct result of taxpayer groups educating the wider community about their concerns.

But as the groups move ahead, we caution them not to use such a broad brush stroke. Our system has always depended on a dedicated few to bring about positive change. We think that can be accomplished with less vitriol which can alienate those who might otherwise be converted.

As another member said, "we're getting the reputation of being against everything."

Let's hope these groups don't allow that perception to become reality.

Scituate's Norman Paley seems to have the right balance. He threw his hat into the ring last year for selectman and lost — but that hasn't turned him bitter, made him back off or point blame.

He understands that when concern is focused on the task at hand and doesn't get personal — the message can get through.

"I only argue issues. I get along with everyone," he said.

Greenbush cost soars

To the Editor:

Something remarkable happened this week. In a quiet way, the MBTA let us know that the new projected cost of the controversial Greenbush train approaches $300,000,000! Initially, the price was pegged at $140 million. Then it shot up to $215 million. Now it has climbed to $285 million. (Persons familiar with large projects like this are predicting a more realistic figure of $300,000,000, and that, without a Hingham tunnel.)

So what's going on here? How did this sad little train get so expensive without an hour of actual construction? What is the MBTA up to?

Proponents used to brag that this would be a "free" train, since the Feds were paying 80 percent. Now we know that was mirage and with 100 percent state funding, we must be more critical. Has Greenbush become another bottomless pit, like the Big Dig?

Firefighters are appreciated

Dear Chief Lincoln,

Please pass on my deepest appreciation to the members of your Department who rendered assistance in response to my telephone calls on Monday, Sept. 15.

At the risk of omitting someone, I was given expert and extremely courteous assistance by Tom Wigmore, Captains Trask and Rooney, as well as Jim Curley, Jay Fiori and Eric Winslow.

I was in extreme pain emanating from a herniated disc/pinched nerve and they were tremendously helpful. While hospitalized, I remarked to my wife, Mary, on both their professionalism and how nice it is to live in a small Town where it's possible to know many of the Town employees to include those responsible for public health and safety.

When you're in great pain, it makes a difference to be assisted by people you know and trust.

Grandparents' Day sponsors thanked

To the Editor:

On behalf of the South Shore Community Center, we would like to express our appreciation to the Massachusetts Cultural Council, Hingham Institution for Savings, and Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream of Hingham for sponsoring our Grandparents' Day on Sunday, Sept. 14.

We had a wonderful afternoon filled with Celtic music for both young and old and as a finishing touch to the day, we enjoyed an ice cream sundae party!

A special thanks to Kathy Bryanton and the Council on Elder Affairs who helped support this event.

Ask the School Committee

Important questions are answered

The School Committee is pleased to have received from a Cohasset resident a list of questions and concerns. Some of the questions are easily answered (e.g., do you plan to change the gym requirement for varsity athletes; not at this time). Some questions cannot be answered in this format (e.g., could you post the academic credentials of the administrative and teaching staffs). Here we will address five excellent and important questions raised by this resident, and encourage more of you to submit questions for our review.

Q: What is the timetable and estimated costs to bring the Deer Hill and middle-senior high schools into the 21st century?

A: One of the School Committee's 1997-98 goals is completion of a comprehensive facilities audit. This audit will provide cost estimates from which a timetable will be derived (in cooperation with the Capital Budget Committee and the Town Manager). A preliminary analysis of the Deer Hill School indicates that it will take about $1.2 million to put the mechanical, electrical and other systems into good shape for the next 25-30 years. The audit will help us determine if expansion of the library, gymnasium and cafeteria are necessary to accommodate the continuing increase in enrollments. While the School Committee will, of course, seek state funding for these renovation projects, our knowledge of the state's priority system leads us to believe that funding for such renovation/remodeling (called Category 3 projects) will not be forthcoming.

Q: What costs and benefits are associated with the most recent teachers contract?

A: The primary benefit for teachers is in their compensation package. Teaches will receive average pay increases of about 3 percent each year of the contract. Some teachers will receive additional increases because they have acquired a graduate degree. Finally, since Cohasset teachers have been paid much less than the average of their peers in surrounding communities, the new contract contains two-step pay increases for teachers with masters and doctoral degrees who have spent 13 and 14 years teaching in Cohasset. The total cost to the town over three years to provide these benefits to our teachers will be about $500,000.

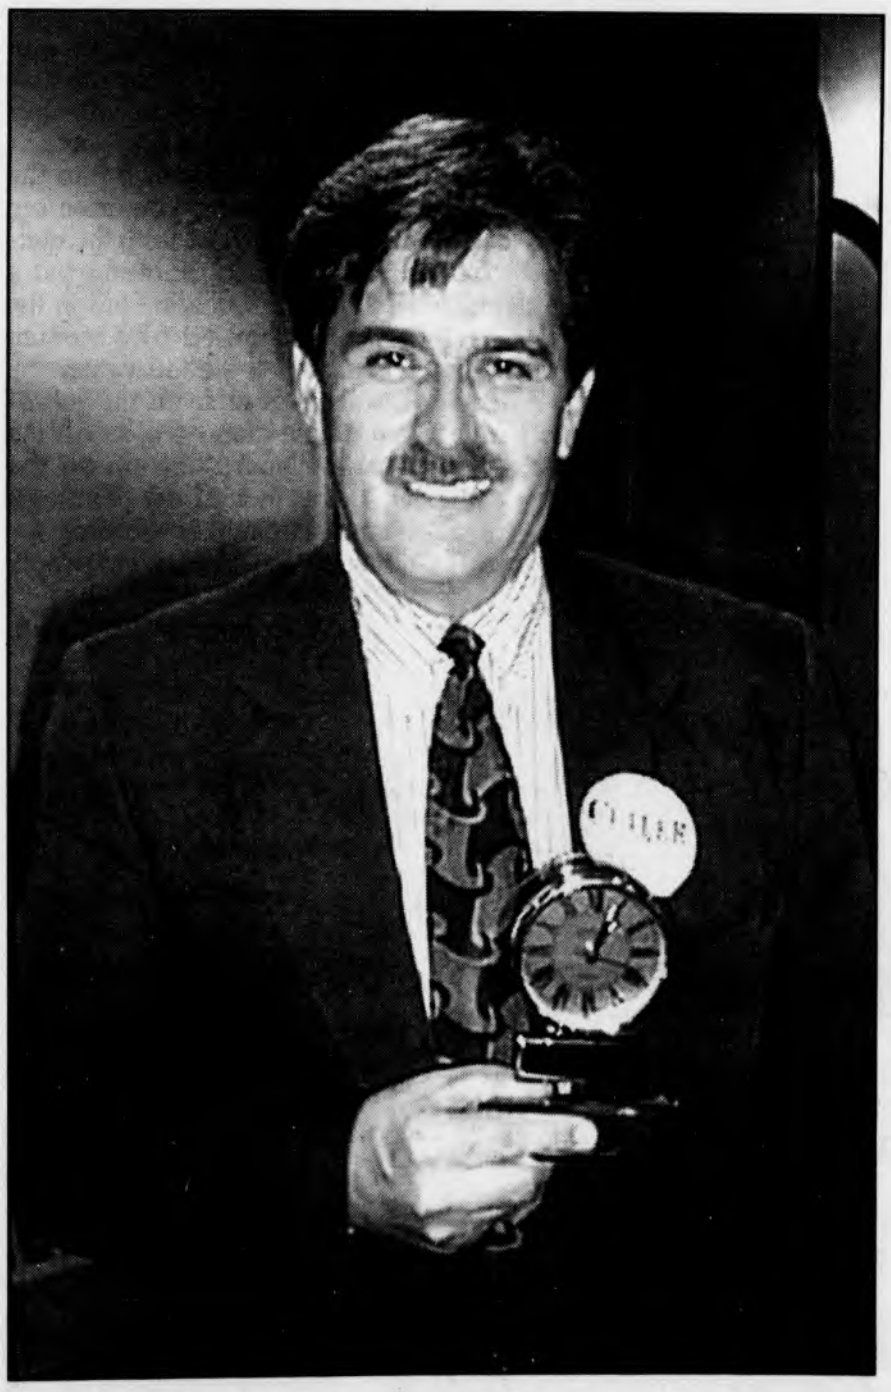
The primary benefit for the town is elimination from the contract of the 35-hour work week. Our teachers have always worked more than 35 hours in any case. But taking this formal provision out of the contract has enabled us to introduce block scheduling at the high school, to provide planning time for teachers at all of the schools and to provide some measure of time flexibility for the administration as well as the teachers as we attempt to meet the mandates of the 1993 Education Reform Act.

Q: Will you be taking a new role in setting policies and actively working with the police to help identify students using drugs and alcohol?

A: We take very seriously our obligation to educate children on all aspects of their health and healthy decision-making. We also work actively with other town groups, such as the Drug and Alcohol Committee, as they attempt to educate parents and residents regarding their obligations in these areas. Creating and delivering comprehensive, state-of-the-art courses of study on health issues including substance abuse; setting high expectations and standards of behavior; designing and implementing tough substance abuse policies; strictly enforcing these policies; and working actively with the Cohasset Police are not "new" roles for the Cohasset Public Schools.

Q: What becomes of capital items (e.g., typewriters, sewing machines, computers) when they are no longer used?

A: The town's inventory control system permits us to track such capital items as they are purchased and distributed to the schools. When such items reach the end of their useful life, they are recycled, stored for future use or declared surplus.



We hope this dialogue is useful in providing more information about the Cohasset Public Schools. We also hope to hear from more of you soon.

Q: What is the status of the computer systems in the three buildings?

A: The new elementary school will come on-line in September, 1998, as a state-of-the-art facility with respect to technology. The Deer Hill and middle-senior high schools are the subject of the Educational Technology Plan that will be presented at town meeting this October. Although all three schools currently have computer labs, and there are computer workstations in some classrooms, none of the buildings is as yet networked and the number of computers is inadequate. The School Committee also is committed to the notion that curriculum must drive the development and use of technology in the schools, so professional development must go hand-in-hand with the acquisition of hardware and software. The Technology Plan is designed to address both of these issues as it is phased in over the next four years.

School councils start new year

The Cohasset School Councils have begun meetings for the 97-98 school year. The Middle-High School Council met on Sept. 17.

The School Improvement Plan submitted to the School Committee was approved at the Aug. 28 meeting. The Council goals as stated in the plan are as follows: 1. continue to improve communications within the school system and town. 2. To evaluate the scheduling models of both the Middle School and the High School. 3 . To create a maintenance/renovation Plan for the Middle-High School.

The meeting of Sept. 17 focused on goal #3 as the members began a walk through and survey of the building.

A member of the council has joined the town drug and alcohol committee.

The Open House for the High School was held Oct. 1. The Middle School Open House will be held Oct. 23. The next Council Meeting will be held Oct. 6, at 7 p.m. in the Guidance Conference Room.

• The Deer Hill School Council is working towards strengthening community awareness, involvement and Support for both curriculum activities and building needs. A volunteer sign up sheet was sent home to parents to encourage involvement in several projects. The Council was made aware of Cohasset's web page. The goal is to provide on-line information to residents and to serve as another means of community communications. The web page can be accessed at www.cohassetma.com.

• The Osgood School Council met on Tue. Sept. 30, in the library.

All School Council Meetings are open to the public.

Hedlund has full-time district hours

Sen. Robert Hedlund's district office, located at 66 Sea St. in Weymouth, will now be open Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

"The whole purpose of my district office is to meet with and serve my constituents in a more accessible and convenient setting," Hedlund said.

Appointments are not necessary for anyone who wishes to visit. The doors are open to any problem, large or small, or for residents to register their opinion on any legislative issue.

Hedlund's district office is funded privately, at no cost to taxpayers, through the senator's campaign committee.

Hedlund and or staff will also maintain regular town hall office hours in Cohasset on the third Thursday of every month, beginning Sept. 18, from 2 to 3 p.m.

Residents can't wake up from septic nightmare

two years to make the repairs which can be prohibitively expensive. In the Newtonville case, one homeowner said an estimate to upgrade her system was $50,000.

But the sewer commission won't consider extending the sewer service to Newtonville unless there is scientific documentation on the problem. The commission says Title V inspections could indicate that a $500 fix of a broken pipe may be the answer. Unless the test is done, it is impossible to say.

Commissioners are also adamant that they won't repeat the past. The town has been granted some "excess capacity" under its current system — and sewer commissioners are meting that out sparingly. In 1975, the town overextended its sewer capacity and has been in litigation with the state ever since costing the town hundreds of thousands of dollars, Sewer Commission Chairman Edward "Ted" Guild said.

Health board member Kevin Ulmer said the sewer commission was being unreasonable.

"If all show failure, why will you not agree to hook up these homes? There is no quid pro quo here, no indication of intent. In that vacuum, these homeowners are being hung out on a limb," he said.

The commission asked the residents to be patient and wait until mid-February when the town plant design will be refined. The state may allow the town more capacity at that time. With the existing plant, the town has 2,000 gallons remaining in a sewer pool granted by the state in an agreement with the town to solve its wastewater problems. The town is under a court order to fix its sewage woes.

"There's only a certain amount of cake with a certain amount of slices," said commissioner Gary Vanderweil. "If we give it out to the first squeaky wheel, we're not doing our fiduciary duty."

John Hoholik, 26 Atlantic Ave., could not stomach the reasoning.

"We're not a piece of cake, but eight house with people," he said.

The meeting, which attracted about 30 residents and town officials, reached an impasse.

A frustrated Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan said he would call a special meeting of selectmen, the health board, sewer commission, and possibly conservation commission to try and resolve the issue.

"This is an emergency, we have the capacity. Why aren't these people at the top of the list?" Sullivan demanded.

Vanderweil said he was concerned about establishing a precedent for the next group.

"We can't give it (excess capacity) to people who shout the earliest and loudest," he said.

"How about those with fe[illegible] matter in their yards?" Fran Burnham, 26 Atlantic Ave., responded.

The sewer commission tabled a suggestion from member Henry Rattenbury that the sewer be extended to the two homes in the area which have already had Title V inspections and failed.

Town engineer Daniel Coughlin of Tutela Engineering, which is designing the town's sewer system upgrade and expansion, agreed to take a look at the neighborhood.

Family and friends pay tribute to Johanna Butler

said. "It's a special few that stick around."

By all accounts, Johanna was always willing to lend a hand, no matter how undesirable the task — from walking and cleaning animals at the shelter to drawing and closing the curtain on a Scituate theatrical performance.

"Anything that was asked of her, she was willing to do," said Susan Phippen from the Scituate Animal Shelter.

"She was always willing to help. She just wanted to participate," said Doug Trudeau, former Scituate High School Drama Coach. Trudeau directed Johanna in the Showstoppers' production of "Joseph's Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat." Johanna was an ensemble member performing in singing and dancing musical numbers.

"She absolutely loved the theater and participating and being with the kids," he said. "She was a wonderful individual, a true spirit full of life. She was very caring and thoughtful and she will be sadly missed."

Former Scituate High School Principal Prudence Goodale described Johanna as a very active student involved in many school organizations, including SADD, the environmental club, the drama club and chorus. Despite a physical disability and a learning disability, Johanna blossomed more every year, she said.

"What a tragedy," Goodale said. "Her life was not always easy and she was just coming into her own."

Special education teacher Linda Gambell worked closely with Johanna during high school.

"She was a wonderful girl who touched a lot of lives," she said. "Everything Johanna did, she put everything into."

Johanna's mother, Helen, said her daughter was working toward a career caring for animals. The previous weekend, Johanna took part in the Walk for Animals, sponsored by the Standish Humane Society, she said.

Helen Butler hopes people will pay tribute to Johanna by making a donation to the Scituate Animal Shelter or by giving blood at South Shore Hospital.

"They were very good to her," Helen said.

On the morning of the accident, Scituate and Cohasset ambulances as well as paramedics from South Shore Hospital responded to the scene.

Cohasset Officer Richard Yocum, who was on routine patrol at the time of the accident, observed a 1988 Dodge Shadow operated by Clarissa Mead, 79, of First Parish Road in Scituate, run a red light at the intersection just after 11 a.m Saturday.

Mead's car, traveling at about five to 10 miles over the 30 mph posted speed limit, struck the 1997 Saab driven by Helen Butler, 54, he said. Yocum said Mead never applied the brakes.

The impact of the crash forced the Butlers' car into a third vehicle driven by Peter Kovach of Ripley Road in Cohasset, who escaped serious injury.

Scituate and Cohasset ambulances as well as paramedics from South Shore Hospital responded to the scene. All passengers involved in the accident were wearing seatbelts and the airbags in the Butlers' car were deployed, Cohasset Police Sgt. Robert Jackson said. A fatal accident has not occurred in Cohasset since 1994, he said.

The passenger side of the Saab, where Johanna was seated, took the impact of the crash. The Jaws of Life had to be used to remove Johanna from the car and transport her to South Shore Hospital, where she died just before 9 p.m.

Police are seeking to charge Mead with motor vehicle homicide, driving to endanger, failure to stop for a red light and speeding. Mead was listed in fair condition Wednesday afternoon, before the Mariner went to press.

New mural lights up library wall

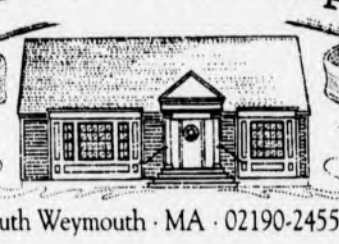
the duck pond, the Mill Bridge and Minot's Light.

Besides the miniature landscapes, the mural, which was done in acrylic, also features three favorite books (Charlotte's Web, Matilda and Make Way for Ducklings) which the children voted to include, and their participation was important, Hayes said. "Everything you do that helps stimulate children's curiosity and interest in the library and books helps," the librarian added.

Not surprisingly, the youngsters kept their creative juices flowing over the three weeks Haletky needed to dab all the ideas together and get the big wall painted this August.

The final version didn't come out exactly as she planned, the artist acknowledged. For starters, the youngsters convinced her to add a golden brown dog to the mural, and one change led to another.

"The children feel they helped with this mural, and it reflects real life," according to Linda Wakeman, a past president of the Friends of Cohasset Library.



Nonetheless, the mural is for grown-ups, too. Somewhat like the looking glass from Alice in Wonderland., the colorful new mural reveals a world both children and adults can appreciate.

"When you go down into the Children's Room, you often see grandparents there with the children," she said, pointing out a similarity to Cohasset life in the mural's depiction of a woman reading to her granddaughter.

Wakeman took on the job of getting the mural project off the drawing board and up on the wall, and though the painting's theme officially is "reading for all ages," she said a lot of people contributed ideas and funding.

"It's a people's mural,' she said.

Adding Hepatitis B to the school curriculum

By David Tibbetts
CORESPONDENT

The curriculum at Cohasset's elementary schools includes the usual courses in reading, writing, arithmetic, as well as an unusual addition: hepatitis B.

Since 1995, the elementary schools have participated in a state-funded program to educate students about the dangers of hepatitis B and provide all sixth-graders with free vaccinations against the disease.

Elementary school nurse Karen Murphy vaccinated 66 sixth-grade students Wednesday with the first of three shots required for full immunization.

"We've been in the program since it began, and we my have been one of the first schools to participate," Murphy said.

The program is voluntary, and parents must sign a permission slip for their children to receive t he vaccine.

The vaccine is paid for with state and federal money as part of a government effort to slow the spread of the hepatitis B virus (HBV) among teenagers. More than 300,000 people a year are infected with HBV.

Seventy-five percent of all HBV infections occur in people between the ages of 15 and 39. Of people who currently fall in that age group, only one percent have been vaccinated.

The average sixth-grader is 12.

More than half of the cases of HBV infection are spread through heterosexual sex.

"Promiscuity can place people at risk, and kids are involved in sex at an early age, unfortunately," Murphy said. "As a parent you can deny that your child is involved in sex, but it is a reality."

Intravenous drug users are also at high risk of contracting HBV. More than a third of HBV infections are from unknown sources.

"There isn't a lot of IV drug use in Cohasset, but it's different in other parts of the state," Murphy said. "In 1995, Boston was 11th in the country for cases of HIV and AIDS."

While sex and drugs are the most notorious methods for transmitting HBV, they are not the only ways to contract the virus. Some of the seemingly harmless ways of catching the virus include sharing razor blades, piercing body parts with needles, and touching HBV-contaminated surfaces.

It may not seem likely that the average teenager would be sharing razor blades with friends, but girls sometimes borrow razors from classmates to shave their legs following gym or team sports.

The popularity of amateur body piercing among teenagers increases the chances of infection. Young girls sometimes pierce their ears with a common pin.

These activities by themselves do not increase the chances of infection. The problem comes when teens treat ear and body piercing as a group activity, sharing needles that have not been properly sterilized.

Another reason HBV spreads so easily is that it is a highly contagious virus. It can survive on a dry surface for seven or more days.

Gail Chaffee is the Adolescent Hepatitis B Coordinator for the Massachusetts Dept. of Public Health. She said it is possible, although highly unlikely, to catch the virus by touching a sink in a public toilet.

Seventy-five percent of all HBV infections occur in people between the ages of 15 and 39. Of people who currently fall in that age group, only one percent have been vaccinated.

"We're not trying to spread fear or give people the impression that there is an epidemic," Chaffee said "Yet, even though infant immunization is now mandatory, the rates of infection are not going down."

Chaffee said most people don't realize that hepatitis B is an extremely virulent organism.

"The HIV virus is fragile compared to hepatitis," Chaffee said. "This virus can live for up to 30 days on a dry, exposed surface. In some ways it is a silent epidemic because half of the people who get the virus experience no symptoms.

HBV is 100 times more contagious than HIV.

Of the more than 300,000 Americans who catch the virus each year, 5,000 of them die from liver ailments.

The tragedy of these statistics is that HBV is almost completely preventable through immunization. The vaccine has a 13 year efficacy rate, and a 98 percent adolescent success rate.

"Once you've damaged your liver, you can never go back; there's no way to take back liver damage without transplant," Murphy said. "HBV shots are a lot cheaper and a lot more sensible than a transplant."

The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) says that even with mandatory immunization of all infants becoming more common, it will be about 20 years before the results of these efforts will affect the infection rate among young people.

According to the CDC, the best way to lower the infection rate is to combine mandatory infant immunization with school vaccination programs like the one at the middle school.

The reason the CDC recommended that sixth-graders get the free vaccination is that the students have most likely not yet begun to engage in high-risk behavior. The CDC also said that it is difficult to get a twelve-year old to go to a doctor's office for one shot; getting them to visit a doctor for the entire three-shot series is nearly impossible.

By giving the vaccination in school, nearly all of the children can be expected to be immunized.

Murphy said she loves the sixth-grade program for another reason: the state pays for the whole program.

"My oldest son is 23 and in college," Murphy said. "We're paying for his shots ourselves because insurance won't cover the vaccinations. I encourage parents to participate in the program because the state is paying for the entire program and that's so useful."

The average cost of one shot is $55, and the HBV vaccine is delivered in a three-shot series.

Murphy said she would like to see insurance companies agree to pay for HBV shots in the future.

"They pay for most other shots, so its a little odd," Murphy said.

State and local officials are also exploring ways to offer the vaccine to students in grades 9-12 who attended the sixth-grade before the immunization program began in 1995.

State law requires that all children born on or after January 1, 1992 receive hepatitis B vaccinations. Vaccination against hepatitis B is also required for entry into day care programs and kindergarten.

Murphy said she has received a lot of support from school principals and teachers.

Chaffee gave the credit to school nurses for making the program a great success.

A state survey showed that as of the 1996-1997 school year, more than 30 percent of the state's seventh-graders had received the vaccine in the sixth grade.

"I'm glad to see the nurses are taking the initiative and doing this program," Chaffee said. "It takes a lot of hard work on the part of the nurses and volunteers who make this program successful."

Replacing moldy school windows can wait, selectmen say

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Many of the windows at Deer Hill School leak and have mold and mildew making it an "unhealthy condition," Selectman Ronnie McMorris said last week.

But selectmen still voted 4-1 not to support a $100,000 request by the school committee through a special town meeting article to replace a substantial number of the 40-year-old windows.

Instead, they hope the town will wait until the results of a proposed $25,000 town-wide building facilities study are known.

School Committee Chairman Maureen Jerz said moisture is seeping into the windows causing them to rust and corrode.

And Supt. Stephen Hart said waiting for the facilities audit would delay the project for at least a year. He said the windows have been on the school committee's capital plan for six years.

Selectman Merle Brown said the windows have waited this long, that another year wouldn't hurt.

"We've held off this long," he said. "I'd like to see the audit of all the buildings in town (done first)."

But McMorris described the windows as in an "abominable condition" and said they should be replaced as soon as possible.

Voters at the Oct. 27 special town meeting will have the final say on whether or not the windows should be replaced this year.

COHASSET MARINER

Time is running short for CHS field hockey

Team needs five wins for playoffs

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

CHS field hockey coach Debby Bostwick says the math is simple. Her team has seven games to get ten points to equal a trip to the state tournament.

Hopes are high for tournament play this year for the 3-5-1 team. The Lady Skippers last made it to "The Dance" three years ago, but have fallen just short of post-season play in each of the last two seasons.

"We've been right there at the end each of the past two years but just missed it," said Bostwick, now in her ninth year of coaching at the school. "The team has played pretty well this year and I think we are starting to come together at the right time.

"We've held our own against some pretty strong teams."

Things look bright for the future as well, said Bostwick, as field hockey squads at the junior varsity and junior high level are well stocked.

"Even though we are a little short-handed on the varsity level, we've got a good deal of kids playing in the system," said Bostwick. "The future looks good."

The future is now for the seven seniors on their squad who are faced with their final opportunity to return to tournament play.

"We've got some strong leaders on this team," said Bostwick. "They want to win."

One of those leaders has been co-captain Alia Afshar, a defensive specialist who Bostwick has paired with fellow captain Katie Buckley, who has chipped in offensively with three assists.

"Alia and K.B. make a great team," said Bostwick. "They are the nucleus of the squad."

Handling much of the offensive load so far has been returning South Shore League all-star Lauren Dooley with three goals and three assists.

"She has the speed of a gazelle. It's just incredible," said Bostwick. "Wherever the ball is, she is never far behind. Lauren gets the team into motion.

Also stepping up this year offensively has been Kristen Reynolds, a former gymnast who has only played field hockey for the last two seasons.

Reynolds has three goals and an assist.

On defense, Sue Gill and Lindy Holway have been holding down the fort in front of sophomore goaltender Mellisa Rosano.

"I've been blessed this year with a team that has a super heart and great determination who also happen to be a very nice and classy group of young ladies," said an enthusiastic Bostwick.

Lauren Dooley goes on the attack.

FISHING STORY

BY MARK TRASK

Fall season still a fine time for fishing

The long hot days of summer are now a pleasant memory, in a summer of many really fine weather days. The sun doesn't quite clear the trees anymore when the alarm clock or the radio starts its nasty work. The big yellow buses once again slow the morning commute with their precious cargo. The stirring fall winds whip the oily placid summer swells into frothy chop.

Beneath the froth, huge schools of fatted stripers have reversed their direction and now migrate to the south, seeking to stay in a temperate band of water. Occasional hurricanes, far over the horizon send their steady drumbeat of heavy rollers to smash into green and white foam on the unyielding ledges. The flow of striped bass to the scale and into freezers of persistent anglers continues unabated.

Tony Finegan tossed bait over the outer ledges and came up with another nice keeper, one of five fish caught that day. Don Schneider keeps casting bait from shore, alternating between pogies, mackerel and squid, with more successful days than not. After a short slump, Paul Hansell is back in the thick of the bass with two keepers Sunday night. "New location" Paul says cryptically.

Back at Government Island pier, Harry and son Andrew and grandson Justin tested the waters for the first time as a team. Small pogie chunks worked well for a half-dozen 14-22-inch fish. Andy managed to get a 32-incher into the cooler. After a while, he decided to change the water in the cooler to keep the fish fresh. With the sudden inflow of cool

Skippers look to turn things around against Norton

Jim O'Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Skippers varsity football team carries an 0-2 record into this Saturday's game against the Norton Lancers. Plagued by injuries and a peculiar inability to show up for the first half, the boys in blue desperately need a win to turn their season around.

Cohasset's first game was away against the East Bridgewater Vikings. With last year's 52-0 whipping at the hands of the Vikings in mind, the Skippers made a valiant second-half effort.

Senior captain Andy "Hammer" Hamilton put forth a stellar effort, making eleven first half tackles and eighteen overall, all from the cornerback position. Junior Adam "Sasquatch" Sasso ratcheted up his play a notch in the second half and filled the linebacker position nicely. Alex "Big Daddy" Russell, arriving late from treatment for his broken hand, and John "Crunch" Considine solidified the defensive line. East Bridgewater did not score the second half.

However, Cohasset would need more than defense to come back. A lethargic offensive line allowed the Viking defense to swarm ballcarriers and Fessure signal caller Pat "Hollywood" Hurley.

In the second half, the "Hogs" began opening up holes for runners and holding off pass rushers. Halfback Justin "Juggernaut" Golden took advantage of one of these holes and bounced to the outside, then turned on the afterburners and smoked for thirty-seven yards, down to the Viking one yard line. Hollywood then rolled out of the pocket and scampered in himself for the six.

The pointafter failed, but the Skippers were on the board.

Sophomore Craig "Bacon" Parker kicked off, and hooked it left. Classmate Joe Pergola dove on the pigskin and Cohasset had the ball back, with time winding down.

Unfortunately, despite their momentum and their supreme conditioning (owed to the diabolical exercises conducted by Coach Mark Hall), the visitors could not beat the clock and came up short, falling 14-6.

Cohasset hoped that they had learned a lesson from the EB game, but repeated their error last Friday night, coming out flat for the first half against the Abington Green Waves.

In front of their home crowd, under the lights, the boys in blue played a miserable first quarter and an only slightly better second quarter, then finally got their act together in the third.

Despite the loss of Hammer to a sprained ankle ligament and Sasso to an injured knee , the Skipper defense once again rose to the occasion in the second half.

Linebacker Luke "Cobra" Caldwell and defensive end Jamie "Snake" Buick, also playing with a broken hand, played like men possessed. And, once again, the opposition did not reach the end zone the second half.

A productive drive highlighted by a 25 yard hook-up from Hollywood to Snake was capped with a 4 yard scoring rush by Raheem "The Dream" Shepard. The kick failed though, and Cohasset trailed 21-6. However, the Skippers weren't done. Hollywood reared back on the next drive and fired a pass to Snake, who took this one in for the TD.

It was deja vu all over again, as the Skippers, sparked by their defense, made a last ditch effort for victory. This point after attempt failed as well, and Cohasset was down 21-12.

fresher water, the bass made its move. I'm outta here! and flipped the cooler lid with its tail and boogied. Over the past week, Harry has bagged a half-dozen bass at the same spot.

From the-fishing-isn't-supposed-to-hurt department: Dave and Kathy Marks of Cohasset were out for some fishing and were doing quite well along their favorite spots. Kathy hooked up with a drag burner and hung on for dear life. Bit by bit she gained line in the fight, and after awhile they could see the big silver side of the fish as it strained to break the monofilament. With Dave "coaching," Kathy got the fish to within 10 feet when it suddenly found a burst of strength and sounded, peeling yards of hard-gained line. With the rod bent nearly double, all Kathy could do was hang on, forearms burning from the effort. In the blink of an eye, the line parted and the rod snapped up, clobbering Kathy square between the eyes, the Ray-Bans clattering to the deck, destroyed.

"You OK?" asked the worried Dave, as he could see the fast rising egg on her forehead.

"I'm fine!" spit Kathy, "Damn that fish got away!" Seconds later, Dave had his bait in the water, in vain hope of enticing the big one to another battle. It was not to be. They settled for a pair of 20-pound keepers and a pounding headache that day.

Max MacCleave was biking in Harwichport and stopped to try his luck at Wychmere Harbor. Before he got back on his way, he caught more than 40 small stripers and snapper blues from the pier. One happy angler reports setting up a slick of pogie chum by George's Island and catching fish steadily. Every two to five minutes, we had one on he reports, with frequent doubles.

Some of the local surfcasters have been seeing real big ones below their perch. A couple stopped in for directions reported they saw an angler catch a nice striper at the lighthouse jetty. Two keepers from under Mill Bridge was another report. The harbors are choked with juvenile herring. The cormorants are having a field day. A pair of these fishing birds trapped a school of herring against the sailing club wall. Each time the birds dove, a shower of sparkling herring would clear the water in an effort to avoid being an appetizer. Overheard on the VHF Sunday: "Yeah, we got a dozen big blues so far, 16-17-pound range..." Looks like the season is far from over.

Saturday wraps up the Second Annual Beachcomber Tournament. If no one tops Jerry Stevens' 32-pound striper, he will claim the cup at the Cohasset Harbormaster's office Sunday at 5 p.m.

Catch one that's hard to carry!

Curley's on the rebound

South Shore's favorite Timberwolf hopes injury woes are now behind him

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Bounding around the Duxbury High School gymnasium with a spring in his step and that old competitive glint in his eyes, Minnesota Timberwolf forward Billy Curley looks like a man who feels as good as he says he does.

"My legs haven't felt this good since college," said Curley, taking a break from the forty or so youngsters that took part in his first annual basketball camp recently. "The light is there at the end of the tunnel. I can't wait for camp to start."

The knee and ankle woes that have limited him to almost no basketball action in more than two and a half years seem to be a thing of the past for Curley, who gives all the credit to hard work and Boston University strength and conditioning coach Mike Boyle.

Since the surgery on his right knee on Super Bowl Sunday to work on some torn cartilage, Curley has been working out feverishly with Boyle and other therapists each day to get ready for the upcoming basketball season. Their hard work seems ready to pay big dividends.

"There were times where I didn't think it was going to happen, but now I'm convinced that I'm going to make it back," said the 25-year-old former McDonald's high school All-American. "The basketball skills are a little rusty, but as long as the leg stays strong and the conditioning is there I think we're going to be fine. I might be horrible for a little while, but the game will come back to me.

"It's been a great summer for me and I couldn't be happier with the way that things are going. I wish camp started tomorrow."

Immediately after the surgery, Curley says things didn't look so rosy.

"I was miserable," he admitted with a sheepish grin. "I couldn't get up and down a flight of stairs without pain. Now I feel like an everyday person again and I am working hard to get myself back into playing shape.

"Basketball is fun again for me."

When the Timberwolves camp does start in October, Curley will find himself in a dogfight for a spot on the Minnesota roster.

With front court spots already reserved for Tom Gugliotta and superstar-in-training Kevin Garnett, Curley finds himself fighting with both old guys (Sam Mitchell and Stanley Roberts) and young horses (rookie Paul Grant and Dean Garrett) for the attention of Timberwolf coach and general manager Flip Saunders.

After making the playoffs last year for the first time in their history and building on the nucleus of Garnett, Gugliotta and guard Stephon Marbury, Curley sees a young team on the upswing.

"We've got some great talent already in place and now we need to build around them with players who have the skills to compliment their game. That's where I'd like to think that I can fit in and help bring the team to the next level," said Curley.

The latest news from Minnesota has Garnett wanting to take the next train out of town over his unhappiness with the team's latest contract offer, a paltry $103 million multi-year extension. Curley hopes his teammate reconsiders his stance.

"I think it is all going to work out for the best," said Curley. "I really think that Kevin wants to stay with Minnesota, but this is also a business and you have to be a little selfish when it comes to your contract. You've got to take care of yourself sometimes. It's the nature of the business world."

As a member of the Timberwolf organization, Curley gets to be around a Minnesota native who is still a legend around these parts and who perfected the same low-post scoring game that Billy now uses: future Celtic hall-of-famer and team vice president Kevin McHale.

"Just being around Kevin for any length of time is an amazing experience," said Curley. "I learn more in five minutes of listening to him talk than with anyone else. He has an amazing head for the game of basketball. He was one of the best ever to play this game and he's got the rings to prove it."

While sitting on the sidelines for the past two years, Curley said he couldn't help but turn his thoughts to life after basketball and what it may hold for him.

After last week's work at the basketball camp, Curley predicts that coaching at some level may very well be a part of the picture.

"An injury like this forces you to think about your future," said Curley. "You need to prepare for that day when your not going to be able to play basketball anymore."

Although a quiet and reserved man by nature, Curley exudes a different persona on the court, showing charisma and enthusiasm while teaching youngsters the basics of conditioning and basketball skills.

In addition, Curley said he wants to pass on something else outside of the game that his parents as well as former coaches have taught his through the years: the importance of being a good person both on and off of the court.

"You can play as hard as you can but everything has to stop before you get dirty on the court or in anything else you do," said Curley. "You've got to have respect for yourself as well as your opposition. Once the game is over, you are all friends.

"I was very lucky growing up to have my parents and some great coaches show me the right way that things are to be done and I want to pass that on to these kids and give back a little bit of what has been given to me."

While standing in the DHS gym, Curley said he couldn't help but think back to the old days when janitors used to throw him and his friends out of the school late at night after practice.

"This was a second home to me," said Curley, breaking into a wide smile. "There's a lot of great memories in this gym."

Cohasset High students take aim at coastal pollution

By Kerry Herlihy
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

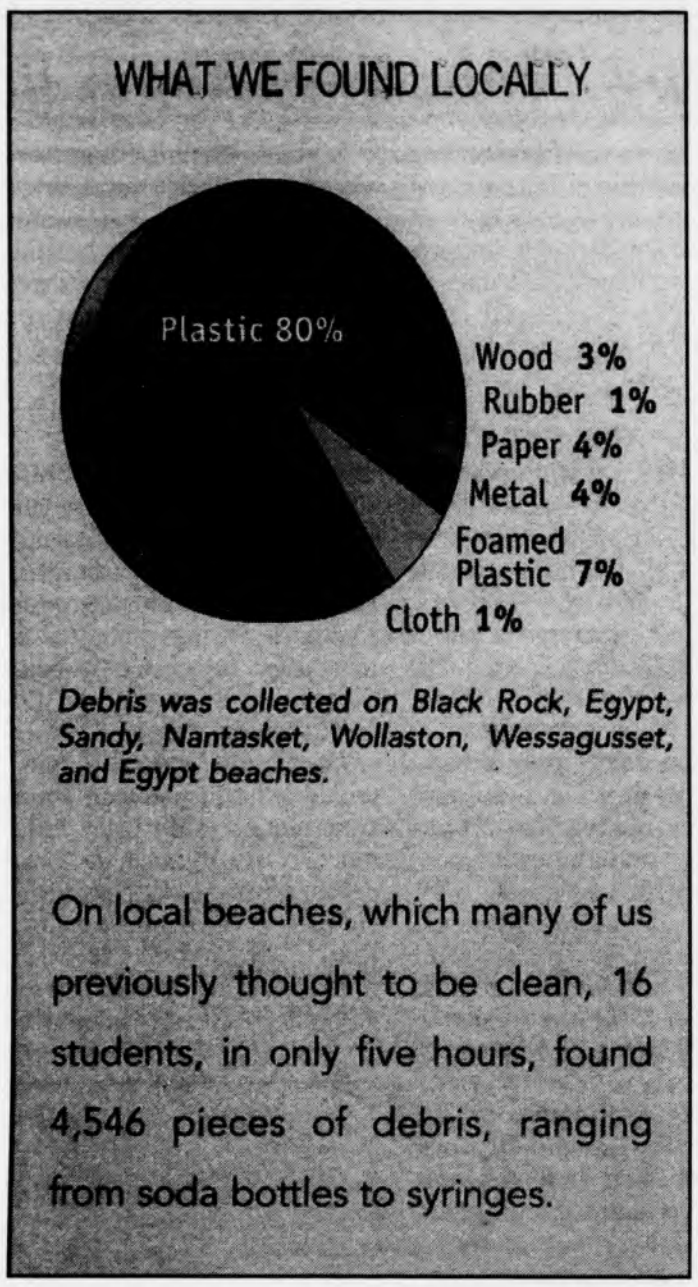
Students in Jack Buckley's Environmental Studies class have published a brochure aimed to inform the community about coastal pollution. The brochure, "Only You Can Keep It Blue," has been distributed throughout the South Shore and includes information taken from the year-long course at Cohasset High School.

Buckley chose to adopt the Coastal Zone Management's project, "Coast Sweep," and bring it into his curriculum hoping to take global issues and relate them to the local community. "Coast Sweep" is a sponsored beach clean-up, where people are recruited in communities from all over the United States. These people are responsible for not only picking up the trash on the beaches, but tallying up the debris into different categories such as plastic, paper, wood, etc. This data is then sent to the Center for Marine Conservation, where they compile the information and produce a booklet describing national trends of what is polluting our beaches.

After one day of picking up trash on local beaches, 16 students had collected 4,545 pieces of debris.

"We continued project 'Coast Sweep' during the school year to see what the debris amounted to month by month," Buckley said. After one day of picking up trash on local beaches, 16 students had collected 4,545 pieces of debris.

"We realized that this was a big problem, and that it's not out of our reach to make a difference. Everybody goes to the beach or out in boats. We are all responsible," said Buckley's former student Justin Green, who graduated last spring.



Buckley read about a grant offered through the Gulf of Maine Association. He wrote a proposal requesting assistance with the consulting and printing of an informative brochure created by his Environmental Studies class. The grant was awarded, and the PSO assisted with additional funding.

Don Kimball, creative art director at Fidelity Investments, donated his time by coming into the classroom and helping the students brainstorm ideas for the brochure. Out of this brainstorm session came the title of the brochure, "Only You Can Make It Blue — Coastal Debris: We Are The Cause and Solution." In addition to Kimball's time in class, he offered suggestions via fax and e-mail, and he also invited one of the students into his office to work with a graphic artist and writer on the final drafts of the brochure.

The students in the Environmental Studies class were happy with the final cut of the brochure and spent a few days driving around the South Shore distributing copies hoping to get the word out.

"I learned much more than I had anticipated when I signed up for the course. Mr. Buckley is a great teacher. We were able to have class on sight, outside in the environment. It was real hands-on learning," said Cohasset High graduate Alan Marcus, another former student of Buckley's.

The brochure can be found in many marinas and hardware stores on the South Shore. In Cohasset, a copy can be picked up at the community center, library, town hall, Pat's Barber Shop, Cohasset Hardware, yacht club, and from the harbormaster.

Deer Hill School ice cream social

On Friday, June 5, the Deer Hill School was host to about 300 Deer Hill students and their families as they were treated to a "welcome back" ice cream social. Parents and teachers got the chance to chat informally while Principal Paul Callahan and members of the Deer Hill School Council scooped out dishes of vanilla ice cream. The students lined up to pay 25 cents for a variety of toppings such as M & M's, crushed oreo cookies, candy corns, "jimmies" and many others.

Many thanks to Stop & Shop, Shaw's and Bergson's, who donated the ice cream and the "jimmies!"

A great time was enjoyed by all. Hopefully, a new tradition has been started at the Deer Hill School!

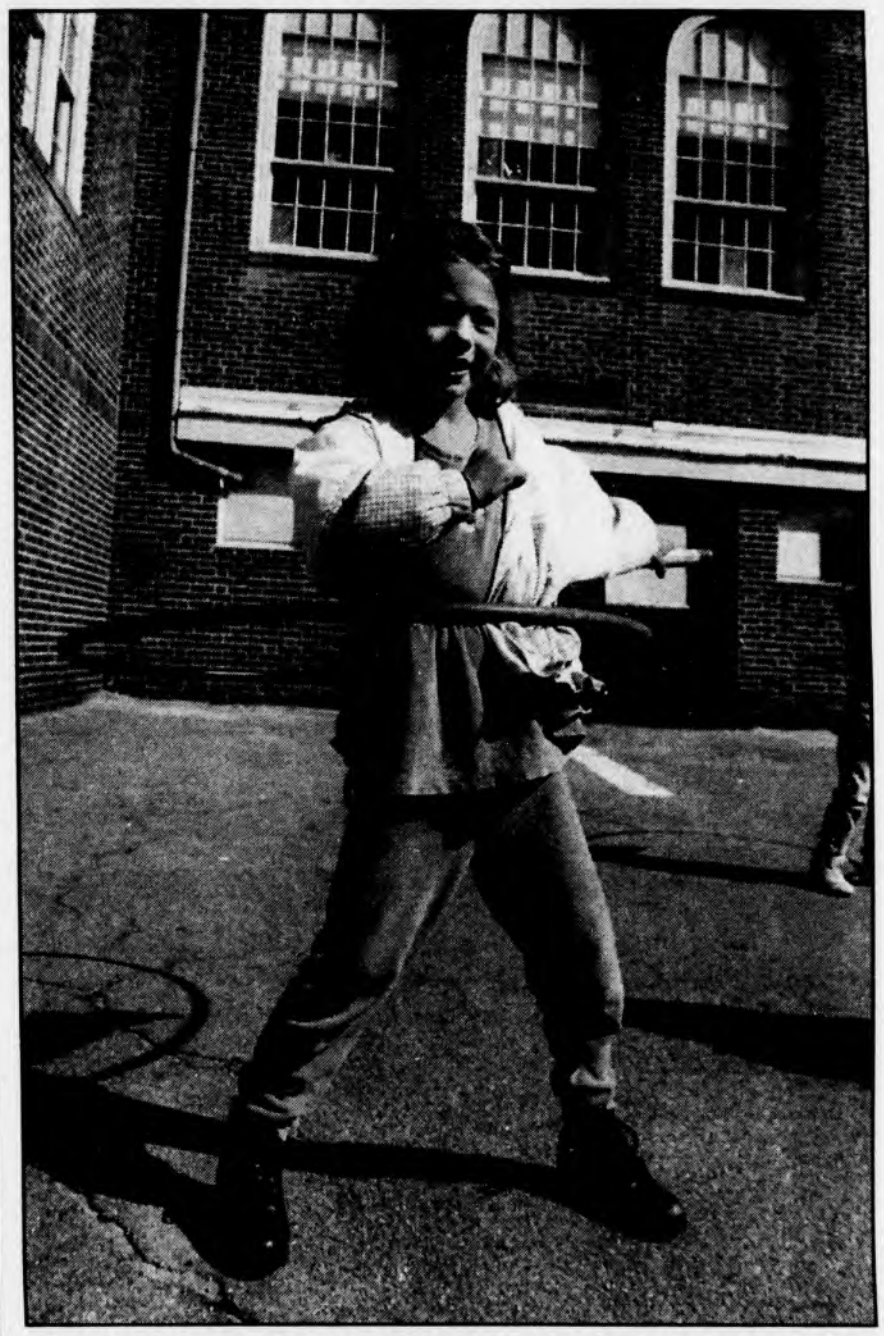
Character talk is slated

On Tuesday, Oct. 7 from 7-9 p.m., the Cohasset PSO invites all parents, teachers and interested citizens to attend a presentation by Dr. William Kilpatrick, the author of "Why Johnny Can't Tell Right from Wrong."

Dr. Kilpatrick is a Professor of Education at Boston College, where he teaches courses in moral education and human development. He is a frequent lecturer to parent audiences. He will discuss moral illiteracy and make the case for character education in our schools. He suggests methods that both parents and schools can use to encourage moral growth in our children.

Ed Leonard, the adjustment counselor at the Deer Hill School will also give a brief presentation. He has developed a character education program that pilots this fall at the Deer Hill School, and could be implemented next year at the Osgood School and the high school.

P.A.C. meeting is Ocotober 14



Due to a conflict with the P.S.O.'s fall meeting, the regularly scheduled PAC has been changed to Tuesday, Oct. 14 at 7:30 p.m. in the Deer Hill School library.

The guest speaker will be Lynn Silva, director of student services. All parents/guardians of children receiving services under Chapter 766 are welcome.

For further details, contact PAC chairperson Kim Maynard 383-2707.

Step-parenting program

The Social Service League of Cohasset will present a free program entitled, "Step-Parenting: How to Live with Other Peoples' Children" on Thursday, Oct. 16 from 7:30-9 p.m. at the Unitarian Church Parish House, 23 North Main St. In this free program, Judy Osborne, LMFT, LMHC, author of "Stepfamilies-The Restructuring Process" and director of Stepfamilies Associates in Brookline, will address the many challenges and rewards of this common family structure. Refreshments will be served. For more information call 383-0771.

DRUG FACT

A lot of people who would never consider using marijuana consider beer to be perfectly acceptable. Beer contains alcohol and alcohol is a very addicting drug - probably the most abused drug there is. Surveys have shown that almost half of all male high school seniors - and nearly 20% of all 9th grade boys - can be called "problem drinkers", meaning they repeatedly get drunk, have problems with school authorities and difficulties with friends and the police. There is always the problem of drinking and driving. The simple fact is that a single can of beer contains the same amount of alcohol as a shot (1 1/2 oz.) of whiskey. If you drink a six-pack of beer, you're getting six doses of a very powerful and addictive drug.

Sons Commander Thomas Wigmore and members of the George H. Mealy American Legion pay tribute to fallen members at special ceremonies recently at the Woodside Ceremony.

The Sons of American Legion Squadron 118 held a memorial service earlier this month at Woodside Cemetery to honor diseased members of the post whose charter dates back to 1935.

Sons Commander Thomas Wigmore said Joseph Gonsalves, John Roche, John Curtis, Norman Card, Louis Mulvey, Francis Mulvey, Joseph Kapuccio, George W. Salvador, Robert Oliver, Richard Oliver, George Bowser and Alfred Gonsalves were memorialized in the service.

Four original members of the sons Ken Jason, Frank Ayers, Robert Ayers and Donald Kennedy were on hand for the ceremony, Wigmore said.

The service was followed by installation of officers for the Legion, Sons, and Auxiliary at the George Mealy American Legion Post.

The Sons raise money for children through the Legion Child Welfare Fund and help at veterans hospitals, Wigmore explained.

PERSONAL FINANCE

Owning your home: Investment or expense?

By Amy K. Barrett
Worth Magazine

Is your home an investment or an expense? Should you consider it part of your investment portfolio, as you would mutual fund shares, which will appreciate over time? Or does owning your own home represent, instead, a lifestyle choice full of practical and emotional concerns?

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

The answer to these questions is that ownership of a house spans both categories, blurring the line between an investment and an expense, and deserves a particular kind of consideration as a financial asset.

Buying a home requires an approach that takes into account the risks of the real estate market, special tax rules and savings strategies; all the while weighing intangible value.

This issue has taken on new importance with the recent changes in the tax laws and the state of the current real estate market. Especially since, according to financial planners, many Americans pour about a third of their income into the mortgage, taxes and upkeep of their homes.

In fact, many financial advisors and housing market experts balk at the suggestion that an individual would consider the house they live in to be a purely financial investment. "Anyone who buys a house as an investment is crazy," says Jordan Clark, president of the United Homeowners Association, a non-profit organization based in Washington, D.C.

At the same time, however, experts recognize that a house is not just a personal expense, like clothing, that can be fully written off; the house will retain value over the long run. And it can represent a significant portion of a person's net worth.

"A house, at best, is a hybrid investment that is primarily devoted to your quality of life" and secondly aimed at making the owner money, says David Diesslin, a financial advisor and president of Diesslin & Associates in Fort Worth, Texas.

Homeowners do not have to sacrifice their personal needs to establish their home as part of their financial plan. A balanced approach which takes into account certain financial factors will do the trick.

For starters, financial advisors around the country urge prospective home buyers to consider their own lifestyle and budget requirements when shopping for a home. While a nice neighborhood and a good school system can buoy the price of a house, says Clark, they are no guarantee you'll make a profit when it's time to sell. But these factors will help the value of the house keep up with inflation.

"Buy what you need. And don't count on (the house) providing a return greater than inflation," says Charles Foster, a partner at Blankinship & Foster in San Diego, Calif., who advises individuals about their finances.

"It's not okay to overspend. Up until the 1980s there was a powerful, implied approval that you could buy the house you couldn't afford because it was an investment." Even though the housing market has changed since the golden days of the late 1960s through the late 1980s, that outdated attitude lingers, he says.

Buying a home requires an approach that takes into account the risks of the real estate market, special tax rules and savings strategies; all the while weighing intangible value.

How have things changed? Diesslin explains, for instance, that during the period of skyrocketing prices, inflation expanded at about 8 percent a year while mortgage rates were about 10 percent. When you deducted a portion of your mortgage interest from your income taxes, your actual borrowing rate was lower than 10 percent. In fact, it was often lower than inflation.

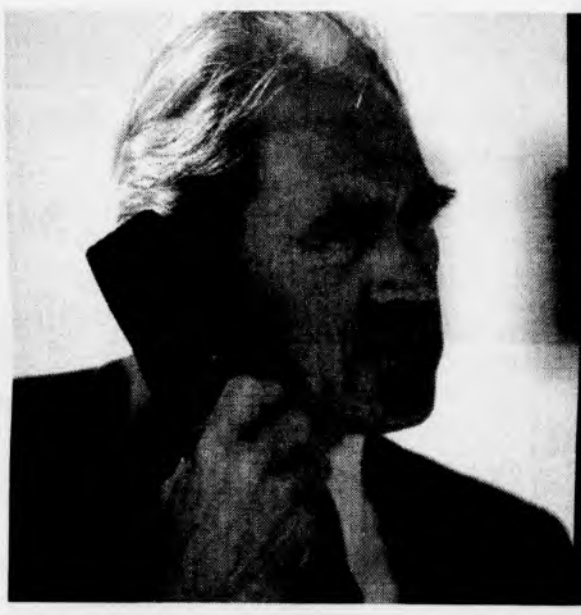
Because house values usually stayed in line with inflation, it wasn't hard to make money on a house, says Diesslin. And that only fed the demand for housing, pushing up prices.

But inflation is currently growing at only 2.2 percent, while mortgage rates hover around 8 percent. The difference between the two is harder to bridge with tax deductions, says Diesslin. And, in many areas of the country, housing prices are not booming as they were in the 80s. Hence, making a profit on your house is not necessarily a sure thing.

These days, the benefits of owning a home come after you sell the house. Before tax reforms this year, people under 55 years of age were taxed on the profit they made when they sold their house if they didn't buy another house of equal or greater value within two years. (Those over the age of 55 got a one-time tax break of $125,000.) Now all taxpayers get a $250,000 tax break on profits every two years, no matter how they spend their windfall.

"The old rule of thumb was that you had to buy a more expensive home," says Walter Dehlye at Gelman, Rosenberg & Freedman in Bethesda, Md.

But now, homeowners, especially those who have retired, can buy a smaller, less expensive home if their lifestyle permits (or requires) it, and then put the balance of the profit into stocks or bonds which can make more money.



"The investment will typically do better elsewhere," says Foster. "If you have $10,000 you could put toward a house or into another investment vehicle, put it in an investment that [is easier to cash out of] and that you are less emotionally attached to."

This is not to say that your mortgage payments are a bad investment. You could say that the mortgage schedule serves as a sort of disciplined savings plan. "When you pay down the mortgage, it's like putting money away for later," Foster says. At the very least, you will get your initial investment back if your house only retains, not increases, its value. While you enjoy living in your home day-to-day, you are building up equity in the house.

As to the money spent on interest, Foster says "The interest you pay on the loan is like paying rent." Or the price tag of an investment that gives back more than just profits – a place to live as well.

HEALTH NOTES

October flu clinics slated

The Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health will sponsor Flu Clinics in October for Cohasset residents.

It's time to "winterize and immunize!" The best way to protect yourself from the flu is a yearly flu shot. Who should get a flu shot?

People who are 65 or older. Children or adults with lung disease (including asthma), heart disease or other chronic health problems. Children or teens who, for medical reasons, take an aspirin every day. People who live with or take care of someone who is at risk of getting the flu (health care worker, primary care givers, etc.). Anyone wanting extra protection during the winter months from the current flu strains.

There will be two flu clinics for seniors: Tuesday, Oct. 14, 10 a.m. to noon at Second Congregational Church and Friday, Oct. 17, 10 a.m. to noon at Harborview Senior Housing.

Community flu clinics for all Cohasset residents: Saturday, Oct. 18, 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset Town Hall; Saturday, Oct. 25, 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset Town Hall; Tuesday, Oct. 28, 7 to 9 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall.

Note: Please try to wear a short-sleeved shirt.

HVNA volunteers sought

The New Friends volunteer visiting program, a community service outreach program sponsored by the Hingham Visiting Nurse, a branch of the Affiliated Community VNA, serves homebound, handicapped or socially isolated people in Hingham, Cohasset, Hull, Norwell, Scituate and Weymouth. The program is open to men and women who can give four to five hours per month. A four-week training program to prepare interested volunteers for visiting will take place from 7 to 8:30 p.m. at the Hingham VNA office at 10 Downer Ave., on four consecutive Wednesdays Oct. 22 to Nov. 12. Training program topics include the value of volunteering, our feelings toward aging, and visiting and listening techniques. For information, call the Hingham VNA office at (781) 749-1160.

Woman injured in single car accident

Firefighters worked Tuesday morning to free a Cohasset woman who was trapped in her car on Beechwood Street following a single car accident.

Fenella Prescott, 28, of 140 Doane St., apparently hit a tree when she reached for something in her car.

Police say there were no indications that Prescott was speeding. Prescott's 1990 Mitsubishi Mirage flipped over, police said.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said firefighters broke the windows to extricate Prescott. because the car door was jammed.

Prescott was transported to South Shore Hospital where she was treated and released.

Police say the intersection at Beechwood and Rt. 3A needs dedicated turning lanes.

Intersection needs turning lane

Police Officer Richard Yocum said he has notified state engineers that the intersection at Rt. 3A and Beechwood Street needs some improvement.

"People are using four lanes to travel, it's a like a speedway," Yocum said.

He explained that there are no dedicated turning lanes on Rt. 3A to Beechwood, so cars are trying to pass and beat each other to the point where the highway narrows to two lanes again.

Yocum said the intersection should be more like the light in front of Stop & Shop where there are dedicated lanes for cars making left-hand turns.

He estimated that many cars race through the light at 50-60 miles per hour. Sunday, Yocum said he stopped eight or nine cars for speeding or failure to stop at the light.

Some want plug pulled on the King Street tank

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

King Street neighbors are not thrilled with the proposal to site the town's second water tank in their neighborhood which overlooks Lily Pond.

In addition to being the town's water supply, the reservoir also provides one of the most spectacular vistas in Cohasset. The proposal includes building a $1.8 million, 750,000 gallon ground-level tank and a state-of-the art enclosed pumping system next to the water treatment plant.

"This is one of the prettiest spots in town," said Victor Vanderlugt, 344 King St. "Now when you walk down the hill, there will be a plant with a tank."

"Welcome to the neighborhood, that's what we have now," replied a resident from the Bear Hill area.

Commissioners planned to discuss the King Street proposal again last night after the Cohasset Mariner went to press.

Abutters have objected to siting the tank next to the town's existing standpipe on Bear Hill

Town divided over fate of Hagerty House

By Margo Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Every evening, Paul Pattison takes a walk by the harbor through the Parker Avenue right of way. It is the same route to the harbor that he followed when he was a boy, and it takes him near a house that has opinions in town divided.

In a way, his path is also symbolic of the repetitious course the committee studied the Hagerty House has followed. Selectmen now want to see the house demolished as do a majority of the property committee on which Pattison and about eight other citizens still serve.

As many as 13 people started out with Pattison as members of the Hagerty Property committee. While the large number of board members proved inconvenient, there is no doubt in anyone's mind, the main reason the board's progress stalled is due to the house.

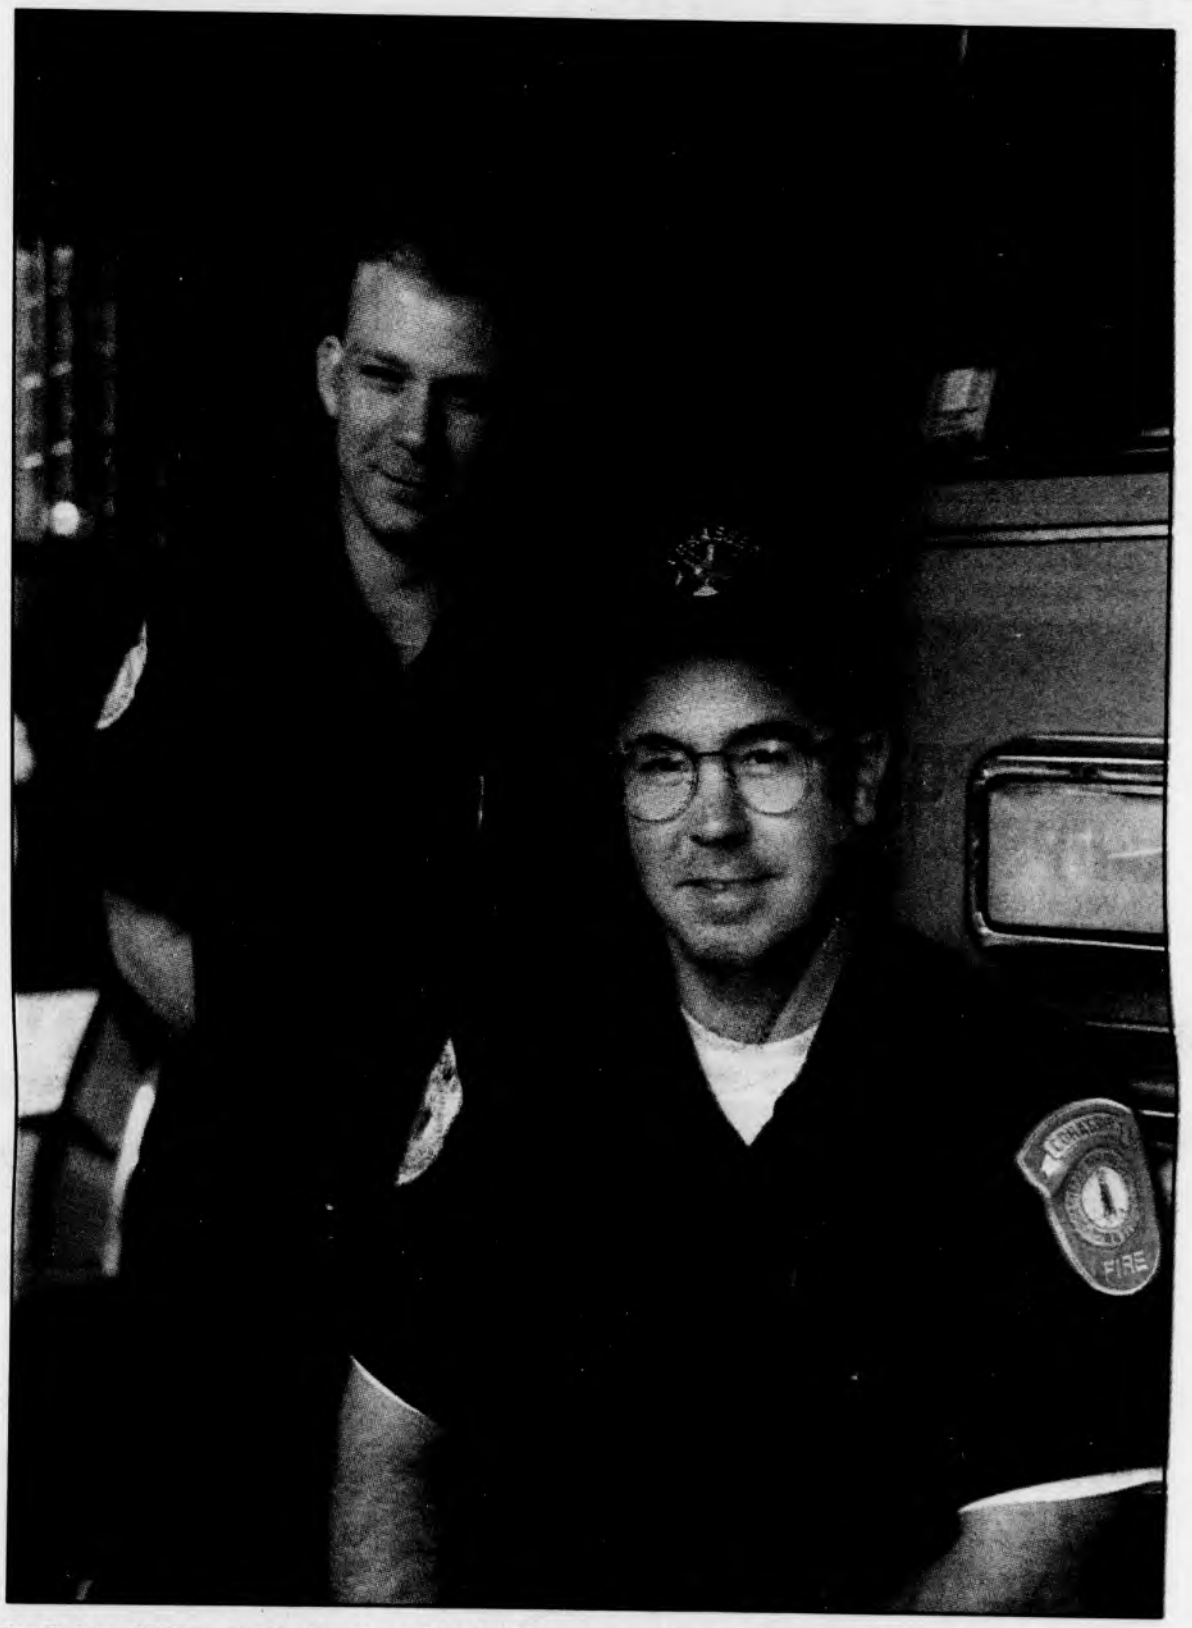
Josh Cutler to go after Murray's Statehouse seat

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Echoing then candidate Bill Clinton's 1990 campaign refrain, Josh Cutler thinks it's time for a change.

The 26-year-old Hull resident is throwing his hat into the ring for the 1998 Democratic Party nomination to seek the Third Plymouth District house seat held by long-time incumbent Republican Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset.



"My philosophy is that the district needs someone who is aggressive and energetic and can tackle the issues," Cutler said.

Cutler thinks a Democrat can get more accomplished on Beacon Hill.

"It's a Democratic legislature, like it or not. That's the way it is and a Democrat has a better chance of being effective," he said.

And as Cutler points out, if

To town's newest firefighters, there's no place like home

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset's newest firefighters say that being home-grown is an asset in a small town.

"We don't have to look at a map book," says Philip Pratt.

"We know where the 'Buckley' condos (off Forest Street) and the Wolf Pit are - it helps a lot," adds John "Jack" Hernan.

Hernan, who lives on Beechwood Street, and Pratt of Sohier Street are the latest additions to the Cohasset Fire Department. For both men, serving in the town where they grew up is fulfillment of a life-long dream.

Pratt, 24, graduated from Cohasset High in 1991; and Hernan, 33, is a member of the CHS Class of 1981.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Pay-as-you-throw plan still under review

The pay-as-you-throw system, where Cohasset residents would pay a fee for every bag of trash they dispose of, instead of the current annual flat fee for an RTF sticker, is still under consideration by the Recycling Committee.

The Recycling Committee is continuing its discussions on pay-as-you-throw at its meetings scheduled for Tuesday, Oct. 21, at 7:30 p.m., at Town Hall, and Saturday, Nov. 11, at 10 a.m., at the DPW garage, and invites interested residents to attend if they have any questions.

"The pay-as-you-throw system is a proven way to increase recycling," said Recycling Committee Chairman Arthur Lehr. "Towns with pay-as-you-throw in place have been able to increase their recycling rates of 50 to 60 percent, far more than our current recycling rate of about 34 percent."

Lehr also pointed out that "pay-as-you-throw is a more equitable method of charging residents for trash disposal, since people will be charged only for what they actually dispose of. Since there will be no charge for bringing recyclables to the RTF, residents will have an economic incentive to separate their recyclables."

When seconds count

Towns aim for faster emergency response

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

In the grand scheme of things, three or four minutes may not seem like a long time. But when you're waiting for medical assistance, those few minutes can mean the difference between life and death.

"The more time that passes, the more devastating the circumstances become for the patient," said Robert Fitzgerald, an emergency physician and the chief of emergency services at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

If a heart attack victim does not receive cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) within four minutes and Advanced Life Support treatment (ALS) within eight minutes, that person may have only a 40 percent chance of survival, he said. After 15 minutes without medical attention, chance of survival drops to 2 percent, he said.

With that thought in mind, fire departments across the South Shore are struggling to shave as many minutes as possible off their average response times for emergency calls.

Local fire chiefs say their departments are aiming for a four-minute or less average response time. Marshfield has been able to achieve that goal.

Marshfield has three fire stations, which enable crews to make speedy rescues, said Fire Capt. Jack Beagle. Last year, Marshfield responded to 2,900 emergencies.

But in some communities, like Cohasset, a lack of fire stations prevents crews from quickly reaching out-of-the-way neighborhoods.

"Under optimum response conditions, it takes five minutes to get to Beechwood from fire headquarters," said Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln. "It can take seven to eight minutes to get to North Cohasset."

Bad weather can triple the response time, Lincoln said. Last year, Cohasset responded to more than 1,000 emergencies which were evenly split between fire and medical incidents.

Lincoln explained Cohasset used to have sub-stations in Beechwood and North Cohasset but the stations were closed in the early 1980s due to town budget constraints.

At one time, there was a proposal to open a station on Route 3A near Sohier Street, which is the geographic center of Cohasset, but the town turned that down, Lincoln said.

The town of Scituate had to close one of its four stations, the Minot Station, in 1993 due to a tight budget. Two years later, a fatal fire - which claimed the lives of three children - broke out in a home located less than a mile from the closed fire station.

The station's closure hindered emergency crews' ability to respond within a comfortable three or four minutes. With only three stations open, Scituate's emergency response time to certain part of town has jumped to seven minutes, said Scituate Fire Chief James E. Breen.

To try to remedy this problem, Scituate town meeting voters approved initiating a study of a fire department master plan that would ultimately improve the town's fire protection, he said.

In the meantime, the SFD has bolstered its lifesaving skills by training its firefighters in Intermediate Life Support. Medical emergency response can be learned on three levels — advanced, intermediate and basic life support - depending on the amount of training received.

EMTs have 110 hours of basic training with 21 hours of annual refresher training that will enable them to stabilize a patient for a trip to the hospital. Intermediate and advanced life support paramedics have had more training and know more skills. Paramedics are able to read electrocardiograms, to start intravenous tubes, to give advanced airway care and to provide 30 medications. They are also trained in pediatric advanced life support as well as neo-natal advanced life support.

Cohasset firefighters are trained in basic life support. Chief Lincoln said although there are no plans now, more advanced life support training is something the fire department should get involved in down the road.

Hingham's Fire Chief William Johnson said the department needs more firefighters to man the town's three stations. Ten years ago, 16 firefighters worked each day; now only 10 perform the same job, he said. He is currently conducting a manning study and reassessing the apparatus the department uses.

The department is also in the process of purchasing a special dual-purpose vehicle that combines the uses of a ladder truck and a pumper engine.

Last year, Hingham responded to 2,559 emergencies, 1,200 of which were medically related.

A regional approach

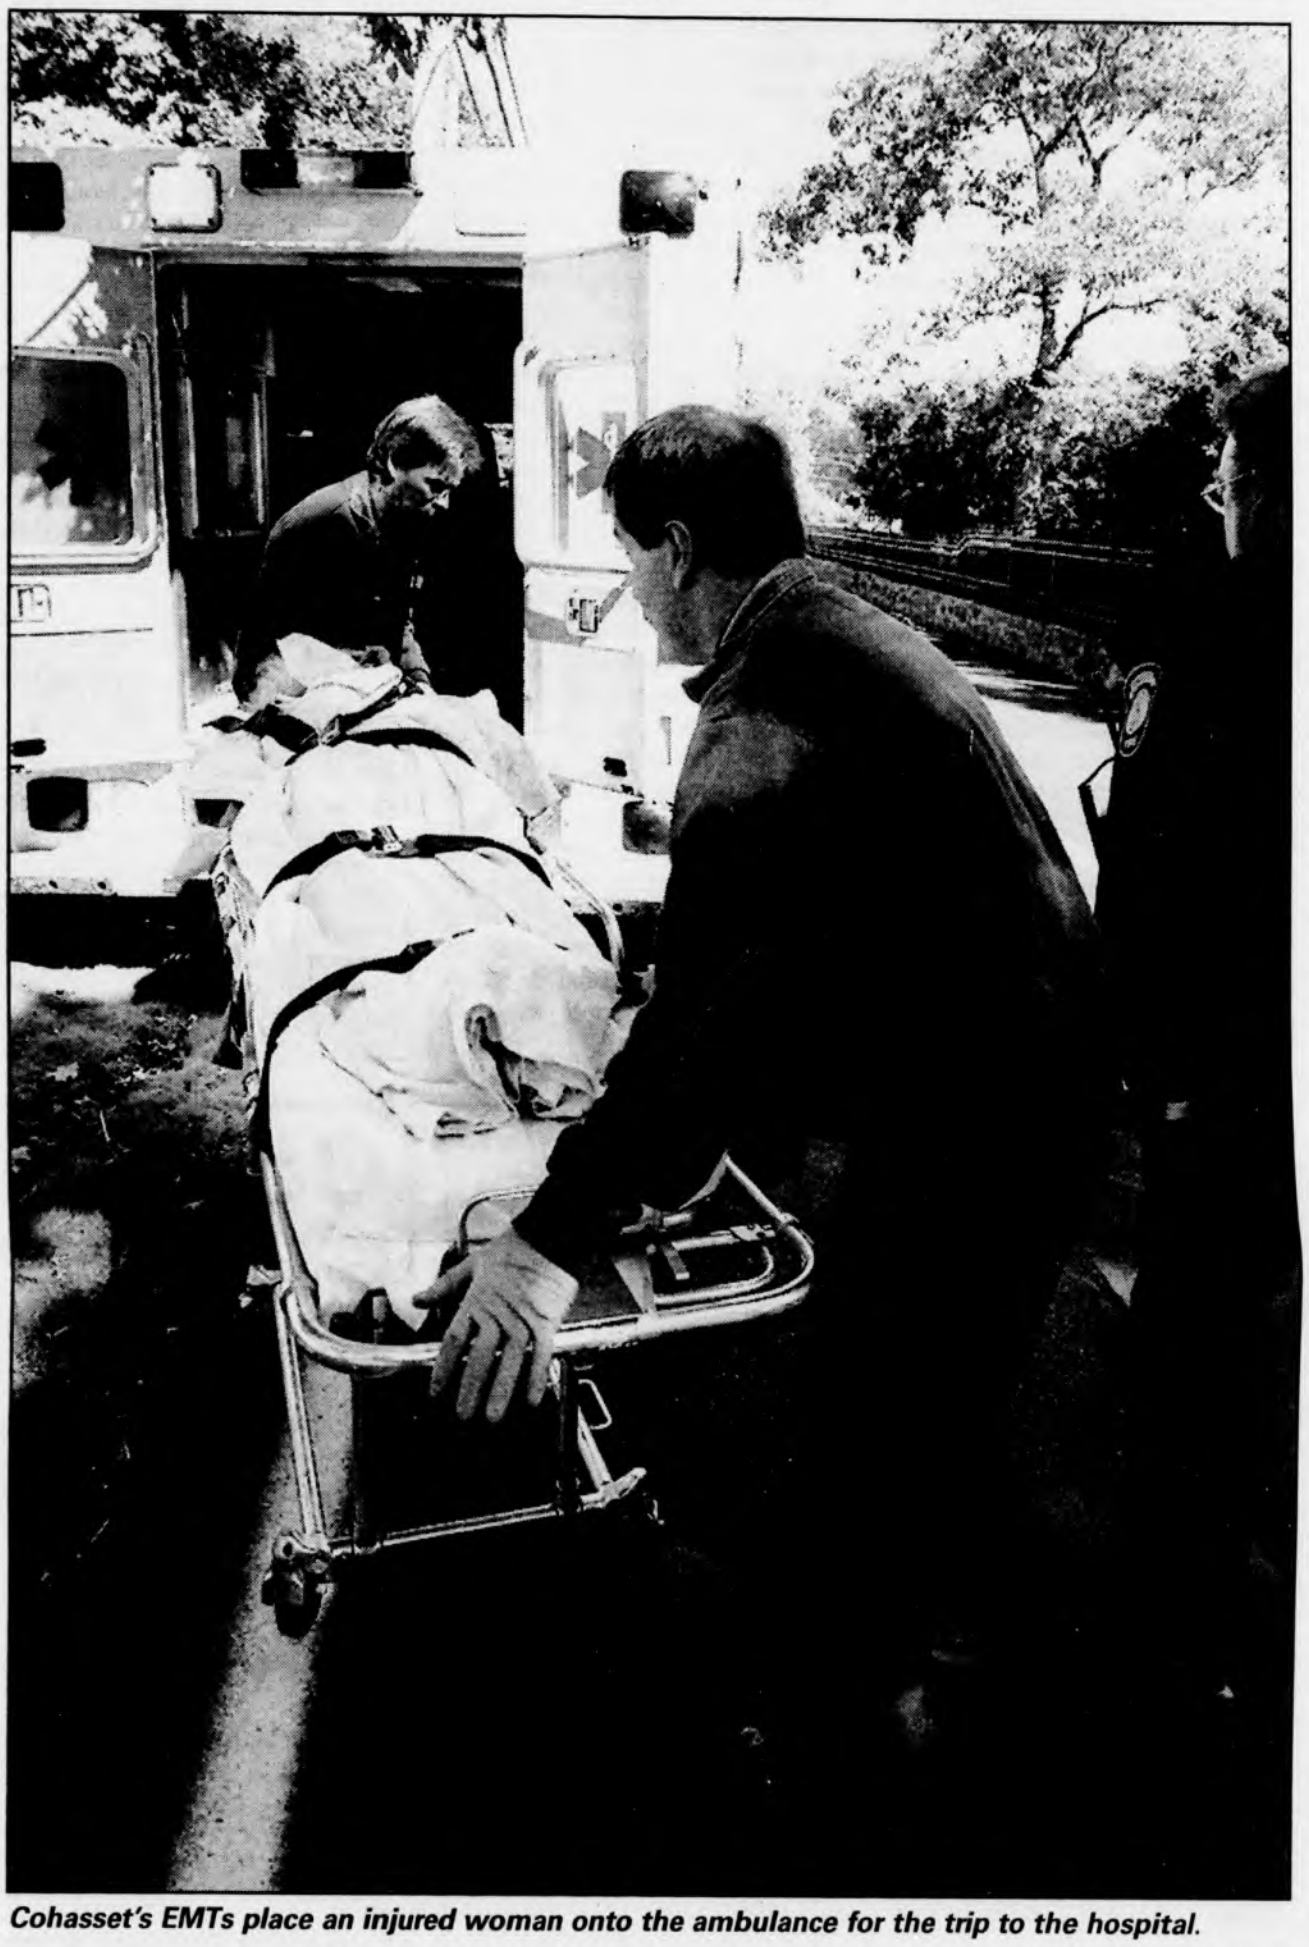
A few years ago, the towns of Scituate, Cohasset, Norwell, Hingham and Hull toyed with the idea of creating a regional district - the Seaside Fire and Rescue District - to cut costs and combine resources. Those towns' selectmen met and agreed to hire a consultant to study the possibility of a regional department, but never got very far.

"It would have made the deployment of people and resources more efficient and would have lowered response time," said Jane Goedecke, a former Cohasset selectman, who was involved with the project.

One regional department would have replaced individual towns' departments. Town boundaries would have been obsolete, with fire stations operating out of the most logical locations, she said.

But the state fire union - fearing that its members would be laid off as part of the consolidation effort - forbade firefighters from participating in the development of the regional district and department, she said.

"We were at a stalemate. We couldn't plan it without the firefighters. They're the ones who know how to make it work," Goedecke said. The selectmen went into the project with a commitment that there would be no reduction in staffing, she added.



Initial costs for building a central fire station on Route 3A with no immediate savings may not have appealed to certain towns, she said. As a result, the project never got off the ground and has not been dredged up since.

"I think we bit off more than we could chew in the sense that we were looking at sharing something with some of the largest costs, the most personnel and a strong union when we don't even share something as simple as a building inspector," said Goedecke. "It was probably naive of us to even consider it."

Five years ago, South Shore Hospital began offering non-transporting ALS services to the South Shore. Sixteen communities, including Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Holbrook, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland and Scituate, rely on the hospital for back up paramedics when necessary.

Many towns do not have the resources to hire paramedics or provide comparable training, which is why the service was created, said Peggy Cass, paramedic services coordinator at South Shore Hospital.

At no cost to the towns, rescue officials can call the service, which will send one of its pair of certified paramedics, who arrive in one of two Chevrolet Blazers rather than ambulances. They stabilize patients and one paramedic will often ride in the town ambulance to the hospital.

Cohasset's EMTs place an injured woman onto the ambulance for the trip to the hospital.

Town is divided over fate of Hagerty House

"The house has stood in the way of the plan," as property board Chairman Al Moore put it, not mincing words.

At present, engineer John Modzeleweski has still not completed a final design, although he said he is working on it.

"We're finishing it up momentarily," he said this week.

Meantime, there is no plan, although most board members said eventually, the design will at least call for a walkway to Government Island, an improved retaining wall, a pier and a parking lot. A talked-about picnic area, on the other hand, might never happen.

There is also confusion about the status of permit applications to the Army Corps of Engineers and the state environmental agency. And not surprisingly, the committee, which has had only two or three meetings this past year, appears to be mired in frustration.

For 4-1/2 years, the debate over the house has both stymied the committee and proved a stumbling block to the effort to move on and develop the property for boating and for passive recreation while the building has fallen into disrepair. Now the selectmen are on record with the hope the house will go, but some residents want the building saved.

"It would be nice to know if we were working with the house or without it," said Moore.

Recently, with Special Town Meeting imminent, the controversy has heated up over the vacant house which is the last substantial building standing on property the town bought 4-1/2 years ago for $470,000. Marine biologist Kevin Ulmer, a member of the health board, has lost some major backing for his idea to refurbish the house as a research facility, but is still in the game, and another group, the Habitat for Humanity, is also eyeing the site.

Despite the divisiveness, matters appear to be coming to a conclusion because Special Town Meeting could decide the question Oct. 27.

But if the voters don't settle it, Mother Nature, in Pattison's opinion, is ready to.

"It's not a place really for green space," Pattison said because high tide and storms regularly swamp the house and much of the grounds.

According to Pattison, "The only land that's not inundated by water is under the house."

Realistically, he said, if there's any passive recreation at all there, "it's going to be the type of recreation good for someone docking a boat."

Like other members of the divided committee, Pattison now regrets the price of the venture. Besides the $470,000 purchase price, the committee has also spent about $50,000 to demolish ramshackle factory buildings and now proposes using about $250,000 to build a dock, shore up the rip-rap by the harbor, and construct a walkway to Government Island.

"It's close to a million dollar proposition," he said.

Fellow committee member Russ Bonetti also raised questions about the high price tag, especially for a place that much of the public might never use. "Everyone's paying for it, and not everyone uses the boats," he said.

However, Bonetti acknowledged there were several reasons behind the purchase which was made to expand the public's access to the harbor, though primarily to the launch, and to protect the harbor from potential industrial pollution because the Hagerty property is in an area zoned for light industry. Though the case the deal was for the public good can be made, Bonetti still wants to see some passive recreation for non-boaters. Opposing him, the people who use the launch largely support making the whole site a parking lot.

The committee, according to Veneta Roebuck, will probably meet prior to the Special Town Meeting to prepare a statement for the voters. Roebuck also expressed frustration with the committee's slow progress and lack of consensus.

"It's always been about the house," she said.

Habitat eyes Hagerty House

Close to the 11th hour, a new suitor may be coming forward to save Hagerty House from the wrecking ball.

A spokeswoman for Habitat for Humanity has confirmed some members of her organization took a fresh look at the Parker Avenue house this weekend, reviving an old idea.

According to Julie McKinney of Braintree, a member of the Habitat board of directors, the group is by no means sure it will come forward with a proposal.

"It's very, very preliminary," McKinney said. "We're not even sure the house would fit in with our Habitat philosophy."

Kevin Ulmer, a marine biologist, is still interested in turning the house into a Lobster Lab, which would serve as an educational research facility.

Meantime, Special Town Meeting voters on Oct. 27 are expected to act on a question about moving or demolishing the building. The majority of the selectmen want Hagerty House destroyed and have recommended that action to the voters. According to selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, it's not likely a discussion about Habitat House would be held at the town meeting.

The warrant has been closed, he said, and it is too late for Habitat to get a proposal on the agenda.

Special Town Meeting is also expected to take up Ulmer's proposal to retrofit the house for the Lobster Lab's use as a research facility. It stayed on the agenda, though the selectmen voted not to recommend the Lobster Lab article after Ulmer's partners in the undertaking, the Lightkeepers Corporation, withdrew their support.

In explaining the board's anti-Lobster Lab vote, Sullivan said the majority did not want to see the building go to a one-person venture.

Ulmer did not return calls, but previously he has said he would not give up his campaign for the Lobster Lab until the Hagerty House was actually gone.

because of aesthetics and potential impact on property values. Last summer, the zoning board appeared to side with the neighbors prompting the water commission to withdraw its application for a height variance. The Bear Hill site was approved by annual town meeting last March.

"Wherever we go, we have that problem," water commission chairman Robert Kasameyer told those questioning the tank's effect on aesthetics. "The fact is, we need a second tank."

(In a telephone interview Tuesday, water commissioner John McNabb said engineers would be able to place the tank off to the side of the water plant in the woods and not in the plant parking lot as was discussed last week.)

With the ground-level tank, water pressure would be provided by a set of five pumps instead of gravity as is the case with the town's existing tank.

Glenn Pratt, 482 King St., said the water commission was heading "in the wrong direction by seeking an expansion of an industrial use in a residential zone."

The third proposal would be to site the tank on a piece of the former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor land on Scituate Hill off Route 3A across from Jonathan Livingston Seagull Square. The site, which is suitable from an engineering standpoint, would require an eminent domain land taking by the town. The 62-acre parcel is for sale and the effect of a land-taking on a possible offer is unknown.

McNabb explained that the current owner "does not want to throw a monkey wrench in if we don't have to."

But Wayne Sawchuk, 432 Beechwood St., who backs the Scituate Hill site, said the property owner might welcome the standpipe.

Reached at his office Tuesday, Sawchuk said the Webb-Norfolk land has no public water supply and any development there would require mains and infrastructure.

He also dismissed concerns that a land taking would be prohibitively expensive.

Sawchuk said the owner, Mario Susi & Sons of Dorchester, bought the property for $1.2 million and is asking $3.6 million. That would translate into $58,000 an acre or less if assessed valuation and not market rates are used. An acre is all that's needed for a tank, he said.

Shawchuk said a Scituate Hill tank could be camouflaged with a berm and 45-foot tall evergreens. He said that location is the most logical because of its proximity to Route 3A and development along the state highway. Scituate Hill is higher than Bear Hill, so the tank could be 20 feet shorter and that, coupled with the landscaping, would prevent it from being an eyesore to residents of Fair Oaks Lane across 3A, he said.

A developer with an office on Route 3A, Shawchuk said he would not gain financially from the Scituate Hill site.

"But I am absolutely positive, it is the best location for Cohasset," he said. He explained a standpipe at Scituate Hill would better serve Forest Avenue and north Cohasset, should that part of town be added to the Cohasset system. (North Cohasset is on Hingham water, but some residents there want to be hooked up to Cohasset. Hingham water rates soared last year to pay for a new treatment plant in that town).

The town needs a new tank for better fire flow and also to enable the existing tank to be taken off line to be cleaned, water commissioners said. A second tank would ensure that even on days with the highest demand, water levels would not drop below the optimum needed to provide sufficient pressure to fight a fire.

The ground-level tank which commissioners estimate to be the most expensive option would include computer sensors that would kick pumps into action if more water was needed in the system.

The water commission is keeping all options open and to that effect, has placed several articles on the Oct. 27 special town meeting warrant detailing the three tank proposals. They hope to decide on a preferred alternative before town meeting. McNabb has gone on the record saying King Street is his first choice.

Kasameyer said all the proposals have positives and negatives but the commission wanted to be in a position to move ahead following the special town meeting. The cost of whichever tank the town opts for will be paid for through increased water rates approved last spring.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

BACK TO WORK

The effectiveness of using chiropractic to treat workers with back ailments can be seen in at least two studies, the first of which involves 1,000 back injury reports at the California Division of Labor and Statistics and Research. It reveals that the 500 patients who receive chiropractic care spent less time away from work, and were more likely to consider themselves completely recovered than those who received only standard medical care. Another study, involving an evaluation of 237 workers' compensation claims for back pain, found that 82 percent of the 29 workers treated solely by chiropractors resumed work after one week. Only 41 percent of the 208 workers treated only by medical doctors could say the same.

A healthy back is strong, flexible, and pain-free. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we can help you with back problems. Our goal is to afford you with quality chiropractic healthcare to provide you with maximum health, comfort, and function in your activities of daily living, with a minimum of stress and discomfort. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we offer you a quality of life. Call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment.

P.S. The two studies involving chiropractic's effectiveness in treating workers' back ailments should be as much a matter of interest to employers as it is to injured employees.

To town's newest firefighters, there's no place like home

Both men have fire-fighting in their blood.

Pratt's father served as a call firefighter in town for 30 years. And Hernan's father is a retired deputy chief and not long ago, his brother transferred to Scituate after 12 years on the Cohasset force.

When Pratt joined the call department five years ago, it was like a homecoming.

"Lenny Davis (who has since retired) remembered me climbing around the trucks when I was little," he recalled.

Hernan said Chief Roger Lincoln can remember him being pushed around the fire department in a stroller.

"We have a lot of history here," he said.

Pratt did some post graduate work at Blue Hill Technical Regional High School and was employed as a carpenter until joining the fire department full time. He says his knowledge of buildings is helpful when fighting structure fires.

Hernan earned a bachelor's degree from UMass Boston, served as a US Army medic in the reserves, and worked for Brewster Ambulance, a private service, before coming on board in Cohasset.

Both men started at the Cohasset Fire Department on Aug. 18. The starting annual salary for a firefighter/EMT is in the $32,000 range, Lincoln said.

The firefighters just completed 6-1/2 weeks of in-house training that included medical service, firefighting, hydraulics, handling hazardous materials, pumper operation, driver training and theory.

Chief Lincoln explained the department conducts its own "mini-academy" because the waiting list for the Massachusetts Fire Academy is so long. The new fire-fighters are numbers 369 and 370 on the waiting list so it could be as long as a year or two before they can attend.

Both men are Emergency Medical Technicians (EMTs) and say they would eventually like to become paramedics, a more advanced level of life support service.

Chief Lincoln applauds their desire for more training.

"The addition of paramedics to the department is something I see in the future," Lincoln said. "We have to think seriously about it because we are 12 miles from the nearest hospital."

Being a firefighter in a small town has a lot of appeal, the firefighters say.

"We have to do everything," Pratt explains. "One day we're on the ambulance, then the pumper or ladder and then back to the ambulance. It depends on the call."

He said in cities, firefighters are assigned to the same truck every day.

Hernan says there is a lot of camaraderie in a small department.

"There's a real team effort here," he said.

Cohasset also provides a varied terrain, fields, ponds and the ocean for water rescues, and a variety of houses and structures.

"We're not a planned city, we have to deal with terrain problems, and that presents a challenge," Hernan says.

But most of all what appeals to the firefighters is being able to make a difference.

Hernan said 30 minutes after an accident, people drive by and have no idea what occurred just a short while before.

"But we were there, we made a difference," he says.

The men said expecting the unexpected keeps them motivated and ready for anything.

"When a call comes in, I can feel my heart pumping. I give 120 percent. I don't think about it, I just do it," Pratt said.

Hernan points out - while adrenaline is pumping inside - on the outside, fire-fighters are calm.

"We just react," he says. "And hope the training will carry us through."

At 84, Herbert Jason, a hardy lobsterman, admits he's getting on in years. And that's got him to thinking about what he wants to do.

Right at the top of his list is the construction of a memorial to the two, 20-year-old assistant lighthouse keepers, Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson. The young men perished when the original Minot's Ledge Lighthouse toppled in a gale in April 1851.

"Those two boys walked all the streets we walked as boys and played around the harbor," Jason says.

So the Cushing Road resident would like to construct a fitting memorial to Wilson and Antoine on Government Island. Jason's concept involves placing a polished block granite stone in the center of a compass rose made out of red brick to be built on a grassy area near the water on Government Island. The area would include shrubs and benches similar to those around the pond on the common.

But Jason's concept has met opposition from both the Government Island Study Committee and Cohasset Historical Commission, which both feel a brass plaque on the Replica dedicating it to the two men is more suitable.

Hamilton Tewksbury, chairman of the GISC, said the committee felt the plaque would be more appropriate.

"We realize and appreciate all the work Herb put into the Replica," Tewksbury said. "But his proposal is too much, it's too big." Jason was one of the prime movers behind the Replica.

Tewksbury said a lot of people would see the plaque on the Replica. Town Manager Mark Haddad gave the go ahead to get the plaque, which would be paid for with historical commission sale of T-shirts and other items, not tax money, he said.

In a letter to Jason, Noel Ripley, chairman of the historical commission, said the majority of the commission felt the plaque is what they would like to see as a long, overdue recognition for Wilson and Antoine.

Wigmore Pierson is the sole commission member to back Jason's concept.

"I believe it's time after nearly 150 years to recognize in a significant way these two young men who gave their lives while trying to do their duty," Pierson said. "I do not believe placing a plaque on the Replica does these men justice."

He said he supports Jason's efforts to do something of a more significant nature that "is tasteful and fits in with the Government Island environment."

"I voted for the concept to go forward. That doesn't mean it can't be adjusted or changed," he said.

Pierson said he, Jason and some other supporters are putting together a detailed plan which they hope to present to selectmen in November. He said no public funds would be used for the project.

Jason said Wilson and Antoine continued to perform their duties in the midst of hurricane-force winds in the unsafe lighthouse which was built on stilts so the water could pass through.

But the sea surge caused the waves to reach the lightkeepers quarters weakening and eventually toppling the lighthouse.

In a recent letter to the editor of the Cohasset Mariner, Jason said the town of Cohasset has always remembered those who gave their lives for their country, but somehow the town has forgotten two of its bravest men.

"Honoring those boys has been on my mind for years," Jason said. "I think they deserve more than a little plaque."

Oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled

Used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled by bringing them to the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street..

"We have been successful in providing for the recycling of used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries by Cohasset residents," said Recycling Committee chairman Arthur Lehr. "We urge everyone to separate and recycle these items rather than throw them away."

In addition to these materials, Cohasset residents may also bring the following to the RTF for recycling: newspapers, white paper, junk mail, plastic bottles, aluminum, steel, cardboard, glass (separate by color), and cans (which should be cleaned out). Paint is accepted, but only on designated days. A fee is required for dropping off: tires, household appliances, household furniture and other miscellaneous bulky materials.

EEE packets available

Packets containing basic information on Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE) and general measures for mosquito control are available at three Cohasset sites: Town Hall (in a receptacle mounted on the large billboard), the Community Center, and the Paul Pratt Library.

This information has been provided by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, the Audubon Society, and the Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee (CMCC). For further information call 383-9900, ext. 121, or leave a note in the CMCC mailbox in town hall.

BOWDOIN COLLEGE NEWS

I am about to tell you outstanding news from Bowdoin College right now - two Cohasset students have been designated Sarah and James Bowdoin Scholars and Book Award winners at Bowdoin. Book award winners are those students who receive grades of no less than an A during the preceding year. They were among 308 undergraduates accorded recognition for distinguishing themselves in scholarship by the college. The designation as Sarah and James Bowdoin Scholars honors James Bowdoin III and his wife Sarah. James Bowdoin III was the earliest patron of the college and was instrumental in its founding in 1794. A drum roll please Ö Johanna R. Horn '98, and Christopher M. Kondrat '98, are the two students we are in awe of, can you imagine the work they had to have done to accomplish this feat? Awesome! MEALS ON WHEELS

Jeff Steele, who coordinates our wonderful Meals-On-Wheels program for the Social Service League, tells me she urgently needs volunteer drivers to deliver meals. One driver delivers to about 13 homes between 11 a.m. and noon and only needs to volunteer one hour a month! I'll bet there are many of us who could spend one hour a month helping our neighbors, and that feeling of pride that will come at the end is really quite nice, indeed! Call the Social Service League at 383-0771 for more information.

FREE PROGRAM FOR STEP PARENTS

Lynne Layman and Margie Steele, the family service directors of the Social Service League, tell me that they are putting on a free program called, "Step-parenting: How to Live With Other People's Children," Thursday, Oct. 16, at the First Parish House. This will be a great time to get answers to the many difficult questions arising in a step-parenting relationship. The Social Service League's social worker, Pat Carleton, and author Judy Osborne will be there to offer guidance.

THEATER EVENING WAS SUPER

Former Cohasset students John Kornet and his wife Rebecca, Heather Davenport, Chad Blaine and Beth Perry went into Cambridge to see John Kuntz's show "Freaks," - they met after the show and talked about old times, and had a wonderful evening, indeed! "Freaks" has been extended for three weeks through Oct. 18, with Friday and Saturday performances at 8 p.m.

A red flag

Sometimes we wonder if state highway engineers drive. We do know they spend a lot of time designing roads and intersections but in some cases common sense seems to be lacking.

This is evidenced by the "new" intersection of Beechwood and Route 3A. With widening and improved sight lines, it's supposed to be safer than before. But that hasn't happened.

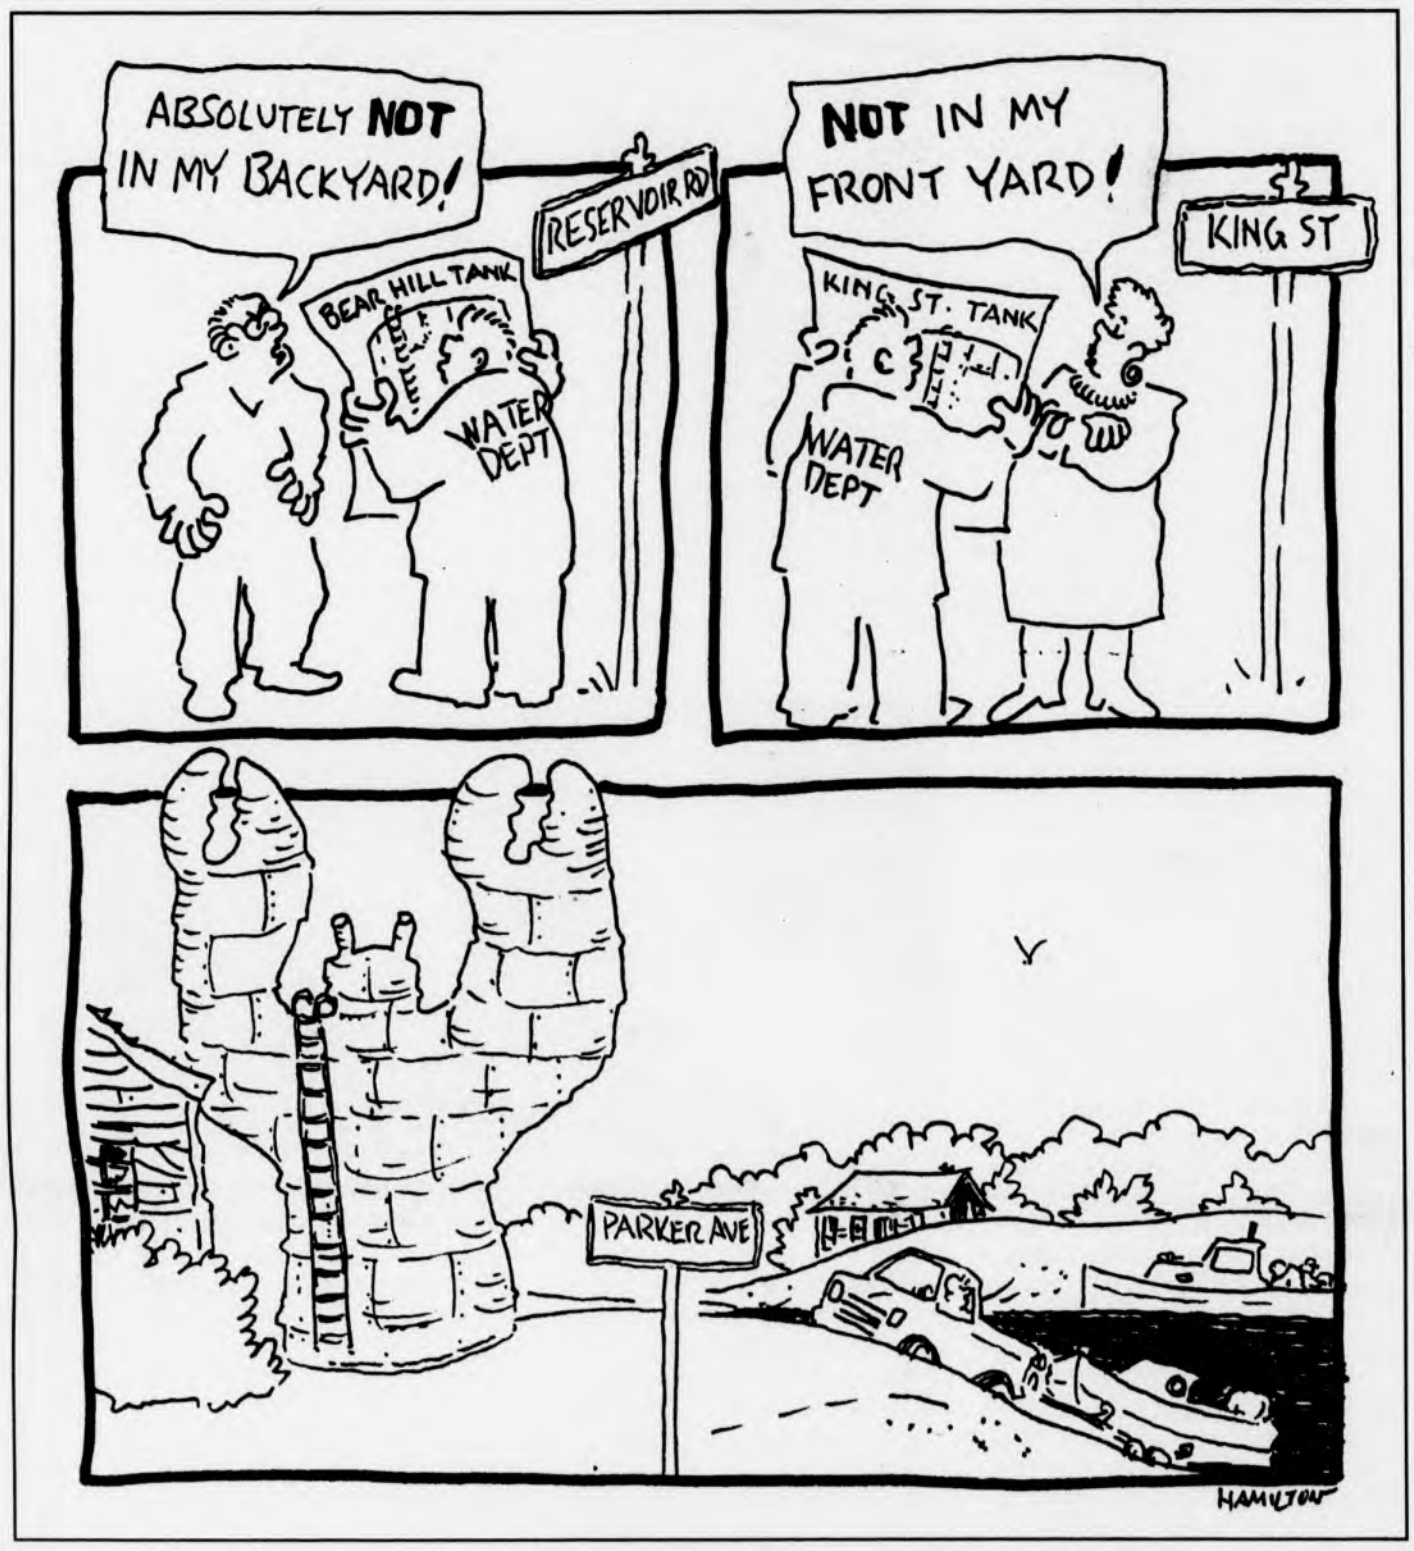
The lack of designated left-turning lanes from Route 3A onto Beechwood Street in both directions has created a mini-speedway. With four "travel" lanes, cars heading north toward Hingham are passing in the inside lane and trying to out run one another before the highway quickly narrows back to two lanes.

Cohasset police have called the state to say the intersection needs some improvement. The speed limit is 35 m.p.h. but average speed there now is 43 at peak times. Think about it, that means half the cars are going in excess of 43 m.p.h. and that's in traffic!

Earlier this week, Cohasset police stopped 17 cars for moving violations in the area in just and hour and a half. Officer Richard Yocum told us last week that while he was monitoring the intersection on a recent Sunday, he stopped eight or nine cars for speeding or failure to stop at the light. Police say there have been five accidents there since the intersection was finished. Two or more cars go right through the red light on Route 3A almost every time it changes.

Our local police cannot work that intersection full time. All of us should be more responsible drivers. That means stopping for red lights and not exceeding the speed limit.

But we also rely on traffic engineers to use their abilities to design a safe roadway. In this case, they have apparently goofed and should get back out here and make some adjustments. Clearly marked left turn lanes would seem like a good place to start.



Five recent accidents there should send up a red flag to town officials that they should lobby the state to take immediate corrective action.

John Carlisle, director of public affairs for the state highway department, said the design is based on volume. He said designers felt the left-turn lane would impede through traffic and make the intersection more dangerous.

"But we are always willing to listen to towns and citizens," he said.

Anyone interested in registering their concerns, should contact the District 5 office at 508-824-6633.

Priceless jewel or worthless junk?

To the Editor:

Is the former Cohasset Colonials showroom (the Hagerty Building) so worthless that it should be demolished or sold for a song for removal across the street?

Or is it so incredibly valuable that it can't be leased to a citizens' group without exhaustive examination of the proponents' qualifications, fund-raising plans, programs, building layout, specifications for future staff and so on? (The citizens' group sought to establish a Learning Laboratory for Marine Biology and Genetic Research as a community resource for aspiring students. They didn't seek to establish something harmful to the town)!

If it's worthless enough to demolish or move for a pittance, why the determined resistance against leasing it to a citizens group for a constructive purpose? After all, the taxpayers aren't being hit. If the lab succeeds, townspeople would point to it with pride to visiting firemen as one of the many unique qualities of the town. If it doesn't succeed, the town would be no worse off and could then do what it wants with the building.

Removing the building to gain parking spaces for users of the ramp makes no sense because there is no lack of parking spaces for Cohasset residents, even on summer weekends. Because the lab would be closed during periods of peak parking demand, it would in no way disadvantage boaters! If we don't need the parking spaces gained by removing the building, then the space gained is essentially worthless. So the building and the land beneath it seem to have no great value to the town.

But if it's worthless, why do the selectmen and various critics act as if the lab proponents are after the crown jewels? Why is so much passion generated by opponents who have nothing to lose from the lab? Whose pocketbooks won't be affected? Who won't be prevented from launching their boats?

The Concerned Taxpayers group profess to want the best value in all things for the town. To be consistent, they should support a plan to turn an otherwise worthless building into a community asset at no cost to the taxpayers. Demolishing the building to increase the number of unused parking spaces is a poor bargain for the town, in comparison with the potential of the lab. It may be junk, but it could be a jewel!

Arduous journey ahead as town seeks new superintendent

By Jason Bouffard
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's School Committee faces no easy task when it seeks to hire a replacement for retiring Superintendent Stephen Hart.

Hart will step down at the end of the school year.

The true magnitude of the task was brought to light by a representative of the Massachusetts Association of School Committees, Jim Hardy, during last Thursday night's school committee meeting.

In a detailed explanation of the process of recruiting a new school superintendent, Hardy cautioned school committee members not to take the task lightly. He advised the committee to cover the details before hand, from developing an appropriate contract to deciding who will provide water for candidates during interviews.

"It's important to be as proactive as possible," he said.

Hardy explained the committee's options for seeking candidates for the position, namely, to search for a replacement within the school district, beyond the district, or use a combination of the two. He advocated the internal search, stating that candidates within the school system should be considered for the position first.

"By conducting an internal search, you send a message throughout the school district that you value your staff," Hardy said.

However, Hardy noted that the committee should not be afraid to search beyond their own staff if a suitable candidate is not available. External searches open the field to a wider range, and possibly better qualified, list of applicants. However, higher advertising expenses are incurred when a committee must place employment ads instead of circulating district-wide postings.

The hiring committee, which may include the school committee, school administrative and teaching staff, parents and students, should clearly define the skills and work experience they will require in a candidate. Issues such as education level and teaching experience are a few of the qualifying factors the committee will need to weigh before starting a search.

"By conducting an internal search, you send a message throughout the school district that you value your staff."
– JIM HARDY OF THE MASS. ASSOC. OF SCHOOL COMMITTEES.

Contractual arrangements should be prepared in advance to some extent, as well.

"Be ready for a candidate to accept the position once it has been offered," Hardy advised.

Hardy also spoke of the value of site visits, in which a candidate spends time in the hiring party's schools. Not only does the experience provide the hiring committee a chance to better assess the candidate's strengths and weaknesses, but it also gives the candidate an opportunity to get acquainted with the school district, Hardy said.

While candidates will try to impress the interviewers, the reverse must also be true.

"Remember that the search is a bilateral process. It's a selling process," Hardy said.

Hiring committees should also be willing to visit the candidate's current school district. This practice will give interviewers a chance to talk to an applicant's colleagues and sometimes see the applicant in action first hand.

After a vigorous selection process, interviewers should expect to spend four nights of five-hour interview sessions. This lengthy process should be approached with the same attention to planning as all other facets of the recruiting process, according to Hardy. Interviews should be well advertised to give interested parties a chance to clear their calendars. The committee should decide to what extent to involve staff members, parents and students in the actual interviews. Questions and agendas should be drawn up ahead of time.

Hardy also pointed out that budgetary issues should not be neglected. The hiring committee must answer questions such as: How much can we afford to spend on advertising? Will finalists be reimbursed for the travel and lodging costs of a site visit? What will the community reaction be to reimbursing relocation expenses? Can we afford a consultant to assist in the hiring process?

While the school committee now has a great deal to digest, they do not have much time to respond. Hardy recommended allotting seven months to complete the recruiting process. If the school committee plans to have a new superintendent in place by July, they must begin to take action by January.

The school committee will discuss Hardy's suggestions at their next meeting.

Teens line up for Appalachia Service Project

There were more than 75 teenagers in attendance at the Sept. 21 Cohasset Appalachia Service Project 1998 registration meeting. The limit set in the past has been 48. To date, 62 registration forms have already been turned in.

As one of the Cohasset High School teachers remarked, "That's a third of the high school population! Doesn't that say something great about our teenagers - that doing something to help others is so popular?"

The adult leadership of the project has begun pondering the possibility of expanding the program to include all those registered by Nov. 1. One of the greatest challenges will be finding enough adult advisors to go on the trip. Two adults are needed for every five teenagers. They ask that anyone (particularly adults) interested in joining them, please call the Rev. Gary Ritts at 383-0345 for an application form! Forms are currently available at three churches: St. Anthony's, St. Stephen's and 2nd Congregational; and at Cohasset High School's business office.

Another occurrence of great pride is the fact that two other area ASP projects have been spun off. From volunteers who have traveled with Cohasset's group, a group at Pembroke's St. Thecla's Church is being organized under the leadership of Brian Cunningham. Likewise there are plans to begin a project sponsored by Marshfield's First Congregational Church.

With these increasing numbers, the Cohasset ASP requests everyone's prayers and assistance in their upcoming financial ventures:

Fall ASP fund-raisers will include the following:

On the Common selling Appalachia products at the Chamber's Harvest Fair, Thursday, Oct. 9, from 3 to 7 p.m.;

Taking orders early in November for our Thanksgiving pies and breads;

Sharing in the proceeds of the Chamber's Annual Auction, Saturday, Nov. 22;

Sponsoring several craft tables and Santa Claus at the Village Fair, Saturday, Dec. 6.

Cohasset school technology plan is racing against time

By Margo Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

The technology race has a special meaning in Cohasset.

In just about two weeks at Special Town Meeting, the public will be asked to approve $107,000 in technology spending, primarily to build a wire network inside Deer Hill and the Middle/Senior high schools (a $20,000 portion set aside for professional development).

The glitch is, the school technology plan is not yet ready for town officials to review.

Moreover, the final plan is not going to be ready in time for the Special Town Meeting Oct. 27.

Instead, the voters will be acting on a draft of an education grant proposal, according to technology coordinator Dr. Joseph Angelo.

Angelo said the so-called plan the town meeting will see actually is a revision of the papers submitted last June to maintain the school department's eligibility for about $36,000 in state funds. The first draft is on file at the superintendent's office.

Technically, that plan is not quite ready, either, though luckily, the school department has until June 1999 to file an application.

"We're racing because of the town meeting," said Angelo who this week started making the rounds of the town boards, starting with the Capital Budget Committee Wednesday. "They'll see me, but not the plan."

The technology coordinator, who authored the Cohasset Public Schools Educational Technology Plan for the Twenty First Century, said he fell behind schedule this summer when he unexpectedly was called on to supervise work on a handicap-accessible lab at the high school.

His new deadline is set for Oct. 17, but before that, he will meet with the selectmen Oct. 14.

Angelo said, with or without a plan, the Phase I expenditure for wiring, which he compared to building a road, is valid.

"There is no question in my mind," he said. "You have got to start with wire."

The other part of Phase I is for teacher training, a cost which school board member Ralph Kidder defended as an investment in employees.

Kidder also upheld the school grant plan which he said "purposely" left key questions about the computer platforms open and was similarly "purposely vague" in places with an eye to keeping options alive.

Overall, Kidder said, the final Cohasset plan will call for a fiber optic connection linking all town offices and the schools in a wide area network. The WAN will then be combined with local area networks, built of copper wire, inside each school, at a final cost of $1.3 million for at least four workstations in each classroom to be phased in over 5 years, ending in the year 2002.

A town-wide technology board and the cable operator MediaOne are also working on the logistics.

As far as the school plan, Kidder indicated the mission statement and the basic strategy to use the technology to support academics would stay the same as described in the grant.

"We think it's critically important that the curriculum drive the technology," Kidder said, echoing a theme also sounded by schools superintendent Stephen Hart.

Although the written plan is not yet specific about the details, in a interview Angelo did give several examples of the ways that students and teachers could employ the Internet to enrich learning. In one example, he described how file transfer technology could be used to share a science project about seashore erosion with students in Oregon and broaden understanding of the scope of the environmental problems.

Net Day cancelled by school board

Net Day has been cancelled until further notice on advice from a consulting firm.

According to school board member Ralph Kidder, the decision to put the event on hold was adopted by the technology sub-committee at its October 1 meeting and was due to reports about mixed

, which is highlighted by parent, business and community volunteers

Greenbush hearing announced

Representative Joseph C. Sullivan, D-Braintree, chairman of the Joint Committee on Transportation and Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, ranking minority member of the Committee announced that the Committee is having a public hearing on the Greenbush segment of the Old Colony Rail Restoration Project. Senator Hedlund noted that "as this project moves forward, it is imperative that the legislature hold the MBTA accountable in addressing the concerns of impacted communities."

Chairman Sullivan stated "it is essential that the public fully understands the impacts proposed rail service will have on the communities along the Greenbush corridor."

The Committee will hold a hearing on Thursday, Oct. 23 at 6 p.m. at the Barnes Auditorium in Hingham Town Hall. Prior to the hearing, members of the Committee will be joined by local officials in a "walking tour" of some sections of the rail line at 5 p.m.

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, and Senator Hedlund strongly urged Chairman Sullivan to conduct a hearing in the Greenbush corridor.

"It is essential that we continually monitor the progress of the project and keep the public and the legislature involved," Hedlund added.

And we'll also work hard to keep you informed about changes coming to the electric-utility industry! Here are some highlights of what's coming!

Hedlund town hall office hours

State Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and/or members of his staff will be at the Cohasset Town Hall on Highland Ave. for office hours the third Thursday of each month. Oct. 16 from 10-11 a.m. state Senator and/or his staff will be available to meet and/or assist residents.

In addition, Senator Hedlund's district office, located at 66 Sea St. in Weymouth, 340-9866 will be open Monday through Friday, 8:30-4:30.

"The whole purpose of my district office is to meet with and serve my constituents in a more accessible and convenient setting" Hedlund said. "It means a lot to me to be able to talk with constituents face to face. Together we can get a lot done."

Cutler to go after Murray's Statehouse seat

Josh Cutler

elected, he won't need a tour of the Statehouse.

"I wrote laws, I worked on committees," said Cutler, who worked in the past as an aide for state Sen. Mark C. Montigny, D-New Bedford, and state Rep. Eric T. Turkington, D-Falmouth.

A key issue for Cutler is the environment. He backs expansion of the bottle bill which he describes as a "tremendously successful program" and would work hard to preserve open space. Having worked with Turkington, Cutler is familiar with the land bank programs enacted on Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket. Land banks, which he supports at the local level, assess a fee on the transfer of real estate with the money going into a fund to enable the town to buy or maintain open space.

On Greenbush line of the Old Colony, Cutler would work "to get the best train possible."

"I think the train would be good for the South Shore," he said with a caution that the environmental and safety issues surrounding Greenbush must be worked out. Cutler said he would advocate for the short tunnel under Hingham Square which is one of several alternatives studied by the MBTA.

He praised incumbent Republican state Sen. Robert Hedlund's efforts to improve the commuter boat service from Hingham. Cutler said he would also work to get money through the Open Space Bond Bill for commuter boat improvements. He also supports expanded parking at the T station in Braintree as part of a multi-modal solution to the area's transportation problems.

If elected, Cutler promises to be on top of the Education Reform Act, now in its fourth year. He noted that towns like Hingham, Hull and Cohasset which send students to the South Shore Charter School in Hull will not be reimbursed for the students' "tuition" in the future. He said it is important to prepare for that.

Cutler would also strive to be "out in front of issues" such as the huge increase in water rates for Hingham, Hull and north Cohasset to pay for the new Mass-American water treatment plant in Hingham. After citizen uproar, the rates are being reviewed by the Department of Public Utilities.

"You can't put the toothpaste back in the tube," Cutler said. "I believe in getting out in front of the issue before it's too late to do something."

Cutler said he will support the tax roll-back initiative being sponsored by Citizens for Limited taxation and if elected, would work to see that any resulting cuts did not hurt average citizens. (CLT is conducting a petition drive to get the roll-back question on next year's state election ballot. If successful, taxes would be rolled back from 5.95 percent to 5 percent over a three-year period).

He also supports campaign finance reform and an assault weapons ban.

Cutler, who coaches youth baseball in Hull, grew up in Duxbury and Hingham. He is the son of local businesswoman Suzanne Cutler of Hingham and former Mariner newspaper publisher David Cutler of Norwell. A graduate of Skidmore college with a degree in political science, Cutler is a third-year night student at Suffolk University Law School. He's also an account executive with a Boston public relations firm.

Over the years, Cutler served as an intern in Washington, D.C. for former Congressman Gerry Studds, D-Cohasset and worked for Sen. Mark Roosevelt's 1994 campaign for governor. And last year, Cutler took a leave of absence from his job to work as a field coordinator for Phil Johnston, who sought the Democratic Party nomination to run for Studds' 10th Congressional District seat.

Cutler says politics are in his blood.

"My mother had me holding Kennedy signs when I was nine," he said.

Cutler is planning a campaign kick-off event at 7:30 p.m., Nov. 7 at the Sons of Italy Hall on Route 3A in Hingham. Phil Johnston will be the featured guest.

Garrett Hunt of Hingham, a Plymouth County prosecutor, has also thrown his hat into the ring for the Democratic Party nomination for the Third Plymouth District seat.

Rep. Murray, 72, says she welcomes the competition.

"People having the opportunity to run — that's what this country is all about," she said.

Murray , who has served the district for 22 years, said she will seek re-election.

"Does somebody think I'm not?" said Murray, who let it be known she has substantial support.

"I'm very grateful and in awe of the 92 percent of the votes cast which I received last year," she said.

Murray faced last-minute competition last year when Nancy Buckley of Hingham launched a write-in campaign. But this is the first time in ten years, that Murray will be challenged by a Democratic Party candidate.

The Kimball's Point Court Martial and Cohasset

By David Wadsworth
HISTORICAL SOCIETY CURATOR

Coming to light recently, courtesy of Jim Fahey of the archives of the museum ship U.S.S. Salem, are documents about a little-known 1896 Naval Brigade Court Martial case involving a number of Brigade troops assigned to duty aboard U.S.S. Minnesota, located at Boston, who participated in an encampment at the Cohasset shore, with consequent unfortunate results both for themselves and for some Cohasset residents.

As part of a military exercise, the second and seventh Brigade Divisions, under Lieutenant J.H. Dillaway, were assigned to an encampment expedition at Cohasset's Kimball's Point, in the uplands area just north of Sandy Beach, at the shore, near the second Pleasant Beach House known as Kimball's Hotel. During the course of the encampment, a number of troops engaged in acts of misconduct that led to a Court Martial held in Boston in late July, 1896.

Location of the encampment at the Cohasset shore was chosen by arrangement with the Kimball's, whose land and hotel were located between the beach and the "causeway" going west toward the junction of Jerusalem Road.

A summary of the findings of the Court Martial shows that, while the site of the encampment was considered excellent, discipline of the troops appeared close to non-existent.

That evening, despite instructions from the commanding officer, that none were to leave the camp without permission, two groups departed from the encampment without receiving permission.

About 35 of the total of 80 men later admitted having been absent without permission. One group is called "The Cohasset Party," the other the "Nantasket Party."

The "Nantasket Party" proved the more troublesome, walking along Jerusalem Road to the electric railway at Strait's Pond, then riding to an establishment called the "Bicycle Inn" at Nantasket, where they remained some time, then walking along the board walk to a saloon where they stayed until it closed.

In the first group were boatswains Mates Jones and Jackson of the second division, and the group marched in "mock military formation" to Cohasset center under the "command" of their own boatswains, Mate Jones. Proceedings indicate it was felt that it was his restraining influence that minimized the property damage done along the way by this group, the only real damage done being the removal of a large sign from Frank Browne's Drug Store at the corner of Brook and Elm Streets, as well as the unhinging and throwing of a blind from a residence, and the theft of a street sign that was taken back to the camp. Most of this fairly quiet group were back in camp by 1 a.m., some having been sent to the guard house, though some had gone on to "the messing (eating) place at Stony Beach," where they were at the time the fire broke out.

The "Nantasket Party" proved the more troublesome, walking along Jerusalem Road to the electric railway at Strait's Pond, then riding to an establishment called the "Bicycle Inn" at Nantasket, where they remained some time, then walking along the board walk to a saloon where they stayed until it closed.

Returning, they removed and destroyed a window blind from a livery stable, and back in Cohasset, stole several wicker chairs from the piazza of the Black Rock House and destroyed them. The group then loitered at the hotel, and the noise they made "disturbed the inmates." Proceeding east along Jerusalem Road they stole a table from Mr. Coolidge's piazza which they carried to Matthew Luce's boathouse (at Sherbrookes' beach). Leaving the table at the boathouse, they then broke a street electric light fixture and made "a good deal of noise." Also taken from an unknown site were 35 feet of garden hose, also left at the boathouse. Leaving behind two stolen street signs at the boathouse, some of the party proceeded toward the Kimball's Point encampment.

At about 1:30 to 1:45 a.m., an old shipwreck on the shore near Luce's boathouse, identified as the "Lewis," was set on fire. It was never known who set the blaze, since the Brigade men going to Nantasket had been accompanied by a group of "hooligans" who had accompanied them, but the forces at the military encampment responded with alacrity, under the command of Ensign Ley.

Most of the men at the camp went, and "it is the testimony of several of the town's people that the Brigade men worked heroically to save the ship." Several Brigade men were injured fighting the fire, more prostrated by smoke, and a temporary hospital was set up at the cottage of Mrs. John Roach, at the west end of the causeway.

Assistant surgeon Abbe of the Brigade was overwhelmed by the number of injured and overcome men and called for assistance from Dr. Oliver H. Howe, prominent Cohasset general practitioner. The following day the Cohasset sailing yacht Gracie (belonging to Edward Everett Tower) took the injured men back to the U.S.S. Minnesota. Despite efforts, the shipwrecked Lewis was totally destroyed. Later it was alleged that, of the Brigade force, a Seaman Second Class Shattuck, insulted Mrs. Atwood while he was obtaining hot water for the surgeon, but no proof of the alleged insult was presented.

Following the ensuing Court Martial, Seamen Gowdy, Shattuck, Monroe and Mansfield of the Brigade were discharged "for the good of the service." Seamen Bracy and Hichborn were discharged "with the reenlistment clause erased," and Seaman Johnson was given a dishonorable discharge. As well, Boatswains Mates Jones and Jackson were reduced "to the ranks" by the Headquarters of the Naval Brigade, Massachusetts Volunteer Militia, Boston, with subsequent approval by endorsement of the Adjutant General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, given July 27, 1896.

Thus ended the Naval Brigade's Kimball's Point encampment and Court Martial, a heretofore little-known episode among the more obscure by-ways of Cohasset's history.

Winless Lady Skippers refuse to give up

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

If it weren't for bad luck, it would seem that the CHS girls' soccer team would have no luck at all.

After finally getting all of their players back from an assortment of injuries, the Lady Skippers played well enough to win their first game of the year Tuesday afternoon against Carver, but still fell to defeat 2-1.

"My heart just breaks for these kids," said fourth year head coach Maureen O'Day-Clark. "They try so hard, but we just can't seem to get the big goal when we need it."

The Carver game was a prime example of that problem, said O'Day-Clark.

"We just couldn't get a break," she said. "We were right there so many times, but we just couldn't put the ball in the net."

The team has now fallen to 0-12 and are at the bottom of the South Shore League.

Even though things have not gone to plan, O'Day-Clark said that her team has by no means given up the ship quite yet.

"If you looked at these girls there is no way that you could tell we were winless," said O'Day-Clark. "Everyone has their head held high and their spirit is way up in the sky.

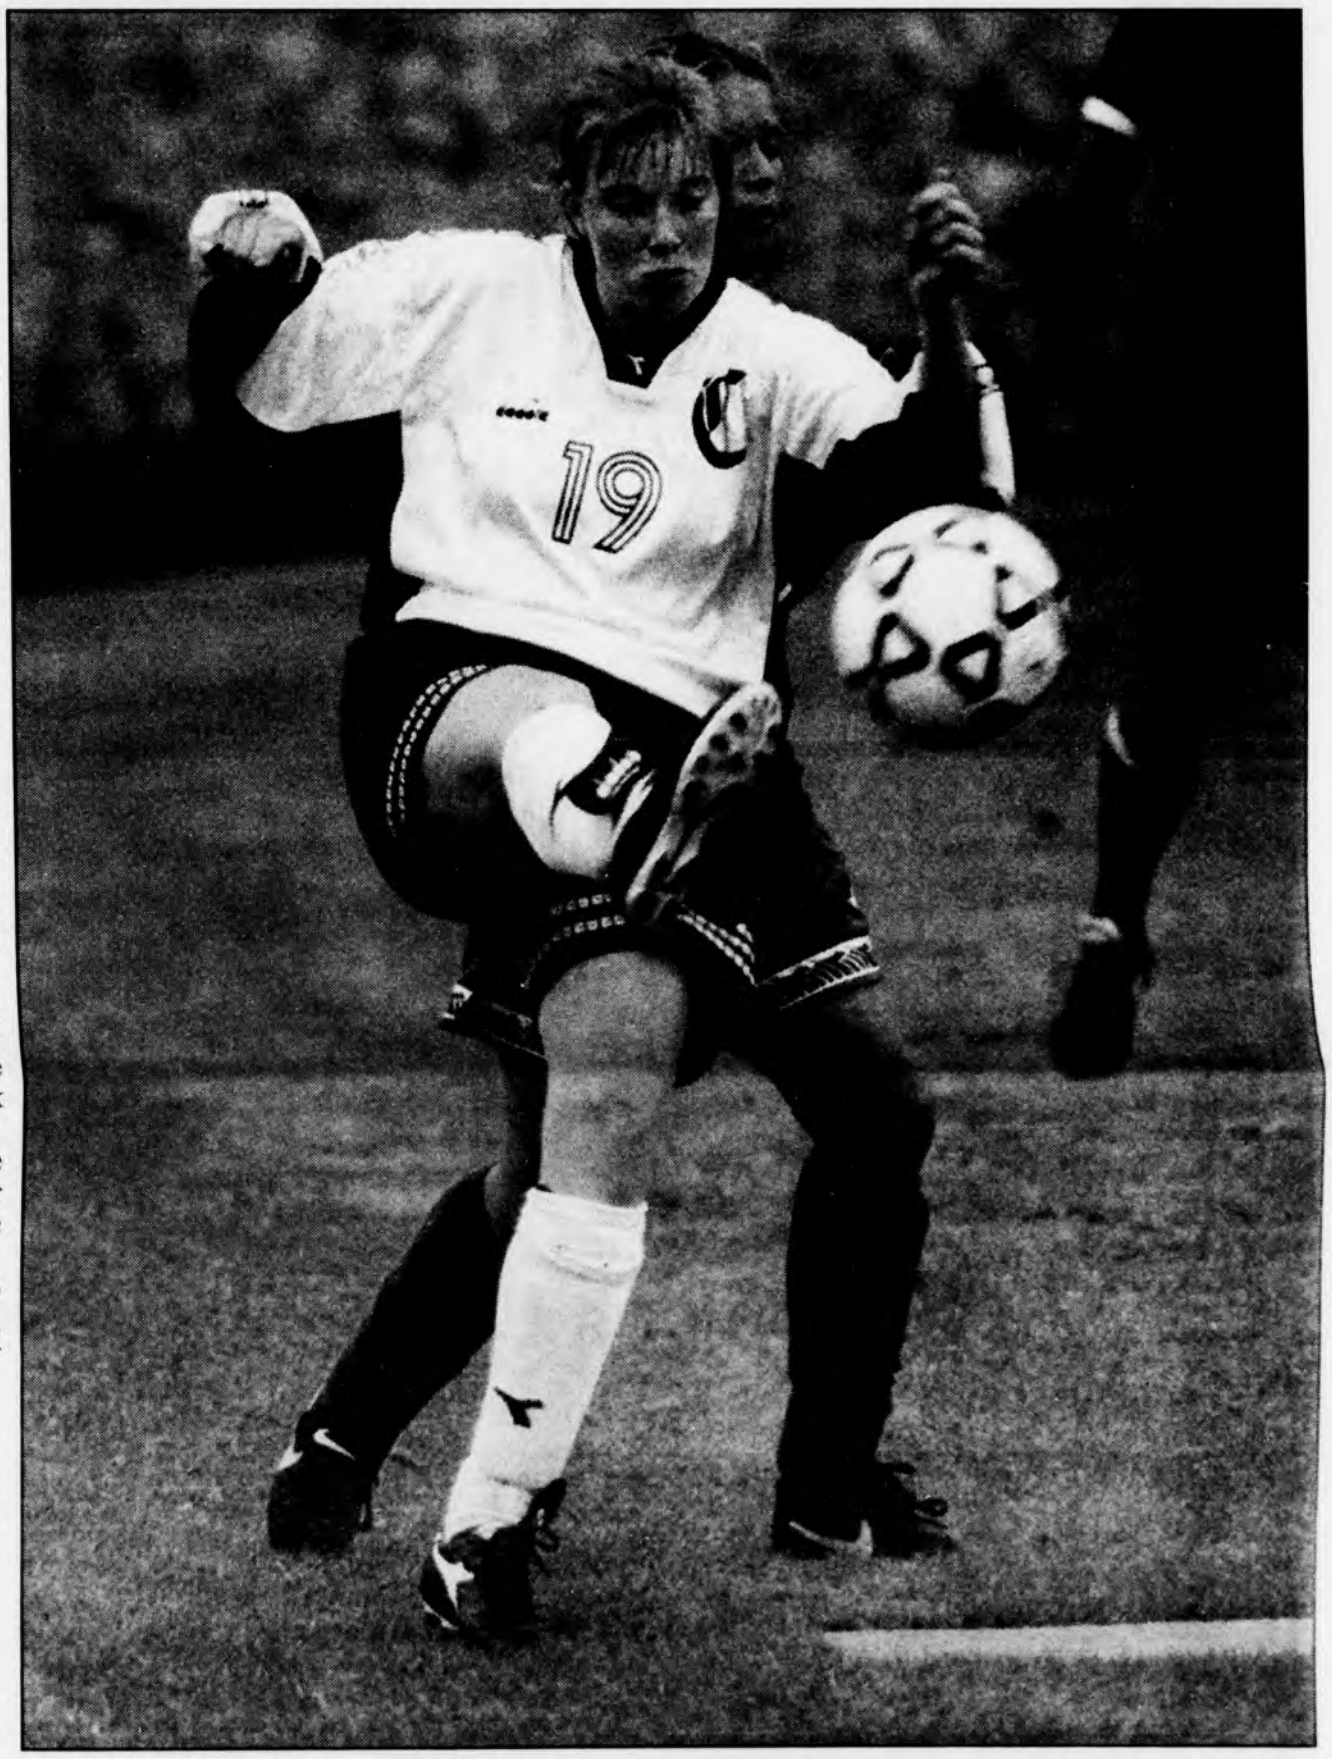
"Nobody is pointing any fngers at anyone else or given up," she continued. "The best thing about this season is the way that they have stuck together and supported each other both on and off the field."

She credited her co-captains, defenders Ali Kinchla and Hannah Bregan with helping to keep the team together this season.

"They've played hard and given the team some solid leadership," said O'Day of the duo.

Bregan scored the lone goal for Cohasset in the Carver loss.

With only the two seniors and a handful of juniors on the team, this season has been a major opportuntiy for the underclassmen to step forward and gain some valuable experience on the varsity level.



The play of those younger booters has given the coach hope for some more wins over the next few seasons.

"Sarah Motley (a freshman) has looked good up on the front line and put some pressure on the opposing goaltender," said O'Day Clark. "(Sophomore) Maura Duffy has also played well on defense.

"Overall, I'd have to say we are a true team," she added. "We play together and since we don't have a true superstar, we have to work that much harder as a team.

"These kids been great," she added. "I can't think of another group that deserves a win more than this team."

They will get the chance to gain that win on Wednesday, when they travel to Abington for a 6:30 p.m. game.

Injury bug continues to bite CHS gridmen

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Skippers lost their third consecutive game last Saturday, falling to the Norton Lancers 29-16. On the strength of two Marcus Bennett touchdown runs, the Lancers mauled the visiting Skippers in the first half, scoring 21 points.

Despite a season-best game from tailback Raheem "The Dream" Shepard and a gritty effort by the patchwork offensive line, Cohasset couldn't come all the way back in the second half.

Cohasset fell behind from the kickoff, when they allowed the ball to be taken to the 45-yard line. However, the defense made a stand, largely due to sophomore "Notorious" James Edgeston's quarterback sack. Edgeston was making his first varsity start, but is now entrenched at the noseguard position.

Former noseguard Alex "Big Daddy" Russell has been moved over to defensive tackle. Edgeston's sack forced a punt and gave the Skippers good field position.

However, the offense sputtered and died and were forced to punt as well. Bennett carried in from the 15-yard line to cap the Norton drive and the boys in blue were down early.

As usual, the first quarter proved to be far and away the most damaging for the Skippers. The Lancers pushed across two TD's and knocked senior captain fullback Andy "Hammer" Hamilton out of the game, along with John "Kase Closed" Kasameyer and Luke "Cobra" Caldwell, who were felled on the same play.

Kasameyer occupied a starting guard position and Caldwell played both guard and linebacker.

Juniors Greg "Stork" Parkinson and Jim "Shamrock" O'Sullivan were pressed into duty along the offensive line.

The first Cohasset touchdown came early in the second half. Coming out fired up, the Skippers' offense began to move.

Behind an unwavering offensive line, Pat "Hollywood" Hurley slung bullets to his receivers who gathered them in. Shepard found holes and ran for daylight and Cohasset ate up the yardage.

Finally, Hollywood fired to Jamie "Snake" Buick for the touchdown.

Later, Shepard bounced a run outside and took it in for an additional six. The Skippers converted on both touchdowns.

Despite the high point total for Norton, Cohasset's defense actually played well. Edgeston showed ability in his debut and Justin "Juggernaut" Golden continued his outstanding play at roving linebacker.

John-Paul Laugelle stepped up his play at defensive tackle and played his best game of the year thus far. Shepard and sophomore Joe Pergola anchored the corners, while Hollywood held down the safety position.

The loss of Hamilton, Kasameyer and Caldwell adds to the growing roster of wounded Skippers. All three are sidelined for at least this Thursday's game against Rockland, possibly longer.

Running back and defensive back Jamie DeMichele has been out since the first scrimmage and will sit for the rest of the year with a broken collarbone.

Linebacker Adam "Sasquatch" Sasso is nursing an injured ankle, signal caller Hurley is banged up with an injured back, and Pergola suffers from an injured knee.

Both Russell and senior captain end and defensive end Buick are playing with broken hands.

At last count, the Skippers will be missing six starters for Thursday's 5 p.m. start against undefeated Rockland.

Stretch drive is in motion for state tourney

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

After a slow start, first-year coach Jeff Martell and the CHS boys soccer team are in a position to make a late run for a spot in the state soccer tourney.

Martell, who stepped in as the interim coach after Keith Clark stepped out to take over the Bridgewater State College team, said continued solid defensive play and some added offense are needed for any late-season surge to pay off in post-season play.

"We did not get off to the kind of quick start that we were looking for. But we recovered from that and have come together as of late," said Martell. "As the season goes on the team seems to be coming more together as a unit."

The squad, 5-6-1, started off the year at 0-3 and at one time was 2-5 before gaining three wins and a tie in their last five games, including an exciting 1-0 victory Tuesday against Carver.

Andy Ross scored the lone goal, with an assist going to Nate Cotter.

The team has six games left on the schedule, including important clashes against Hull. Rockland and Abington, as well as league powers Hanover and Norwell.

Besides Rockland, Hull and East Bridgewater, the Skippers also hold a win over North Quincy.

Simply stated, the more games the team can win in the next two weeks the better their chances that they will be invited to the tournament.

"Post-season play is still very possible," said Martell. "Our first goal is to get back to the .500 mark. After that, we'll just take things as they come.

"I think that we've recovered well from out poor start and really started to play a solid game. The season has been a learning experience for us all, but it is a credit to this team how they have come back and played to win."

> "The season has been a learning experience for us all, but it is a credit to this team how they have come back and played to win."
> JEFF MARTELL

Martell said the leadership of his two captains, forward Nate Cotter and sweeper Leigh Atherton, has helped shape the team.

"You couldn't ask for better captains than Nate and Leigh. They are doing all the things they are supposed to in order to make this a better team."

Mark Equi is leading the team in scoring this season, tallying 6 goals and 4 assists.

Andrew Ross and sophomore goalie Kevin DeVito have also excelled this year for the Skippers.

"Overall, it's just a matter of working hard to keep up a strong defense in front of Kevin (DeVito) and getting pressure on offense," said Martell. "We do those things and good things will happen."

The Skippers stretch drive continues on Wednesday with a home game against Abington.

Locals flip over Olympic gold medal winner

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Those of the perky, pony-tailed, athletic suit-wearing group met their leader Thursday night when U.S. Olympic gold medal winning gymnast Dominique Moceanu made an appearance at the 5-7-9 clothing store in the Braintree Mall.

Moceanu was in town for a performance of the John Hancock Tour of World Gymnastics Champions at the FleetCenter over the weekend that includes her friends from "The Magnificent Seven", the group whose stunning performance took home women's the team gold medal in the 1996 Olympics.

"It's been a hectic time," admitted Moceanu while signing pretty much anything that the seemingly endless throng of her admirers put in front of her. "The tour has been fun so far and I have been doing appearances all around the country."

Moceanu, who just turned 16 on Sept. 30, said it seems like she had been on the road every day since the victory in Atlanta over one year ago, but she was trying to keep everything "as normal as possible."

Like any good 16-year-old, one of Moceanu's next goals is to obtain that great bastion of freedom, the drivers license. She has the car, a birthday present, but has not been able to make time yet to get the license.

Decked out in a fashionably funky fedora, Moceau was truly the belle of the ball to those who stood in line for an autograph and a quick word with her.

"She's so cool," said nine-year-old Abington resident Amy Reynolds. "I can't believe I got the chace to meet her. She's famous!!!"

A trio of young ladies from the Ellis Gymnastics School in Braintree also had kind words for their pint-sized hero.

"She's a great role model," said eight-year-old Amy Caldwell.

"She worked hard and won the gold medal," added Marissa Ellis, 9.

Another aspiring gymnast, eight-year-old Kerriann Cusack, said she was very interested to know if Moceanu was going to make an effort to get on the next Olympic team.

The next summer Olympic games are scheduled for 2000, when Moceanu will be 19, a grizzled veteran by average gymnast age standards.

When asked about any future Olympic plans, Moceanu gave a coy smile, shrugged her shoulders and said "Maybe. We'll see how everything goes."

Balance in life is as important to Moceanu as it is for her on the beam. Between the gymnastic tour she's on now, her schoolwork, as much as six hours each day of training (four hours when she feels like being good to herself) and just being a teenager, she freely admits to not hving a clue as to how she fits it all in a 24-hour day.

"I really don't know how I do it sometimes," said Moceanu. "I'm dedicated to doing all of this, but there are a lot of things for me to juggle each day.

"It's something that I've chosen to do and this lifestyle has allowed me the chance to do a lot of things that I normally would not have has the opportunity to take part it. To me, all of the work is worth it."

Asked about being a role model to some young women who may only be a year or two younger than herself, Moceanu said she only "tries to do right thing."

That attitude did not go unnoticed by Julie Evans, a Cohasset mother who brought her daughter and some of her young friends to meet Moceanu.

"She (Moceanu) is what you want your daughter to be," said Evans. "She was very gracious with everyone who was there to talk with her and seems to have it all under control. Success hasn't gone to her head."

Moceanu plans to attend college and eventually move into acting or television commentating.

"I definetly want to go to college," said Moceanu, who when not out on the road attends a private school near her training camp in Houston, TX.

The daughter of a pair of Romanian gymansts, Moceanu, a member of the U.S. National gymnastics team each year since 1992, was born in Hollywood, CA, where she lived before moving to Houston to be closer to her coach, Bela Karolyi, when she was only nine.

A 1995 nominee for the Sullivan Award, given each year to the top U.S. amateur athlete, Moceanu finished ninth in the overall competition at the Atlanta games and has already had a book published on her young life, "Dominique Moceanu- An American Champion."

1996 Olympic gold medal winner Dominique Moceanu dropped in on the South Shore last week to help promote the John Hancock Gymnastic Champions tour .

Epic New England

History and culture, close to home

By Emily C. Hicks
CNC Travel Correspondent

New England is known as the "birthplace of the nation," and for good reason. History here has quite a story to tell, and allows multiple generations a retreat into the past. Tourists and history buffs alike will have their hands full traveling through the six states.

Massachusetts is the hub of history, from Plymouth Rock to Lexington and Concord. Patriotism abounds through much of the state. Many holidays are occasions for reenactments of past conflicts and wars, and are quite popular for travelers and residents of all ages.

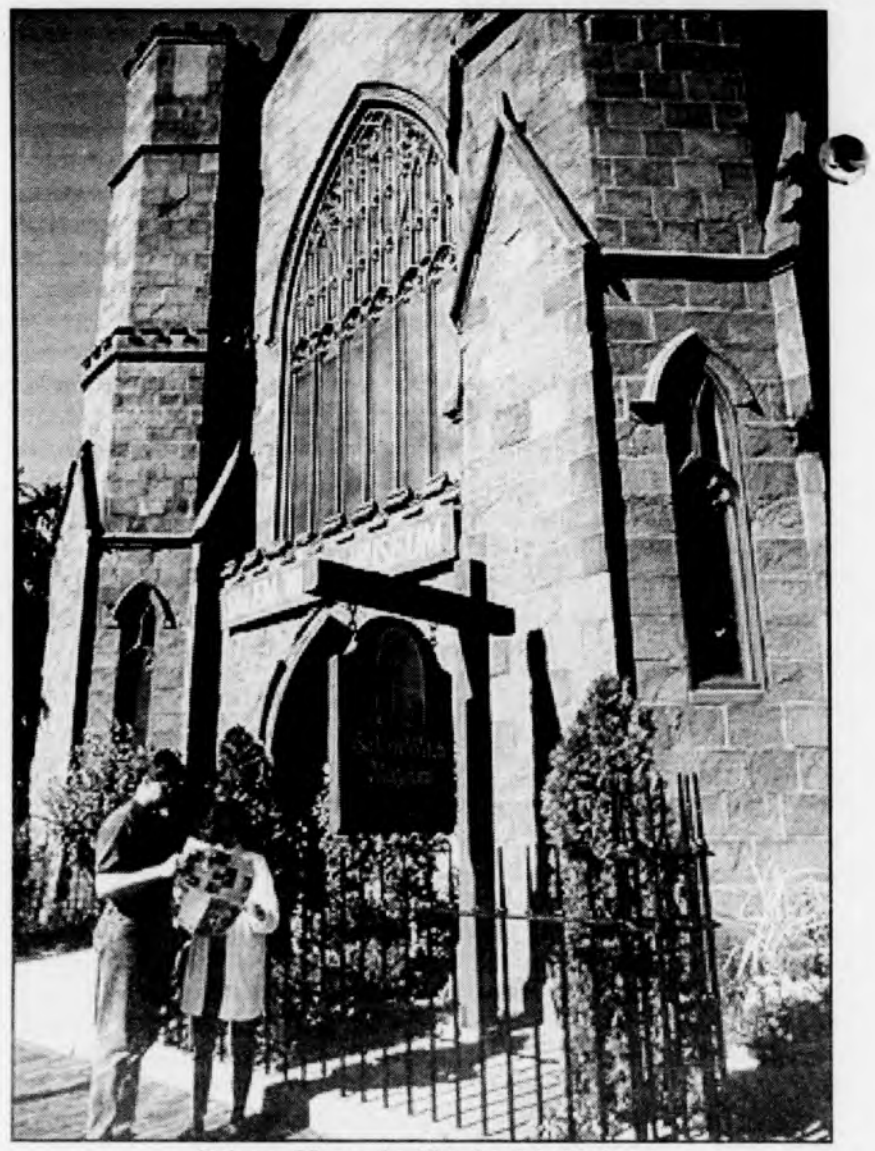
Rich with history, Boston is a popular destination for vacations and day trips. The Boston Common is a favorite gathering spot. Sunbathers, roller-bladers, joggers and business associates meet in the park, possibly unaware of its history. Located between Beacon and Tremont streets in downtown, this year-long activities center is the oldest park in the United States. Nearby, Faneuil Hall receives just as much attention. Built in 1742, this marketplace and meeting area became a focal point of discussion and protest against the British government during the Colonial era. Historical talks are held daily in what has become known as the "Cradle of Liberty."

On Congress Street see the Boston Tea Party Ship and Museum, which annually documents the December 16, 1773 protest where a group of colonists dressed as Indian natives stormed a British ship carrying tea. They dumped the tea into Boston Harbor because they objected to high taxes placed on the tea by the Crown. This replica of the original ship houses a museum detailing a history of the events leading up to the Tea Party.

Another popular spot for field trips and patriotic celebrations is the Charlestown Navy Yard. Visitors to Charlestown catch glimpses of the naval history of Boston; the site was actively used by the U.S. Navy from 1800 to 1974. It includes a museum detailing the history of the USS Constitution, better known as "Old Ironsides," which is the world's oldest warship still afloat. Nearby in the picturesque heart of Charlestown is the Bunker Hill Monument. It marks the site of the Bunker Hill skirmish, one of the first battles of the Revolutionary War, which took place on June 17, 1775.

Other historic Massachusetts attractions include: the New England Holocaust Memorial, which commemorates the millions of lives lost in Nazi concentration camps during World War II; the Old North Church, built in 1723, which is Boston's oldest church and was made famous during the Revolution when lanterns were hung ("one if by land, two if by sea") to warn of the approach of British troops; the Paul Revere House, built in 1680; the site of the nation's first public school, which was built in 1635 and is marked by the Franklin Statue; Copley Square's Trinity Church; Harvard University, America's first university; Mount Auburn Cemetery, where many historical figures rest; the John F. Kennedy Library, and the National Historic Site of John F. Kennedy's birthplace in Brookline.

Travelers visiting Maine also have a wealth of history from which to choose.



The Maine Maritime Museum in Bath has stood strong from the beginning of the Civil War to the turn of the century. One of the nation's most important seaports and ship-building cities, Bath continues the maritime tradition. Similarly, the Sailor's Memorial Museum and Grindle Point Lighthouse in Isleboro offer exhibits on local fishing life and artifacts; the lighthouse was built in 1850. Luther Little and the Vesper are two wrecks that foundered along the banks of the Sheepscot River in 1932; both were four-masted schooners built during World War I and were used as cargo ships.

Caratunk Falls is a beautiful natural wonder, home to an amazing historic find: Indian relics and petroglyphs that date back as far as 9000 years ago.

Along the same lines, the Indian Burial Ground in Windham marks the presence of Native Americans, beginning centuries before the arrival of colonists from Europe; the burial ground is an example of a now-vanished culture.

Connecticut finds a wealth of other famous historical sites. Along the area of the Mystic Seaport, the Mystic River Historical Society Museum is a community organization that works to preserve and promote the historical traditions of the greater Mystic area. Visitors to the museum can see two sites, the Portersville Academy, which was built in 1839 and contains a recreated 1840s school room, and the William A. Downes Archives Building, which contains growing collections of artifacts, printed material, maps and photographs. Among the many other popular attractions are the Nathan Hale Schoolhouse, a classroom built in 1774 where Connecticut's state hero was taught and worked before he enlisted in the Continental Army, and the 1833 Robert Mills U.S. Custom House, which remains the nation's oldest operating custom house designed by America's first federal architect. Its front doors are made from planks from the USS Constitution.

For more information on the countless historic attractions and districts of New England, call the Massachusetts Department of Tourism, the Convention and Visitors Bureau, or visit a comprehensive World Wide Web site at http://www.visitnewengland.com.

End of the world, American style

Natural wonders, lively arts abound in the Florida Keys

By Emily C. Hicks
CNC Travel Correspondent

Most people know the Florida Keys as a great getaway, where every address has its own mile marker. It is unique, calm and serene – the perfect setting in which to recharge your batteries and rejuvenate your spirits.

The Keys, however, are much more than peace and quiet. They are palm-lined streets, Victorian homes and unspoiled natural wonders. There is, quite simply, no place like it.

America's most dazzling underwater parks and reefs wait to be seen in Key Largo, the first key. From John Pennekamp State Park, the nation's first, and the National Marine Sanctuary, to the crystal clear waters of Molasses Reef and the underwater caves of the French Reef, divers flock to this key. With outstretched arms seemingly welcoming scuba enthusiasts, the submerged Statue of Christ of the Abyss is a Key Largo icon. An array of activities awaits; dive operators and glass-bottom boats allow an opportunity to experience the area's beauty. Adjacent to one of the parks is the nation's first underwater hotel. Many like to experience a bit of old movie magic checking out Bogey's "African Queen" and locations where scenes from "Key Largo" and "PT 109" were shot. Family members of all ages can explore the island, which offers places like Dolphins Plus, where visitors can actually go swimming with these friendly and highly intelligent mammals in a natural lagoon.

The Keys, however, are much more than peace and quiet. They are palm-lined streets, Victorian homes and unspoiled natural wonders. There is quite simply no place like it.

Journey over Highway U.S. 1, built on the roadbed of Flagler's Overseas Railroad, to Islamorada, the sport-fishing capital of the world.

Offering offshore, reef, back country, flats and bridge fishing, the area is just as popular with divers.

Visitors to the area like the acrobatic dolphins and other deep sea stars performing at the Theater of the Sea on Windley Key. Tourists cast their sights on arts, crafts and other island treasures in the shops and galleries at both Treasure Village and Rain Barrel on nearby Plantation Key, or explore Lignumvitae Botanical Site and ascend to the highest elevation in all the keys – a dizzying 18 feet.

Continue south on the keys' lone thoroughfare and stop at the famous Seven Mile Bridge in Marathon, in the heart of the Florida Keys.

It is the longest segmental bridge in the world and the only access to the old conch houses on Pigeon Key. Located just off the coast is Hawk's Cay Resort and Marina, which has its own bridge across the turquoise sea to the small island. Another popular destination is Little Palm Island, a 5-acre island home to 15 thatched roof villas among lush palms. With a 15-minute launch or short seaplane ride, guests here find themselves deserted in paradise with no telephones or TVs.

The next destination is Big Pine Key, home to tiny native key deer found nowhere else in the country. Among the other sites is the Looe Key National Marine Sanctuary and Sugarloaf Key, site of the unusual structure, Perky's Bat Tower.

The continent's last stepping stone is Key West, which is the end of the road. Located 90 miles north of Havana, 159 miles southwest of Miami and 65 miles west of the coast of South America, Key West is the southernmost city in the continental United States and probably the most popular of the keys. John Dos Passos, who rode a train to Key West in the 1920s, described the trip later to his friend Ernest Hemingway as "one of the most exhilarating experiences of my life – coming to Key West was like floating into a dream."

Tourists enjoy visiting Key West, the southwestern most city in the continental United States.

John Audubon and Ernest Hemingway lived here. One had a passion for preservation while the other had a great zest for living. This is the combination that encompasses Key West's unique personality. When visitors walk down world-famous Duval Street in Old Town Key West, they not only feel the ambiance, they become part of it. The nightly Sunset Celebration at the Mallory Square pier is evidence of this. With food, spirits, clowns, mimes, jugglers, musicians, magicians and the occasional fire-eater, this is the most exciting time of day. This Americanized Caribbean tradition is where the sun doesn't just shine, it performs.

Experience elaborate resorts such as the historic Marriott Casa Marina. This lushly landscaped resort is the height of Spanish style and provides every amenity and convenience. Docking in front of the Casa Marina is the popular and picturesque Queen Conch, a 40-foot catamaran that carts adventurists off for snorkeling, diving, and sunset and starlight cruises. The people here couldn't be more friendly.

The city can be toured via the Conch Tour Train or Old Town Trolley, or by foot. Visitors can mingle with residents to learn some of the Keys' vast history.

The city's historic old cemetery is the final resting place for those who died on the U.S. Battleship Maine, at the start of the Spanish-American War, and is actually a fun place to visit, with humorous remarks on many of the headstones. Of course Key West is known for its beaches, gingerbread architecture, charter boats and glorious sunsets, but it is also known for its historic forts, lighthouses, museums, festivals, markets, legendary pubs and sidewalk cafes.

All told, 120 miles of perfect balance between natural beauty and extraordinary excitement lies at the foot of Florida. The Keys are rich with coral reefs, shipwrecks, history, art, theater, fine dining and entertainment.

Between relaxation and activities, the quaint and the classic, the islands' accommodations are just as diverse as its pleasures. From charming bed-and-breakfasts, hotels and resorts to rustic, family-owned lodgings and campgrounds, there is certainly something for everyone.

In short, if you're planning a Florida Keys vacation, plan on staying longer than anticipated.

For more information on the Florida Keys call the Florida Keys & Key West Visitors Bureau, (800) FLA-KEYS, or visit their Web site at http://wwwfla-keys.com.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

The British are coming! The British are coming!

How different are American teenagers from their British counterparts? This question will be explored when the 1997-1998 drama season gets underway Oct. 30 and Nov. 1 in a very special way with Cohasset High School's first international production. Seven students from Southend High School for Girls will travel across the Atlantic to join Cohasset students in presenting "Through Your Eyes," a script written in concert by students at the two high schools.

Work at Cohasset began during the summer months of 1995 when students got together one night a week to present their monologues and short scenes for group reaction and suggestions. The only ground rule, says Cohasset drama director Ron Emmons, was "No whining! There are enough high school plays out there that have self-pity as their major attribute." Emmons says that he "was overwhelmed by the number of students ready to commit to a project that offered no school credit and no guarantee of ever reaching the stage." A workshop production of the resulting script was presented to positive reaction from the community during the following fall.

While spending a year as an exchange teacher in England, Emmons offered his older students the chance to react to the work done and add material relevant to their own society. Assistance in developing the script was provided by the Central Bureau in London and by the United States Information Agency. All seven of the Southend students who participated in the writing project are coming to Cohasset to participate in the production. The joint work contains words written not to criticize or belittle, but to say that this is the way it is among young people and to ask if this is the way it should be. The audience is urged to listen as openly as the authors have written. Even the writers have attempted to avoid being judgmental of their characters. Instead, they have simply tried to let you hear the words of the young characters who populate the script.

The intent has not been to criticize Cohasset High School and/or Southend High School for Girls, but to comment upon being a teenager as millennium approaches.

"It would be foolish to look upon these pieces as representations of life at the two schools which the authors attend," Emmons says. "Students are not limited in their associations only to people in their own schools, 80 characters and events presented here are not events that necessarily occur at the two schools, nor are the characters portrayed necessarily students there. The pieces amalgamate schools, students and situations; they are to be considered works of fiction."

Topics presented range all the way from anorexia to SATs, from a cheerleader's revenge to the wonders of eating cheese, from suicide to "lust-induced brain-freeze."

Authorship of specific pieces is not noted, for both groups felt that this should be a collaborative effort. In fact, sometimes a piece began with one writer and was reworked by another; sometimes a monologue became a scene in rehearsal. The intent is not to deny credit but, instead, to spread it around," Emmons says.

"The audience now will see that the situations presented in the various monologues and short scenes of the original script are far more universal than they had perhaps thought. Certainly that was my observation during my year spent at Southend High School for Girls, in my visits to other schools in England and Northern Ireland, and from my conversations both with other fellow exchange teachers and with UK teachers. Only the dialects differ." A further new aspect of the play is the utilization of dance segments performed to contemporary musical selections with lyrics that accent the students' words. Margaret Barlow, a 1977 graduate of CHS, who appeared in the first CHS production of "Godspell" and choreographed a later version of that play, as well as "Bye Bye Birdie" and "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown," before going on to study dance in England, and Mary DeLeon, Cohasset High School's new art teacher, have choreographed these segments.

Featured in the cast are Cohasset seniors Jenny Figueiredo, Jane Flaherty, Ali Kinchla, Colin Kilroy, Alan Marcus and Kelly Tufts; juniors Megan Conley, Jordan Fiore, Meredith O'Hayre and Stephen Reynolds; sophomore Grace Gardner; and freshmen Lizzie Ingber, Morgan Hurley and Julia Lovallo. They will be joined by Year 13 students Sarah Cooper, Philip Goodchild, Sadie Hasler, Nina Lemon, Katy Smith, and Hannah Watkins and Year 12 student Bethan Ellis.

All seats for the production will be reserved and may be obtained from cast members or at the high school for $5. Tickets may be reserved by phoning the high school at (781) 383-6100. Reserved tickets will be held at the box office until 15 minutes before performance.

P.A.C. meeting is Oct. 14

The guest speaker will be Lynn Silva, director of student services. All parents/guardians of children receiving services under Chapter 766 are welcome.

DRUG FACT

A lot of people who would never consider using marijuana consider beer to be perfectly acceptable. Beer contains alcohol and alcohol is a very addicting drug - probably the most abused drug there is. Surveys have shown that almost half of all male high school seniors - and nearly 20% of all 9th grade boys - can be called "problem drinkers", meaning they repeatedly get drunk, have problems with school authorities and difficulties with friends and the police. There is always the problem of drinking and driving. The simple fact is that a single can of beer contains the same amount of alcohol as a shot (1 1/2 oz.) of whiskey. If you drink a six-pack of beer, you're getting six doses of a very powerful and addictive drug.

Drunk driving prevention program slated

In cooperation with the Cohasset Police Dept. and Chrysler Corp., the Neon Drunk Driving Simulator will come to Cohasset Oct. 14.

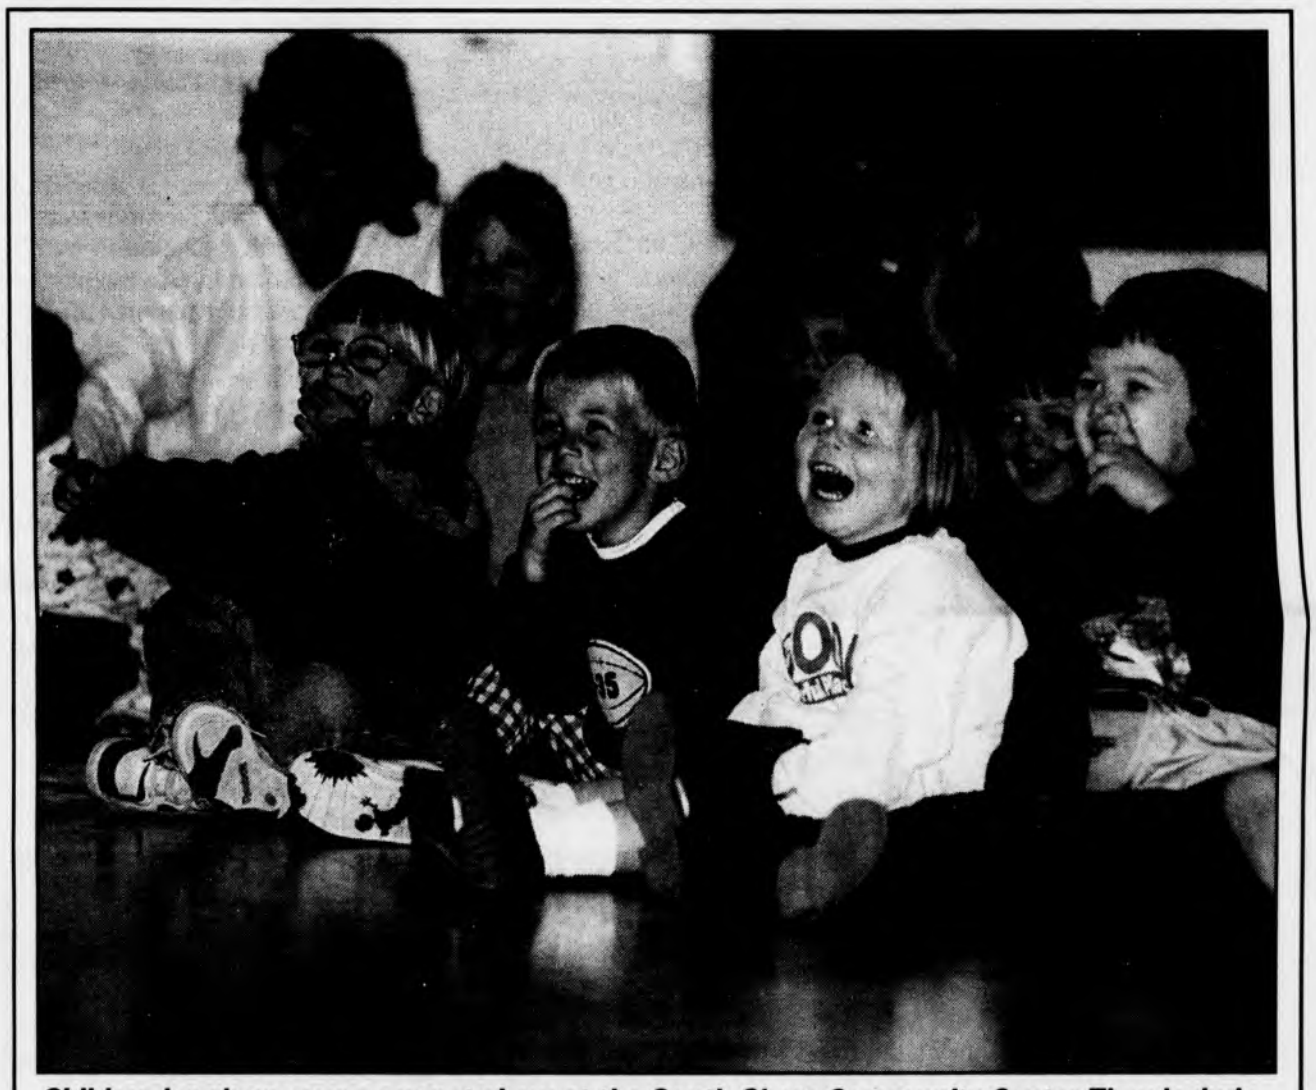
The Neon Drunk Driving Simulator is a 1996 Dodge/Plymouth Neon, modified with an on-board computer that can be programmed to delay the car's steering and braking response time, simulating the slowed physical and mental response abilities of a driver under the influence of alcohol.

It was developed to allow sober drivers to experience firsthand the dangers of drinking and driving. Students drive (with valid license) or ride as passengers on a safe controlled course.

A trained instructor is in the car with the driver at all times. The instructor enters the driver's weight into the computer, followed by a hypothetical number of drinks. The computer processes this information and automatically sets the timing delay on the car's braking and steering.

The course covers a 150-ft. by 200-ft. area. It is marked off with orange pylon cones. The driver attempts to negotiate the figure-eight course without hitting any pylons.

Pop-up silhouette figures representing pedestrians are also planted in the driver's path. Under zero blood-alcohol level conditions, the driver has ample time to stop without hitting the figure. However, after entering any number of drinks, it becomes increasingly difficult to avoid them, until it is virtually impossible to do so.



The simulator will be at St. Anthony's parking lot on So. Main St. for the entire school day.

A shuttle bus will be making trips between the high school and St. Anthony's approximately every 15 minutes.

All teachers at the middle school and high school are welcome to bring their classes down for any length of time they feel they can spare to this important issue. Students will undoubtedly have a valuable learning experience, whether they drive the car or ride as passengers.

Step-parenting program

The Social Service League of Cohasset will present a free program entitled, "Step-Parenting: How to Live with Other Peoples' Children" on Thursday, Oct. 16 from 7:30-9 p.m. at the Unitarian Church Parish House, 23 North Main St. In this free program, Judy Osborne, LMFT, LMHC, author of "Stepfamilies-The Restructuring Process" and director of Stepfamilies Associates in Brookline, will address the many challenges and rewards of this common family structure. Refreshments will be served. For more information call 383-0771.

What the analysts have to say about tech stocks

By Amy K. Barrett
Worth Magazine

Those investors who have watched the recent stock market rally during the past three years know that technology stocks as a group – though sometimes volatile and with a few stragglers – have ended each year with returns more impressive than the broad market's gains.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

Since the end of 1994 – effectively the beginning of this recent market rally – until Sept. 23, the technology stocks in the Standard & Poor's 500 Index have jumped 192.3 percent in value, while the broader index has risen 107.2 percent, according to Standard & Poor's. Just in the last three months, the technology group has increased 19.6 percent in value, more than twice the increase of the S&P 500.

The lofty levels beg the question: Whither will technology stocks go in the next six months? Will their share prices move higher? Or could the group stall out?

While a slowdown in the economy would hurt most companies' earnings, analysts say the answer lies more in the fate of individual companies and specific industries than that of the group as a whole.

"It's better to talk about a specific industry than the technology sector as a whole," says Bruce Lupatkin, the managing director of Hambrecht & Quist in San Francisco, Calif. "Lumping all tech stocks together is a bit of a mistake because the industries they serve are much different now and much broader in their own right."

Investors, therefore, should look for trends within these industries and then invest in the companies they believe will benefit the most, says Lupatkin.

For instance, one theme that Lupatkin sees gaining in importance is the approach of the year 2000 and the resulting complications for computers' software. Most computer software programs only store the last two digits of the four-digit year. So, when the year 2000 rolls around, computers will start entering data as if it were applicable to 1900, instead of the new millennium.

Bringing computer systems up to speed could cost companies around the world between $600 billion and $900 billion, with American companies paying around $70 billion, according to Alfred R. Berkeley III, president of The Nasdaq Stock Market Inc.

"This should ignite a very big upgrade cycle" in software, says Lupatkin. He expects companies like Netscape, Platinum Technology, System Software Associate and Computer Associates to benefit as companies start replacing their software programs.

Computer networking is another area that could continue to get a lot of attention.

Connectivity has become the byword in discussions on productivity and efficiency in the workplace. Companies that produce networking equipment, such as Cisco Systems are worth watching, says Bret Barry, senior vice president at Bailard, Biehl & Kaiser, an investment firm in San Mateo, Calif. which oversees $1 billion of investors' funds.

As networking equipment has been further developed, it has also grown more expensive, making the decision to buy it a bigger one. "The products are getting complex, so the decision to buy them is getting kicked upstairs [to executives]. Customers are taking a bit longer to evaluate the product," says Barry. As a result, sales appear to have slowed a bit. "But I think we are going to see the dam break" and sales gush, he says.

And Lupatkin agrees. As companies try to cut costs, part of their efficiency will lie in communicating via computer among workers in the office and off-site. Cisco makes the equipment for those kinds of networks.

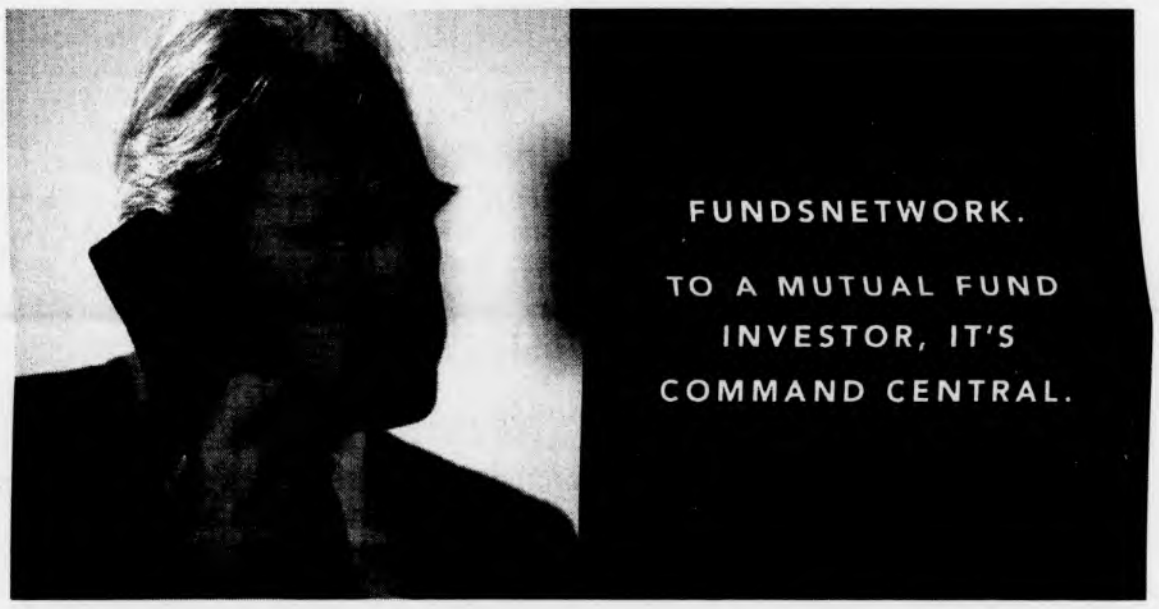
Another industry that should gain speed in the next few months is fiber optics, says Barry. The Internet, long touted as the information highway, is paved by fiber optics. But investors have largely ignored fiber optics companies, betting instead that service providers would merge and make the laying of new fiber optic cables unnecessary, according to Barry.

Instead, "the number of Internet service providers is exploding, and fiber optic cable is in very high demand," he says. His pick of the fiber optics company most likely to succeed? "Corning Inc. is a pure play in fiber optics and the hardware for connecting the cable. The stock has become cheap here and worthy of long-term investing."

If you are not one to take a risk investing your money on a newcomer, you can always stick to the technology behemoths, the leaders of their industries, analysts say. Intel, Microsoft, IBM, Applied Materials, Cisco and 3Com are among those that make up the club.

Their large scale operations give them purchasing power and distribution muscle and – what's proved to be just as important – the ability to build brand-name equity. Intel's advertising slogan "Pentium Inside," for example, has made buying a computer with a Pentium computer chip a must even for technophobes.

"The largest companies in the industries have guarded their (market) niches very well," says Barry. And, he predicts, they will continue to do so over the next year.



Ultimately, finding the technology stocks most likely to weather time depends on understanding the technology; knowing what the companies' make, knowing the products' uses, or potential uses and whether those products will be crucial in an ever-changing world.

But right now one thing is for sure: Companies continue to update computer systems and software and individuals continue to buy personal computers.

In 1985, for instance, spending on computers represented 0.4 percent of the gross domestic product. By the first quarter of this year, the proportion had risen to 3.4 percent, according to London investment bank Deutsche Morgan Grenfell – and that's good news for most technology industries.

85th year for Social Service League

The Cohasset Social Service League, which was founded in 1912 and is celebrating its 85th anniversary, wants to remind Cohasset residents and newcomers to town of the services it provides. Counseling and support groups are provided by professional social worker Patricia Carleton, LICSW, whose confidential services include individual, family, geriatric, marital, teen and grief counseling, advocacy and referral. Office and home visits are available.

Meals on Wheels volunteers deliver hot, nutritionally well-balanced meals provided by South Shore Elder Services at a reasonable price to qualified residents five days a week.

A Job Bank registry of private workers offers in-home support services such as: errands, respite care, garden maintenance, snow shoveling, babysitting, etc.

Nursing services are provided by public health nurse Judy Fitzsimmons, R.N., under the direction of the Cohasset Board of Health. These services include: lead screening, blood pressure monitoring; home visits; immunization clinics for flu and pneumonia (flu shot clinics will take place in October); cancer screening clinics; consultation on general health, diet and medication. Bumper sticker fad unites South Shore devotees

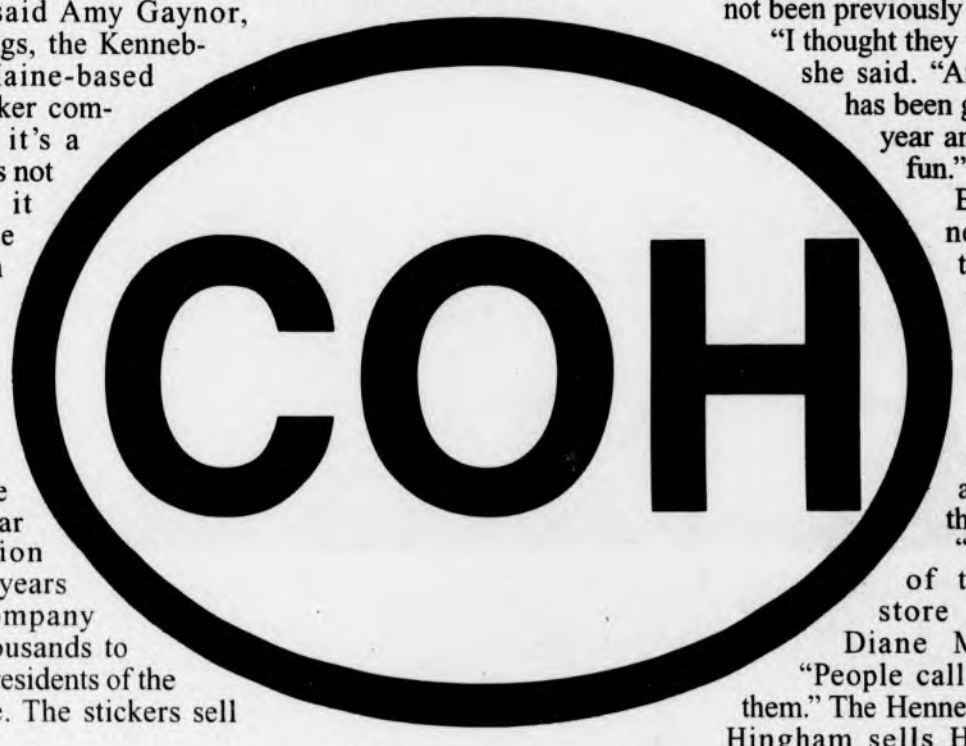
By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Like a secret code, the fastest growing fad in bumper stickers lets other drivers know your favorite places on the South Shore: COH, SCI, HUM, MAR, HIN, NOR, DUX.

Just as stickers reading "Speeders Against Roof Racks" and "One Day at a Time" unite a particular segment of the population that shares a common interest or attitude, these discreet decals express a similar sentiment in as few as three letters. Other commonly seen oval stickers include MV, for Martha's Vineyard, VT, for Vermont and ACK, Nantucket's airport call letters.

"It's a recognition thing, like 'This car climbed Mount Washington,' " said Amy Gaynor, owner of Tags, the Kennebunkport, Maine-based bumper sticker company. "But it's a nice look. It's not tacky and it doesn't take away from your car."

Since the first printing of these stickers - which resemble the European car identification tags - four years ago, the company has sold thousands to visitors and residents of the South Shore. The stickers sell for $2.



"It's definitely a trend. Can you guess what this sticker means?" said Judy Mantz, the Scituate-based Massachusetts sales representative for Tags. "It's the kind of thing that sells. It's an impulse item. We spend so much time in bumper-to-bumper traffic, it gives people something to try to figure out."

Tags made the biggest splash in Humarock with its fun HUM logo, Mantz said.

"They are truly my most popular bumper sticker," said Chris Brown, owner of Humming Rock Gifts, the only store selling them. "For those people who wouldn't be caught dead with an 'I heart Humarock" sticker on their car, this is a cool thing."

> "For those people who wouldn't be caught dead with an 'I ♥Humarock" sticker on their car, this is a cool thing."
> - CHRIS BROWN, HUMMING ROCK GIFTS.

Since she stocked them in her store two years ago, Brown has sold more than 1,000 stickers to residents as well as tourists. One of her customers purchased a HUM sticker for an uncle who loves to hum, she said.

"It's a conversation piece," Brown said. "People are always asking me, 'What does that HUM on your car mean?' "

COH stickers made their debut at Cards and Shards in Cohasset in June, but residents are a little slow catching onto the craze, said store owner Suzanne Straley.

"They don't get it," she said. "It's taking a while for people to get the game."

But Straley predicts that by Christmas, her supply will be wiped out by eager trend-setting shoppers.

"Cohasset needs to g going," she said. "I thinl stickers) will make a nice s ing stuffer."

In Scituate, the SCI stickers have caught on like wildfire.

Joan Noble at the Quarter Deck ran out of SCI stickers over the busy summer tourist season and has not been able to reorder because they are only printed once a year. In the past month, Noble has received inquiries about the stickers at least once a day, she said.

"It's embarrassing. Here we are in Scituate and we don't have any Scituate stickers," Noble said.

However, the store still carries MAR (Marshfield), DUX (Duxbury), NOR (Norwell) and COH stickers. In fact, Noble special ordered the Norwell and Marshfield stickers, which had not been previously printed.

"I thought they were a hoot," she said. "And the trend has been growing for a year and a half. It's fun."

But Hennessey News, the first store in Scituate to sell the stickers about a year ago, still has some available right on the counter.

"We sell tons of them," said store manager Diane McGaughey. "People call looking for them." The Hennessey News in Hingham sells HIN bumper stickers.

The same phenomenon has occurred in Duxbury at Cotton's, where about a thousand DUX stickers have been sold to residents as well as tourists, said owner Denise Johnson.

"Driving on the expressway, it's fun to see them," Johnson said.

The sales associates have also heard of people placing the stickers not only on their cars but also on their luggage.

So far, no stickers have been created for Pembroke, Kingston, Abington, Rockland or Hanover.

Town's private ways enter the public domain

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's private ways have become a problem too large to ignore. Recognizing this fact, selectmen last year formed a private ways advisory committee to explore ways to accept private ways as public streets.

The town also allocated $50,000 to prepare some private ways for public acceptance. The town is also expected to ask voters at town meeting to approve another $100,000 for work on private ways.

But some residents are unhappy about the private ways committee's slow pace. The committee hasn't met for several months. The private ways committee was scheduled to meet last night after the Mariner went to press.

Other residents have been surprised to discover some private ways will not be accepted by the town.

Residents who live on private ways say they pay taxes and should be able to utilize the same town services as residents on public streets.

Currently, there are 11 miles of

Suggested Halloween curfew gets top marks

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The suggested curfew for Halloween trick 'er treating this year is from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m., Oct. 31.

Selectmen urged all parents to follow the new guideline at their meeting this week. They want to avoid a recurrence of what happened last year when local police officers were attacked by egg-hurling mobs of teenagers in the village.

Town Manager Mark Haddad explained that selectmen cannot require the curfew because there is no allowance for that in the town by-law, but they can suggest it.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan applauded the restricted hours.

"I think it's a great idea especially being that Halloween is a Friday night," he said. "People should feel comfortable turning their lights out by 8:30 p.m.

"I think it will make a difference."

Sullivan, who noted that several officers were on bicycle patrol last Halloween, said eggs can be dangerous and possibly put out an eye.

"What happened last year was extremely dangerous and wasn't a joke at all," he said.

Selectman Nan Roth urged all parents to talk to their children

Hingham prosecutor to tackle Cutler, Murray

Race for state representative heats up

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

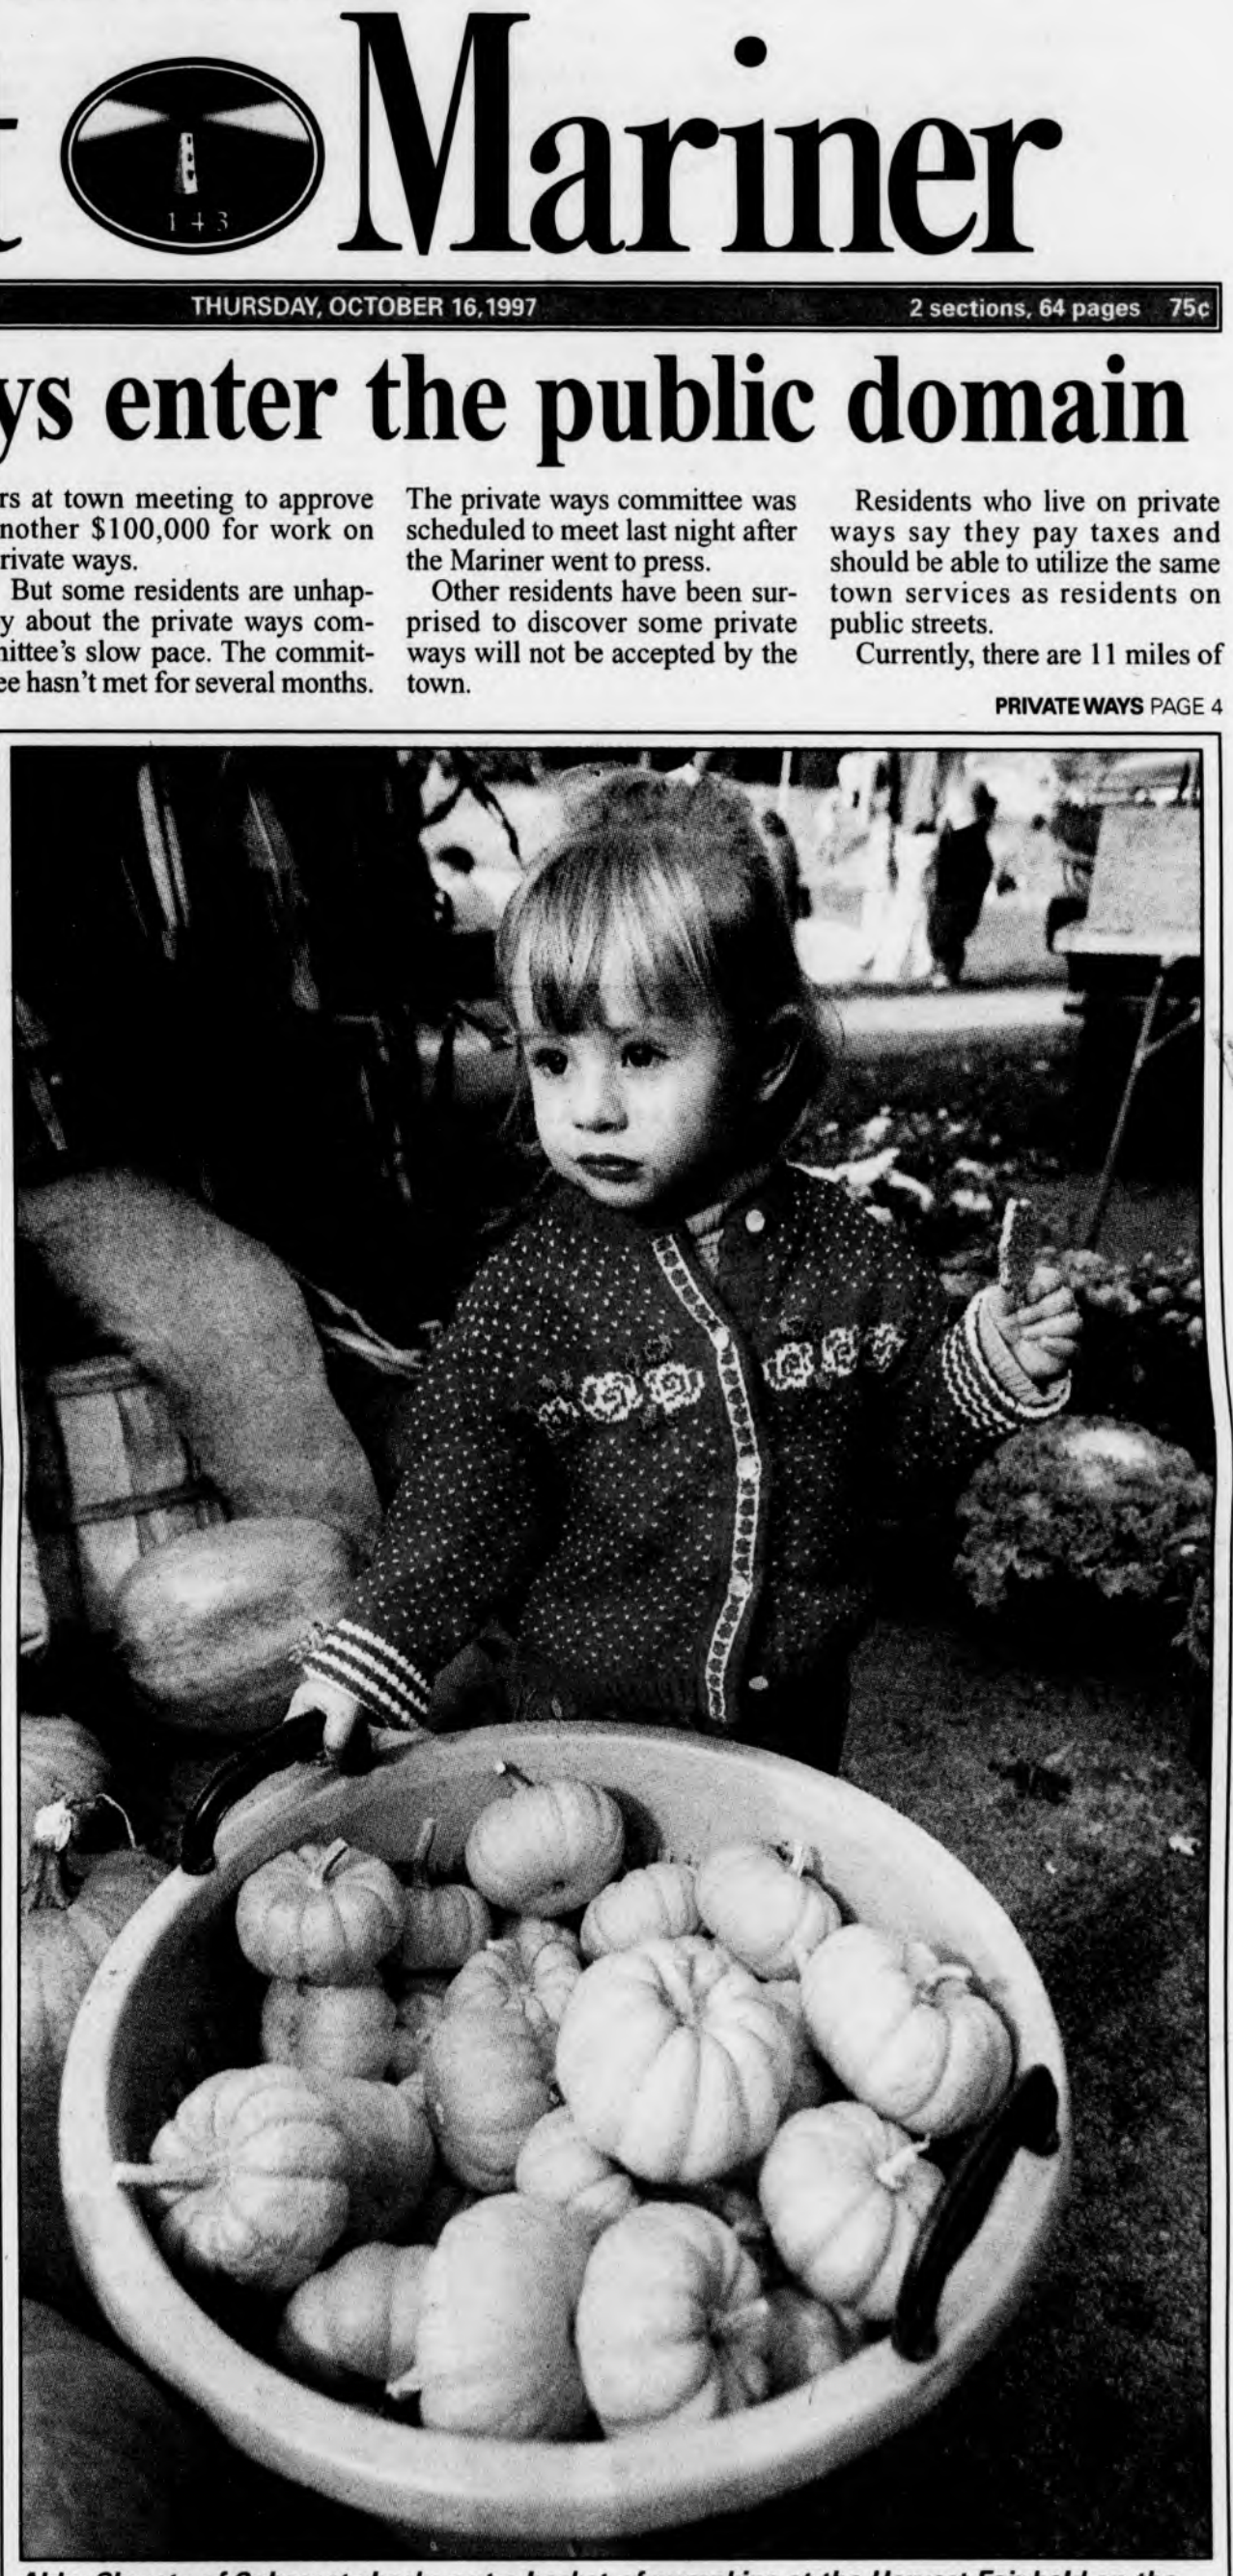
The state election is a year away, but Garrett Bradley doesn't believe in wasting a minute.

The 27-year-old Hingham resident has officially launched his campaign for the Third Plymouth District seat held by long-time state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset.

But Bradley must first face off with Josh Cutler, 26, of Hull in the state Democratic Party primary next September. The winner will face Murray, who has represented the district, which includes Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, for nearly 22 years.

"I'm very excited with the possibility of running against Mary Jeanette Murray — that would obviously be a privilege," he said.

"And Josh is a formidable candidate. He is well-prepared and well-informed."



Through his job as a Plymouth County prosecutor, Bradley has been exposed to substance abuse, domestic violence, broken homes, and lack of employment and education.

"Although all I see is not always representative of the district, my work has made me want to make a difference in lives," he said. "I believe I can by drafting legislation that will affect real people before the fact."

A "triple Eagle" — meaning he graduated from B.C. High School, Boston College and Boston College Law School — Bradley says education is an issue that's close to his heart.

"Education played a major role in my life and as a homeowner, I live on a check to check basis," he

Ambulance billing update

The fire department billed for 32 ambulance transports last month for a total of $11,446.39 and collected $8173.09.

Amounts collected can pertain to prior month's bills.

So far this fiscal year, which the fire department has billed for $32,672.15 in ambulance transports and collected $25,774.97.

Treasurer's office open Wednesdays

Treasurer/Collector Joseph Buckley announced the treasurer's office on the second floor of town hall is open Wednesdays.

For the past several years, the office was closed to the public Wednesdays to enable the staff to work without interruption.

Buckley changed that policy last month.

He also explained that the tax payments are now sent directly to the Bank of Boston where they are picked up and deposited with the funds electronically transferred to Cohasset.

"This saves time in my office," he said.

Public hearing on zoning change

The planning board will hold a public hearing at 8 p.m., Wednesday, Oct. 22 at town hall with regard to a zoning by-law change before the Oct. 27 special town meeting.

The by-law change seeks to exempt the height limits for any water storage tank on town-owned land which is authorized by town meeting and constructed by the water department.

The water department is sponsoring the article. It withdrew its request for a variance of height restrictions in a residential zone last summer to site the town's second water tank on Bear Hill.

The existing by-law limits structures to 30 feet????.

Lights at soccer shed

The Cohasset Soccer Club has the go-ahead from Town Manager Mark Haddad to install an underground electrical line to the newly built soccer equipment building at Milliken Field.

According to DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield, the club must check with Wire Supt. Stephen Wigmore to make sure any plans comply with the electrical code. The club must also contact Weed 'n Feed, the contractor who installed the sprinkler system at Milliken Field, to determine location of underground water pipes so there is no conflict with the electrical conduit. The club will also be responsible for any costs incurred now and in the future relating the electrical line.

Forest Avenue safety issues

The Norfolk County Engineers will provide engineering in determining the best location and actual layout of a new sidewalk on Forest Avenue, said Henry Ainslie, director of operations.

Cohasset is in the process of reviewing town roadways and determining the need for sidewalks to improve public safety. Selectmen have concluded that Forest Avenue is in need of a sidewalk.

Safety officer Clifton Jones also recommends the addition of more 30 mph speed limit signs on Forest Avenue as well as "speed enforced by radar" signs at each end of the roadway.

In a letter to Police Chief Brian Noonan, Jones said police continue to monitor traffic on Forest Avenue and issued more than $1,400 traffic tickets on Forest Avenue from July 1 1996 to July 1, 1997. He estimates verbal warnings issued numbered at least 50 during the same time frame.

His recommendations are in response to a letter from Patricia Morse, 78 Forest Avenue, expressing concern about safety on the street.

With Scituate's landfill set to close at the end of 1998, landfill review committee members are looking into other ways to dispose of waste that won't be too costly to the town.

One option under consideration — a "buck-a-bag" or "pay-as-you-throw" system — has already caused a stir in the neighboring town of Cohasset. Selectmen last year approved the program, which would replace the current $65 permit for use of Cohasset's Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF) on the former town landfill. But after some residents spoke out against the program, calling it a new form of taxation, the board decided to hold off on its implementation until the public could receive more information.

"We want people to be more comfortable with it," said John McNabb, a member of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Unit-based pricing on trash disposal, or "pay as you throw," means residents pay for solid waste management services based on how much garbage they discard, rather than through a flat fee or property tax.

The issue will be revisited in Cohasset at a pair of public hearings scheduled for Oct. 21 at 7:30 p.m. at town hall and again on Saturday, Nov. 11, at 10 a.m. at the DPW garage.

Scituate's committee to study uses for the town landfill when it closes has held preliminary discussions of the program, but will probably not make an official proposal until the spring, said member Susan Phippen.

"We're looking at how we can most equitably charge residents for waste disposal," she said. "It seems most equitable to charge people for what they dispose of."

Currently, each household in Scituate pays the $50 flat fee for a year's worth of landfill use. After the Scituate landfill closes, Phippen said that without a "pay as you throw" program, the town would have to charge households between $200 and $250 annually to cover disposal costs — a difference of almost $200.

Under that scenario, Phippen pointed out that elderly residents — who may generate only one bag of waste per week — would end up paying the same for trash disposal as families producing four or five bags a week.

According to the "pay-as-you-throw" system, residents would purchase 30-gallon garbage bags for one dollar each, stuff them with trash and bring them to the waste management facility in their town.

Officials in both towns are hoping this plan will encourage residents to segregate recyclable materials from their trash. Separating recyclables saves residents money because it leaves more room in the bags for non-recyclable trash. Residents benefit financially by throwing away less and recycling more.

"This program brings the incentive to recycle directly to the individual," said Scott Cassel, Director of Waste Policy for the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs. "If they recycle and reduce waste, they save money."

> "We are not the first to try it. We are not the guinea pigs. It's tried and true."
> – JOHN MCNABB, COHASSET RECYCLING COMMITTEE.

Towns save money with unit-based pricing through lower disposal costs and increased recycling revenues.

While trash must be shipped off-site at an average cost of $55 per ton, materials like newspaper, card board, aluminum, glass and plastic cost between $2 and $20 to transport, Cassel said. In most cases, these materials save and earn the town money when recycled, he said.

The Cohasset Recycling Committee estimates that with increased recycling, the average household will use one bag per week for trash. With 2,216 households in Cohasset, the town would yield $109,470 after subtracting the cost of the bags.

Cohasset Selectman Merle Brown said the program may open people's eyes to more responsible shopping. Residents may buy in bulk rather than purchase disposable items.

"I'd like to see people look at their ways of buying and change their ways on their own," Brown. "The dollar bag will be an incentive. Right now, with the $65 permits, people don't even think about it. They throw everything they can away. A lot of recyclables go in the trash."

Cohasset and Scituate residents are already conscientious about recycling, as evidenced by the recycling grades they received last year from the state, Cassel said. Cohasset, with a recycling rate of 31 percent, earned a grade of "A" for residents' efforts at the RTF. Scituate's recycling rate of 26 percent garnered a "B" grade.

"Those rates are not bad. They're quite good. But with unit-based pricing, they could be even better," Cassel said.

While Scituate's rate has risen steadily over the last few years, Cohasset's rate has dropped slightly, said Brown. The RTF accepted 200 more tons of trash than last year, he said.

"People are doing a good job at recycling, but I think they can do a better job," Brown said.

As part of its Solid Waste Master Plan, the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs has set a goal for the state to recycle 46 percent or better of its waste by the year 2000.

The towns of Milton and Halifax have already reached that goal; both towns get rid of trash through a "pay as you throw" program, Cassel said.

Seventy-five cities and towns in Massachusetts are involved in the "pay as you throw" program and have a recycling rate on average than those that are not, he said.

"We are not the first to try it. We are not the guinea pigs. It's tried and true," said McNabb. Cohasset residents need to learn more about the program so they will better understand its benefits, he said.

"We're trying to get more feedback from people. We want the people to want to do it," he said. "We're trying to see what we need to do to move it forward."

The state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and the state Department of Environmental Protection have also developed financial incentives for unit-based pricing programs, including grants of up to $10 per household per year to pay for residents' bags.

Meetings on pay-as-you-throw

The pay-as-you-throw system, where Cohasset residents would pay a fee for every bag of trash they dispose of, instead of the current annual flat fee for an RTF sticker, is still under consideration by the Recycling Committee.

The Recycling Committee is continuing its discussions on pay-as-you-throw at its meetings scheduled for Tuesday, Oct. 21, at 7:30 p.m., at Town Hall, and Saturday, Nov. 11, at 10 a.m., at the DPW garage, and invites interested residents to attend if they have any questions.

"The pay-as-you-throw system is a proven way to increase recycling," said Recycling Committee Chairman Arthur Lehr. "Towns with pay-as-you-throw in place have been able to increase their recycling rates of 50 to 60 percent, far more than our current recycling rate of about 34 percent."

Lehr also pointed out that "pay-as-you-throw is a more equitable method of charging residents for trash disposal, since people will be charged only for what they actually dispose of. Since there will be no charge for bringing recyclables to the RTF, residents will have an economic incentive to separate their recyclables."

Town's private ways enter the public domain

private ways in Cohasset and 34 miles of accepted streets.

A group of residents who live on private ways has submitted a citizen's article to accept five private ways: Cedar Acres Lane, Cedar Acres Drive, Fair Oaks Lane, Old Pasture Road, and Surry Drive.

But town officials say taking private ways is not a simple process, and in some cases, can be extremely expensive.

The citizen's article has not been supported by the advisory committee, the private ways committee or the board of selectmen.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said the wording of the citizen's article may not be adequate for legal approval.

"The article doesn't address the issues that need addressing," DeRensis said. "Before a private way can be accepted there needs to be deeds, surveying, engineer's drawings, layout hearings, and that takes money."

Accepting private ways is a fairly complicated process. First, the private way under consideration must be surveyed, and then researched to see who owns it.

Then the planning board must hold a hearing on the suitability of the road in question, followed by a selectmen's hearing to determine whether the road serves the public interest.

Next, town meeting must approve money to acquire the property.

"The law says you must acquire the property within 120 days of acceptance," DeRensis said. "The only effective way to do that is through an eminent domain taking."

The private ways committee has compiled a prioritized list of private ways. The list is arranged so that the easiest streets to be accepted by the town can be approved first. At the bottom of the list are streets that would be too expensive to accept because of the need for expensive repairs or upgrades.

Selectmen Merle Brown said one problem is the town doesn't receive state funds for private ways. Roads must meet state standards to qualify for Chapter 90 state funds, which help pay for road repairs and upgrades.

"For the town, accepting more roads means an increase in Chapter 90 funds," Brown said. "But we don't want people to rush in with a citizen's article because we need to upgrade some roads before they can be accepted and we need to allocate money for that."

But many private ways do not meet those standards. Accepting a sub-standard road would force the town to stretch its state highway funding over more projects. The end result would be higher local costs to repair public roads.

"The private ways committee took a list of private ways and started by recommending the ones that could be accepted without a lot of trouble," Brown said.

Ross W. Rosano is chairman of the private ways committee. Rosano could not be reached for comment, or to obtain a copy of private ways on the committee's list.

The private ways committee is recommending eight streets for approval at the 1998 annual town meeting.

Some streets that are on the list to be approved include Norman Todd Road and Fair Oaks Lane.

Laura and Jack Doherty live on Cedar Acres Lane, a private way that is not one of the eight streets up for acceptance next year. She said she and her husband had a terrible drainage problem on their street, and found little help available from the town because the street is a private way.

Jack attended a private ways committee meeting, and was surprised to discover that his street was not considered a high priority.

"Jack couldn't make any sense of their selection process," Doherty said.

She added that she never figured out how private ways are categorized by the committee for acceptance.

"Our street was overgrown with wild grasses and trees coming up through the asphalt," Doherty said. "We finally went to selectmen and the DPW did a quick paving job on our street."

But Doherty's problems don't end there. The water commission has stated that residents on private ways must pay for their own water main repairs if the pipe breaks.

Then there is the question of who is liable for an accident on a private way caused by structural deficiencies in the pavement.

"We haven't even been able to figure out who owns our street," Doherty said. "The town says we own it, but the street doesn't appear on my deed."

Some private ways are owned by the residents of the street, while others are sometimes owned by the contractor. When the contractor still owns the road, the town may have to pay a hefty price to acquire a private way.

Tired of what she considered to be the slow pace of the town and the private ways committee, Doherty helped sponsor the citizen's article.

"There are all these streets in town that are not accepted, yet we pay high taxes," Doherty said. "I've lived here for 25 years, and it's ridiculous that I have to ask Superintendent of Public Works Harold Litchfield for a favor every time we need some work done. We're not asking for anything extra, just what other taxpayers are receiving."

Doherty is hoping town meeting voters will support the citizen's article. She added that residents of private ways may also petition the town for tax abatements if the article fails.

"We're not just going to give up and go away," Doherty said.

Litchfield said the town just can't afford to accept every private way in town all at once.

"Some of these streets are eight-feet wide and some are 20-feet wide," Litchfield said. "Some of these are nothing more than old cart paths. We can't use state funds to maintain roads that don't meet state standards."

David Wadsworth is on the private ways committee. He said the committee has categorized the roads by which are cheapest and easiest to accept first.

"Some were eliminated from the list because they are just lanes and not suitable for acceptance," Wadsworth said. "The cost to bring the drainage and subsurface up to acceptable standards is prohibitive."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town is fully committed to accepting as many private ways as possible.

"We need money to bring many roads up to the planning boards rules and regulations," Haddad said. "We'd like to do it all at once, but the money's just not there. We would like to do all private ways, but some of them are just too far gone."

What about residents who live on private ways that don't even make the list?

Haddad said those residents might have to band together and get funds to bring the road up to acceptable standards.

Harborfest breaks off from art festival

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Festival on the Common next spring will be minus one "fest."

Harborfest - which has been under the festival umbrella since its inception six years ago - will be held on an earlier weekend, organizers said this week.

The Festival on the Common, formerly known as the South Shore Arts Festival, has been a Cohasset tradition for many years. Harborfest joined up with the Arts Festival in 1991.

The festival attracts upwards of 10,000 people a day.

"The steering committee decided to have Harborfest on a separate weekend than the art festival," said Bob Martin of Harborfest. "Our events are pointed to the local community. The arts center serves 44 towns.

"We want to spotlight our events a little more," he said.

Harbofest activities, which include the ice cream festival, "luminaria", Blessing of the Fleet, parade, pancake breakfast and center stage, will take place June 5-7. The arts festival is June 19-21.

Martin said the marching band, which is made up of local citizens, will be as good as ever despite the earlier date allowing less time to practice.

He said plans are to have a combined chorus from all the churches in town to sing during the candle luminaria on the common.

"There won't be a dry eye in the house," he said.

Harborfest organizer James Lagrotteria said the steering committee has informed the art center of the plan.

"We have written and called and have had no answer," he said.

The Festival on the Common has traditionally included the Strawberry Festival, hosted by the Second Congregational Church. Harborfest organizers said the Strawberry Festival would very likely stay as part of the Festival on the Common.

Selectmen unanimously agreed to the Harborfest dates at their meeting on Monday.

about respecting property and police.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said all parents should know the whereabouts of their children on Halloween and what they are up to.

Selectman Diane Sullivan suggested extending the curfew to 9 p.m. in order not to "disenfranchise our good teens."

But Selectman Merle Brown stressed that 8:30 p.m. was late enough. The board voted unanimously to back the suggested curfew.

Sidewalk study first step in revitalizing Cohasset village

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Revitalizing the village remains one of the town's top priorities. Last year, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and the Cohasset Rotary sponsored a two-day charrette — a French term for any intensive, last minute work effort — to solicit community ideas to revive the village.

The first fruits of that effort are just beginning to blossom. Rizzo will present some of the charrette ideas to the selectmen on Oct. 21.

The chamber of commerce is sponsoring a follow-up workshop at the lightkeeper's residence on Thursday, Oct. 23 at 7 p.m. Architect Jim Sandell will give a presentation on the results of the village design charrette.

There will also be an open forum to discuss the charrette and develop an implementation plan.

The town is also getting in on the act. The board of selectmen is sponsoring an article that will asks voters at the Oct. 27 special town meeting to appropriate $10,000 for the design and engineering of a sidewalk on the east side of South Main Street in front of St. Stephen's Church.

The sidewalk would begin at the corner of Robert E. Jason Road (in the town common) and end at the intersection of Elm Street.

The actual sidewalk plan predates the village charrette. Last year the town failed to secure a $120,000 transportation enhancement grant to build the sidewalk because it lacked an engineering design.

The sidewalk will be designed using concepts developed in the village charrette.

The village charrette was used to bring together town officials and residents to come up with a master plan for revitalizing the village.

"The charrette was used to bring out a master concept," said Dean Rizzo, vice president of the chamber of commerce. "If we have a master plan for the total village area, we can get grants. It's also useful for long term planning because we can provide designers and builders with the same concepts and ideas for their projects."

But there is more to the charrette than unified designs and ideas. It also allows the town to rebuild the village in pieces, rather than trying to borrow $10 million to do the whole thing at once.

"With the charrette we can do the sidewalk now, the village in four years and new parking areas in seven years," Rizzo said. "We don't have to worry that doing the village in separate phases will result in an inconsistent design because we'll use the charrette as our master plan."

The charrette can also be used to make sure the MBTA builds sidewalks and parking areas consistent with town plans, if and when the Greenbush line is revived.

Many good ideas have come out of the charrette. People offered ideas to use the same kinds of bricks for sidewalks, add bright lighting to the municipal parking lot, link the village to harbor, link the arts center to the Music Circus, bring more shops to the village, eliminate overhead wiring and add sidewalks to the village.

"Some parts of the charrette would have to be implemented at the same time," Rizzo said. "We would have to lower the roads to add sidewalks in the village, so it only makes sense to install underground wiring at the same time. The charrette is a way of planning for all aspects of the village revitalization."

The sidewalk project is a nice way of putting the charrette ideas to the test. If the town can get the grant, and the sidewalk is built using the charrette process, residents can see a small piece of what the new village could look like.

"This sidewalk idea fits in with the charrette," Rizzo said. "This is also the only part we can tackle now until we get more town involvement."

Rizzo hopes enough people will remain interested enough to follow through on the charrette.

"The charrette is a way of developing a vision, but we really need everyone's involvement to follow through on the ideas," Rizzo said. "Then we can take it to the next step and obtain grants to help us pay for the revitalization of the village."

Hingham Prosecutor to tackle Cutler, Murray for state representative said. "I would work to continue to find creative ways to fund the schools without bankrupting our property owners."

Bradley says funding for the state charter schools, like the one in Hull, must be looked at closely. As it stands now, "tuition" money follows the student from his or her town school system to the charter school. For the past three years the state has reimbursed the sending towns but that won't continue forever.

"I'm all for competition among schools, but I'm not for creating one school at the detriment of another school," he said.

Bradley readily admits he doesn't have all the answers, but promises in the months ahead he'll be wearing out his shoe leather finding them.

"The state representative must have a vision on how decisions today will affect the district will into the 21st century," he said. "The representative must understand a variety of issues while focused on the local issues."

Bradley said he will become educated on Cohasset Heights Landfill (a privately-owned landfill that seeks expansion) and the Mass.-American water rate issue, which is currently before the Department of Public Utilities after citizen uproar over soaring rates last year.

Garrett Bradley

"I need to understand the issues and see what wasn't done and what can be done," he said.

Bradley is against restoration of the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad, because he sees the cost of the project as outweighing the potential benefits.

For a fraction of the cost of Greenbush, water transportation could be upgraded, he said. Bradley also said extending the MBTA Red Line down Route 3 should be really studied.

But if the train does come, Bradley said he would be out in the forefront helping local officials to protect the district from over development.

Bradley sees the deregulation of electric companies as one of the biggest issues looming next year.

He would work to see that the "stranded costs" of the electric companies are not passed on to the consumers. Stranded costs are those from bad investments, such as nuclear power plants, Bradley explained.

Bradley, who was married last May, lives in Hingham Woods off Tuckers Lane in Hingham. His wife, Heather, whom he met in law school, is an assistant district attorney for Middlesex County.

Oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled

Used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled by bringing them to the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street..

"We have been successful in providing for the recycling of used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries by Cohasset residents," said Recycling Committee chairman Arthur Lehr. "We urge everyone to separate and recycle these items rather than throw them away."

In addition to these materials, Cohasset residents may also bring the following to the RTF for recycling: newspapers, white paper, junk mail, plastic bottles, aluminum, steel, cardboard, glass (separate by color), and cans (which should be cleaned out). Paint is accepted, but only on designated days. A fee is required for dropping off: tires, household appliances, household furniture and other miscellaneous bulky materials.

Oct. 29 is a special day indeed, that is when Cohasset's own Gert Young celebrates her 95th birthday! Hope your day is a wonderful one!

ALUMNI FIELD LOOKS GREAT

The next time you see Gary Smith (Black Bear Stump grinding/landscaping) be sure to tell him how much you appreciate all of the time and effort he has put into Alumni Field! Without him things would not be progressing as quickly and smoothly as they have been, and the pride that he takes in his work is evident indeed!

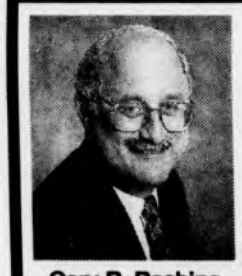
APPALACHIA SERVICE UPDATE

Isn't it a tribute to The Rev. Gary Ritts that so many teens signed up for the Appalachia Service Project; there were 75 of them! The group has been going for the past 10 years, and word has spread as to how wonderful it is to do for others - they are in need of adult volunteers so that they might meet the demand of all the teens who want to help, perhaps you could be that one who will enable an additional group to go (two adults for every five teens is the count that they like to have). There are applications at St. Anthony's, St. Stephen's and the Second Congregational Church - they'll love you for signing up, and you will love that warm feeling that you have helped others! If you cannot attend, be sure to support the many fund-raisers they hold to make the trip possible. We promise to keep you informed!

ART SHOW IN SCITUATE

Spotted JoAnne Chittick painting a beautiful harbor scene last week, she tells us that she will be having a show in Scituate next month - she promised to let us know dates and times so that we can all enjoy her exhibition. Isn't she a great artist?

HARVEST FEST WAS SUPER



Wasn't it great to see all of the activity at the Harvest Festival that was held by the Cohasset Village Farmers' Market last week? It was so festive and alive with children and adults, all having a wonderful time! The pony rides were a huge success, the music lively and wonderful and face painting is always a fun time for the kiddos! Kudos to Anna Abbruzzese for organizing such a good time, and for all of her efforts throughout the summer that made the Farmers' Market a huge success and something to look forward to each week.

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

I would like to begin by telling you how gratified I am with all of the positive comments I have received on this new food column! Hopefully I will continue to keep your interest piqued and tummies sated in the future!

This week's recipe, seafood stew, is one that you will love, as will everyone you serve it to. Keep the recipe handy, you will be asked for it every time you serve it. It's great company fare, especially if you have "out-of-towners" looking forward to seafood.

SEAFOOD STEW

1 pound large shrimp
1 pound sea scallops
salad oil
1 10-ounce package medium-sized mushrooms, each cut in half
1 medium-sized onion, minced
1 teaspoon curry powder
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1 13-3/4- to 14-1/2-ounce can chicken broth
1 can crab bisque or cream of shrimp (10-1/2 ounce) soup
1 cup milk
1/4 cup dry sherry
1 9-ounce package frozen artichoke hearts, thawed
1 12-ounce package salad-style imitation crabmeat
1 10-ounce package frozen peas

1. Shell and devein shrimp. Rinse scallops with running cold water to remove sand from crevices.

2. In five-quart Dutch oven or sauce-pot over medium-high heat, in two tablespoons hot salad oil, cook mushrooms until golden brown. With slotted spoon, remove mushrooms to bowl; set aside.

3. In same Dutch oven, in two more tablespoons hot salad oil, over medium heat, cook onion and curry powder until onion is tender. Add flour and cook, stirring constantly, until flour is dark brown but not burned. Gradually stir in chicken broth, crab bisque, milk and sherry; over high heat, heat to boiling.

4. Add mushrooms, artichoke hearts, shrimp and scallops; over high heat, heat to boiling. Reduce heat to medium; cook until shrimp turn pink and scallops turn opaque. Stir in crabmeat and peas; heat.

Makes 8 servings.

Annual Halloween Fair set for Oct. 26 on Cohasset Common

Spooks and cartoon characters of all shapes, sizes and ages will want to mark their calendars for Sunday, Oct. 26, and the annual South Shore Community Center Nursery School Halloween Fair on Cohasset Common. A South Shore Halloween tradition for more than 20 years, the fair offers lots of holiday fun for the entire family. Enchanting games of skill and luck will encircle the common, as well as a moon walk, ghostball, goblin target game and lots of refreshments. The fair gets under way at 1:30 p.m. sharp with a friendly witch-led costume parade, and the spooktacular time continues until 3:30 p.m.

Tickets for all games and activities may be purchased at the fair. Tickets are three for $1. Most games and activities will require two or three tickets to participate. Proceeds from the fair benefit the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, including the school's scholarship and program funds. Last year's fair was the largest fair to date and raised $3,000, which was used to purchase classroom enhancements and playground equipment, in addition to funding two scholarships.

For more information about the fair or the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, call Lynne Sheridan at 383-0036.

COHASSET MARINER

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

'Tis the season

Fall is the favorite season for many of us.

The air is crisp, our energy level is up. And as the leaves turn radiant shades of yellow, red and orange — New England, with its abundance of trees and parklands becomes an artist's dream.

But with all the beauty around us, it's easy to forget what's ahead.

Winter, which can be every bit as beautiful as fall, is just around the corner. Unfortunately, a downside to winter — besides all the snow shoveling — is that it brings with it the flu season.

Influenza isn't like an ordinary cold. It's much more serious. And every year, like the hurricanes, we seem to get new ones with unusual names.

This year, we have the Johannesburg, Nanchang and Harbin strains waiting to pounce upon us.

Luckily for us, through the Social Service League, the Cohasset Board of Health conducts flu clinics with free shots that can protect us from these dangerous germs.

For a list of flu shot clinics, see page 21.

We urge everyone who falls into one of the target groups to get a flu shot. These groups include those who are over 65 years of age; adults and children who require regular medical care or follow up; family members of high risk individuals; and those who provide essential community service such as medical personnel, police officers, fire-fighters, and public works and school employees.

But even if you're not in a high-risk or target group, you probably won't regret getting vaccinated against the flu.

Injections are unpleasant, but they only hurt for a second or two. That's a small price to pay for staying healthy, which translates into not missing work or school or social events due to the flu.

And best of all, you might be giving a co-worker, friend for family member a gift by not having the nasty germ to pass onto them.

Scituate Hill tank site supported

To the Editor:

On Oct. 27, the Board of Water Commissioners will ask the voters to change the town Zoning By-Law. They want the authority to locate a two million gallon, 70' high water storage tank on any parcel in town, without approval or input from any boards or citizens.

At issue is their desire to place a second water storage tank on Bear Hill (behind the high school). They were unsuccessful in obtaining a variance from the Board of Appeals in the summer of 1997 to allow construction of this massive structure in a residential neighborhood.

All previous long range plans for a second tank select Scituate Hill (the highest point in town) as the location for a tank. The Commissioners refuse to act as responsible elected officials and obtain the land (Scituate Hill) in the industrial zone to construct this important addition to the water distribution system.

The Commissioners in a desperate effort to cover their poor judgment use arguments for Bear Hill, and now King Street, that are not a factual presentation of the issues.

Asking to change the zoning by-law is a desperate attempt to be rescued from making the correct decision, which surely is acquiring the land on Scituate Hill to construct the second tank.

Police are not part of the problem

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee would like to let every resident of Cohasset know that this committee which is totally made up of volunteers from the community (PSO, clergy, police, parents, etc.) completely supports Police Chief Brian Noonan and his officers. We do not think that they are a part of the problem with our youth.

We do think, however, that some of the problem lies back with the parents in teaching their children to show respect to adults (police, teachers and the general public). To know where their children are, who they are with and what they are doing. Let them know you care.

Take a ride at night downtown, to Lily Pond, the Harbor, the Beach, Wheelwright Park and Whitney Woods to see what is going on. Stop and say hi to the kids. Don't be afraid that you may embarrass them. When they go to a party, call, make sure you know there is adequate supervision.

The problem is everyone's.

Adult supervision at Cohasset teen dances is topic

By Stacey Powers
CORRESPONDENT

A letter to the school committee asking for more chaperones at school dances won't be needed after all.

Last Wednesday, the drug & alcohol committee discussed increasing the number of adults at dances in an effort to raise awareness of the problems that can be associated with alleged teenage drinking at school functions.

But after a meeting this week with high school administrators, the Rev. Clifford Cutler of the Drug & Alcohol Committee said he was satisfied there were enough chaperones at dances and that those chaperones are provided with a written set of expectations prior to the dance.

"I was pretty pleased," Cutler said.

Nine chaperones, all members of the school staff, were slated for a dance this week. That doesn't include the parents who are on hand to help with refreshments, he said.

"That's a pretty good number," Cutler said.

The issue of supervision at school dances will be taken up tonight at the school committee meeting which gets underway at 7:30 p.m. in Room 10 at the high school.

The drug & alcohol committee is proposing that a police officer be assigned to work each school dance.

Drug & alcohol committee members are on the agenda "to help keep the lines of communication open," Cutler said.

The discussion arose last week after concerned parents brought up an alleged incident of teenage drinking at a recent high school dance and the need for chaperones to monitor more closely what is going on at school functions.

More severe tactics were discussed including the use of drug-sniffing dogs and breathalyzer tests.

"Sending the dogs in would have to be at the request of the superintendent of schools who would make an announcement at the beginning of the school year stating that the school would have random canine checks over the course of the school year," said Cohasset Police Officer Lisa Matos.

"Kids who don't have anything to hide will not object," said Tony Bramblett,, student representative to the committee.

Officer Matos also told the committee that breath testing at proms and semi-formal dances is being done in other communities but that they "may not be necessary right now for Cohasset, but maybe in the near future."

She cited an example that in the Dighton/Rehoboth school district, breath testing is conducted before students are allowed to enter the prom and again before they are allowed to enter the after hours, all-night party that is held.

"The kids don't drink if they know that they will be tested and caught.," she said.

PSO Committee representative Wallace St. John said that "we have to find out if people really want that type of action to be taken."

Legal liability

The committee will also invite state Rep Frank Hynes to speak on legal liability and consequences for a host at a social function when alcohol is available to minors. The invitation is in response to a letter received by the committee seeking its endorsement on a proposed act relating to this issue.

Early intervention needs spark search for special needs assistance in Cohasset schools

By Jason Bouffard
CORRESPONDENT

Principals from Cohasset's elementary schools told the school committee that they are out of resources to provide special education assistance to the rising numbers of "special ed" students.

The school committee voted unanimously to support a request for one full-time and one part-time aide at their last meeting. They hope to ease the strain on existing staff members faced with increased special needs enrollment.

Superintendent Stephen Hart emphasized the point that the request for increased staffing was a last resort option. He told the school committee that principals at the Deer Hill and Osgood Elementary Schools had spent a great deal of time trying to meet the special education needs through the use of existing staff members, but had come up empty.

"We have literally squeezed the sponge dry," said Director of Student Services Lynn Silva.

An unexpected increase in enrollment has resulted in higher numbers of special education students, according to Osgood Elementary School Principal Merilee Cantelmo. Between the two schools, 43 new students who were not accounted for at budget time last year are enrolled for this school year. That figure has placed this year's special education needs above expectations.

About ten of these 43 students require some sort of special needs assistance, whether it be actual special needs enrollment or simply extra attention. Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan stressed the importance of attending to special needs right away, as opposed to allowing time to take its toll on students who need greater attention. The sentiment was backed by others who requested the new aides.

"Early intervention is key," Cantelmo said.

Lynn Silva, special needs coordinator, said that she was uncertain whether the town would meet legal requirements if extra staff members were not brought aboard.

While the school committee was supportive of the request, questions arose regarding the cost. Committee member Ralph Kidder voiced serious concerns about where the $20,000 to pay the aides should come from. He noted that the request was brought before the committee during last year's budget hearings, but was turned down, and was adamant about not reallocating funds from other programs in order to fund the new request.

The committee agreed that funds for the request should come only from savings resulting from over-budgeting in some areas, or from additional funding granted by the advisory committee.

Although the advisory committee does not allow for a special education reserve budget, members of the committee may seek such a reserve in future budgets.

Value of state-wide achievement tests questioned

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

This South Shore school district bested all others on the Iowa tests. Yet, rather than claiming bragging rights, some local educators have begun to question the value of statewide achievement exams.

Moreover, their questions appear to be mounting, due to a rise in the number of different state-ordered tests.

"It's a little bit disheartening," according to Betsy Connolly of Cohasset.

Connolly specifically objected to testing third-graders because they might be too young to cope with the pressure of a marathon two-hour multiple-choice test of reading and basic academic skills, such as the Iowa series.

"It isn't healthy," she said.

Connolly, a Hingham guidance counselor, also expressed doubts about the purpose of taking time away from the curriculum to teach children how to take tests.

"The state is requiring so many more tests," Connolly said, citing the new written language samples fifth-grade and tenth-grade youngsters must produce this year, along with the new state-mandated tests on the curriculum called the Frameworks.

Most of all, she questioned the state's right to use the school population as "guinea pigs" to test the tests, in effect.

"They" (the state) "is experimenting with their own assessment tests," she said.

According to the guidance counselor, most parents grasp their children's achievement levels, as a result of teacher conferences and report cards, and by comparison, the test scores tell them little. (Cohasset youngsters fared well on the standardized tests, which were administered last spring to all Massachusetts third-grade and 10th-grade students, but the results came as no surprise.)

Schools superintendent Stephen Hart also played down the value of the tests.

"It does give us a general rating," Hart acknowledged. "But it's only one measurement."

The superintendent also had reservations about the number of standardized exams students now have to master. Hart said the school board might opt to drop the Education Research Bureau test, dubbed the ERBS, this year since the youngsters will face the state test on the Frameworks in the spring.

Hart said the record has long shown Cohasset can boast about a "very able student body, hard working, capable teachers and a lot of emphasis on curriculum development."

Though the Cohasset classes fell short of the top in the state, such as the 91 and 85 averages which Dover and Wellesley scored, they did rack up solid 81 and 82 overall averages for the two grades, respectively and scored substantially better even than Hingham. (The neighboring community weighed in with a 78 average for the 10th-graders and a 76 for the third-graders. Over the years, the two districts have been on a par, and the gap, which at the 10th-grade level, was due to lower Math and Social Studies scores, was a bit unusual.)

The mass testing of the elementary school children was part of a campaign to insure all youngsters are reading at grade level by the third grade while the 10th-graders performance on the IOWA battery was intended to serve as a "snapshot" of the students' achievement prior to the new tests on the Frameworks this spring.

Board of Education chief John Silber has said students who cannot pass the 10th-grade test will not receive a diploma. Silber also said low scores should serve as a warning to school districts and superintendents that they must do a better job.

Sample questions from Iowa test

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Many adults in this area took the Iowa tests as youngsters and so may be glad to learn the exam they remember has been changed.

The test series does boast a long history and according to schools superintendent Stephen Hart, the Iowa remains "a good standardized test," although Hart was not positive it is the "best test to measure student achievement."

The best or not, the price was right, according to a spokeswoman in the state education department who said Education Commissioner Robert Antonucci decided to go with the Iowa test because "it best fit the needs for cost control, reliability and standardization."

Nonetheless, statewide scores at the 10th-grade level were hard to compare because some districts gave different versions of the exam.

Here is part of the third-grade practice test which the DOE supplied. It was easier than the actual test, reportedly.

Cohasset resident is hooked on rug making

By Laura Caldwell
CORRESPONDENT

A little artistic intuition and healthy dose of creativity have produced big results for Susan Buswell. The Cohasset resident has become an accomplished rug hooker, and her work was recently honored by the book "A Celebration of Hand-Hooked Rugs VII."

Rug hooking is simply the art of making rugs. There are two methods of hooking rugs: punch needle hooking, and traditional hooking. Buswell uses the punch needle method of rug hooking, which entails literally punching yarn through a burlap cloth with a "yarn gun" of sorts. This method is noted for its ease and speed.

With this punch-needle style, Buswell crafted a rug designed as a fish - it was this accomplishment that landed her in "A Celebration of Hand-Hooked Rugs." Using an Oxford punch needle and wool rug yarn, she spent two weeks punching a 6-foot-long and 2-foot-tall rug in the shape of a fish. This concept of a shaped rug was an innovative departure from the traditional square, rectangular and circular styles.

Sue Buswell, whose work was honored in a book on hand-hooked rugs, is hard at work on one of her rugs.

Her success is somewhat surprising given her circumstances. Her only formal training in the craft was a rug hooking class that she took in 1992 at the Swinboum School of Domestic Arts in Newport, R.I. For the most part, Buswell has been her own teacher, relying on books and instructional manuals for guidance. She points to Amy Oxford and Gloria Crouse, two professional rug hookers, as key influences and teachers.

In terms of artistic experience, "I had absolutely nothing", Buswell claims, "but I had always been interested in fiber art. This craft is so forgiving that you can teach yourself."

This accessibility to novices was an aspect of rug hooking that appealed to Buswell. Between the demands of the building restoration business that she and her husband own, and raising three children, her free time is limited. The flexibility of the craft suited her.

"I found it very appealing as a mother," she says.

Rug hooking also appeals to her in that it allows escape from her frantic schedule.

"It's my unwinding," Buswell comments, "a couple of hours of working on a rug, and everything just looks better ... it's a nice form of relaxation and it's a nice way to meet people."

Buswell also enjoys the craft because of its New England origins. A five-and-a-half-year Cohasset resident, she appreciates the fact that rug hooking is largely an American - particularly northeast American - craft. Although an ancient art, rug hooking peaked at popularity in mid-19th century New England.

Although her reasons for enjoying the craft are varied, they manifest themselves in a single way: she is a prolific rug hooker. She makes 12 rugs a year. Buswell hopes that this productivity will eventually evolve. "I'm trying to open my own business and sell my rugs," she says. The goal of her young company, Barefoot Rugs, is to celebrate events of life via creating custom made rugs.

"You can have a rug to commemorate an event, a house, a neighborhood, a pet, something that people identify with themselves. And these rugs will last 100 years," Buswell says.

Buswell's own rugs honor important events in her life - such as a rug she made celebrating her young daughter's graduation - but they also represent mere artistical whims. Other designs have included a bear, flowers and a pumpkin. All of her designs are her own; she fills a sketch book with ideas for new rug subjects and designs.

These rough sketches are eventually drawn onto cotton monks cloth, the rug's base ("I use invisible ink", Buswell notes). When the design is firmly established, Buswell chooses colors for the finished product. She uses Halcyon yarn, because of the material's colored variety. Finally, using a punch needle, she threads the yarn into her picture.

"The process is like sculpting wood. You have to feel as you go along," Buswell says.

After two weeks to a month of this process, the rug is complete. Finished rugs take on a variety of forms. "You can take it as far as you want to. You can do something very simple and primitive, or something intricate and artistic," Buswell says.

The relatively novice craftswoman has propelled herself into the midst of some of America's finest rug hookers.

Buswell comments, "There are so many talented people out there - I didn't expect it. It was exciting for me to be included in the book."

Students learn about drunk driving perils

Students drive around the track in the St. Anthony's Church parking lot in a car programmed to simulate drunk-driving conditions.

By Robert Ziff
CORRESPONDENT

Tuesday the parking lot of St. Anthony's Church was turned into a driving course where Cohasset students from grades seven through 12 either drove or were a passenger in a 1996 Dodge/Plymouth Neon modified to respond as though the driver was intoxicated.

The atmosphere was festive although the subject was deadly serious because over 30 percent of all deaths of people ages 15 to 20 are a result of motor vehicle accidents. Two out of five of these deaths result from drunk driving.

> "It demonstrates what people are like on the roads after they've been drinking, and now I know what to watch out for. It was a good overall experience."
> — KYLE WHITELEY, COHASSET HIGH SENIOR.

In 1996 17,126 people died in alcohol related accidents, that's about one every 30 seconds. The Cohasset students were bused over from the school in shifts to participate.

The event, sponsored by the Chrysler corporation in conjunction with Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD), the Cohasset Police Department, and Weber Dodge in Hingham was designed to allow high school students to experience the dangers of drunk driving without ever taking a sip of alcohol.

The specially equipped car with a computer was programmed with the students' weight and a hypothetical number of drinks the student had consumed. As a result the steering and braking responses were delayed producing an effect similar to the slowed mental and physical responses of a driver under the influence of alcohol. With these impaired abilities, the drivers attempted to make their way around the obstacle course without hitting the orange cones or the pedestrian figures that pop up along the way. Two laps were made by each driver around the track, the first with the car operating normally and the second with the computer turned on.

With a wailing siren and flashing lights, Officers Lisa Matos and Richard Yocum from Cohasset Police Department periodically would pull over the swerving, cone-hitting drivers and have them step out of the car and perform field sobriety tests.

Seventeen-year-old Andrew Ross, a Cohasset High School senior who has had his license for about eight months hit at least ten cones as well as a pedestrian, said that the experience was educational as well as eye opening for him.

The Neon Drunk Driving Simulator and its crew travel all over the country giving these demonstrations. This year they will visit over 250 schools in over 200 towns and cities including Rockland High, Hull High and Norwell High as well as South Shore Vo-Tech.

There is no way to determine how many young lives this program has and will save but according to Mike Gill, the director of health education in Cohasset schools, one of those responsible for putting this event together, "even if it saves just one it is well worth the time and effort."

Kyle Whiteley, another 17-year-old high school senior said that his second time around the track was frightening. He hit about five cones and said that it was as though the power steering had turned off and the breaks were failing.

"It demonstrates what people are like on the roads after they've been drinking," Kyle said, "and now I know what to watch out for. It was a good overall experience."

Since its inception in 1988 the drunk driving simulator has made close to 1,100 appearances. During that time over 230,000 people have participated in the program and approximately 2.4 million have been exposed to it. The program has been featured on national television shows including Good Morning America, 48 Hours, Today, Geraldo, CNN, MTV's Like We Care, and many others.

Youths, especially males, outnumber older people in fatal car crashes. 5,233 drivers aged 15 to 20 died in alcohol-related crashes in 1996.

COHASSET MARINER

Skippers hope for Homecoming glory

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

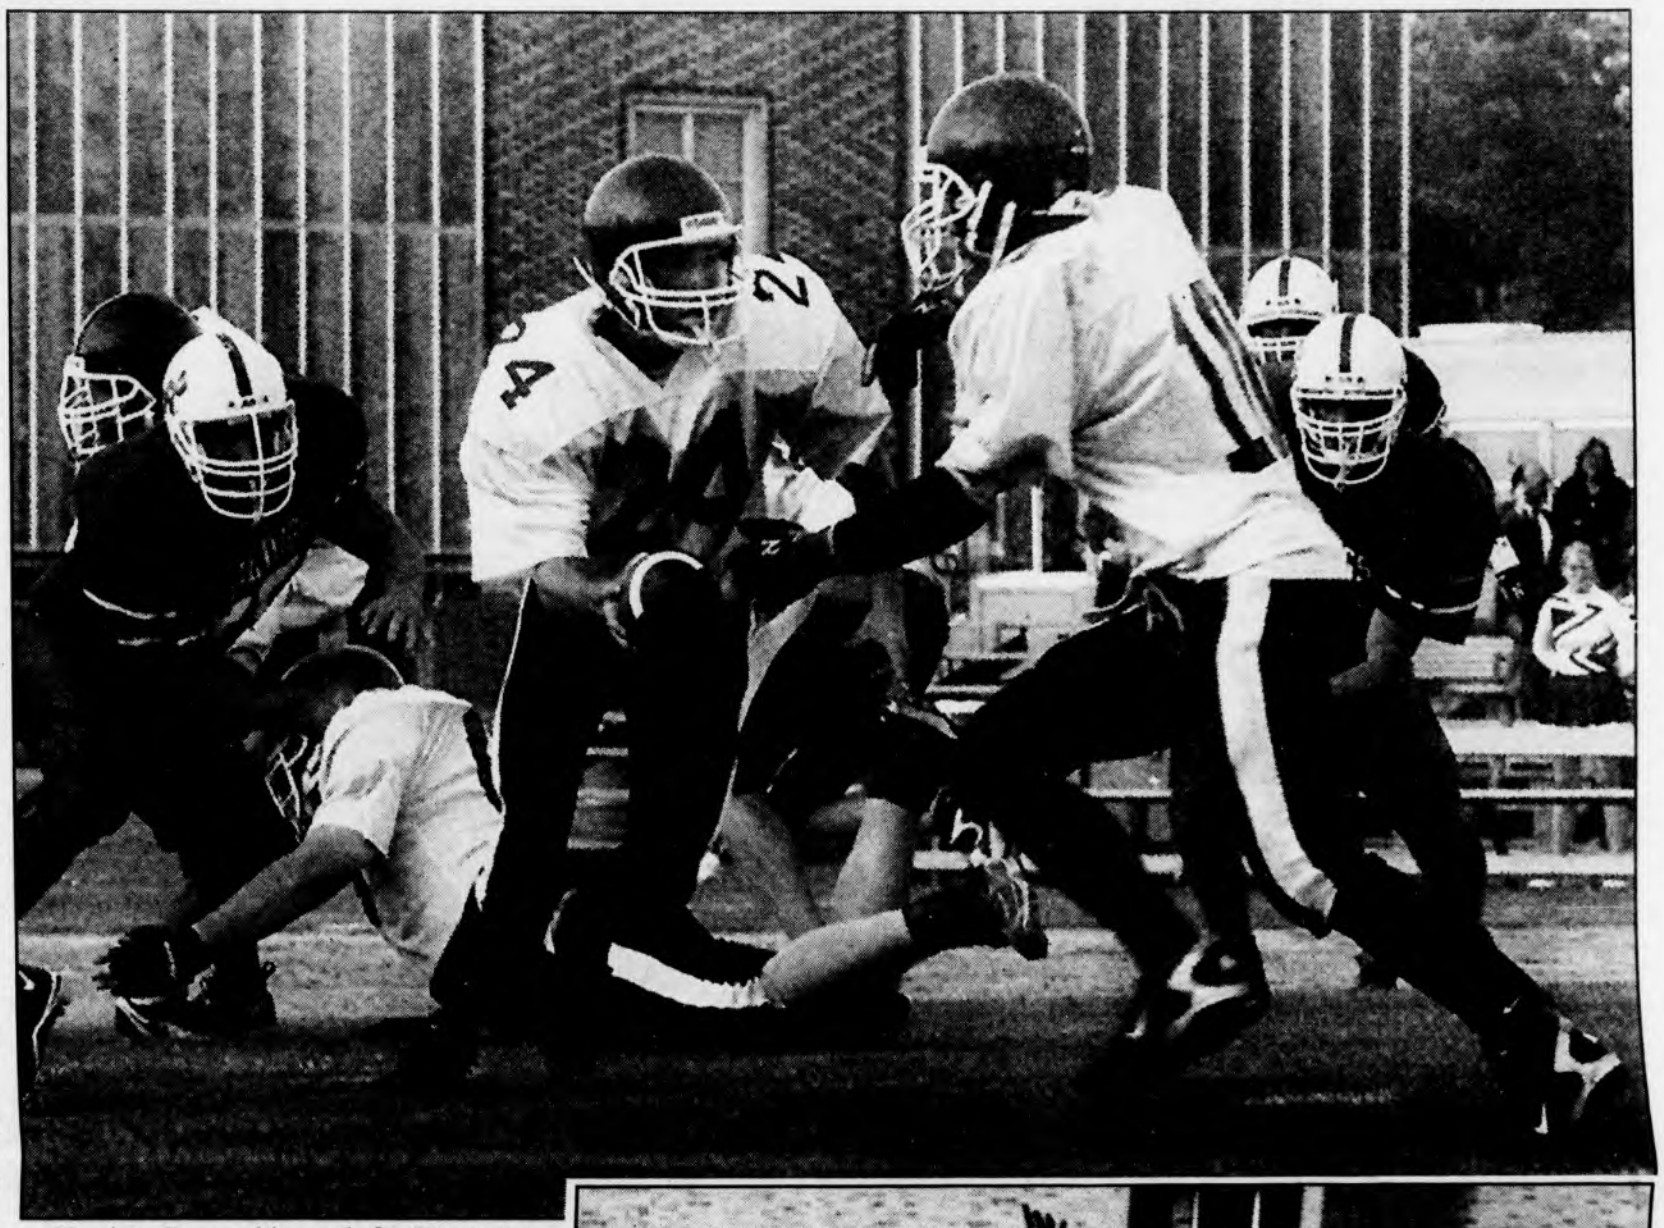
Missing six starters, including starting guard and linebacker Luke Caldwell, starting fullback and cornerback Andy Hamilton, starting quarterback and safety Pat Hurley, starting guard John Kasameyer, starting defensive back Joe Pergola, and starting linebacker Adam Sasso, the Cohasset Skippers sent a ragtag team out onto the field against the Rockland Bulldogs.

Rockland, the fifth ranked team in the state, fought hard for their scores in the first half, then cruised in the third quarter, finally triumphing 35-0 on their home field.

Due to radical realignment occurring in southeastern Massachusetts high school sports, the Bulldogs have for one year shifted into the Division 3 South Shore League, from their post last year in Division 2.

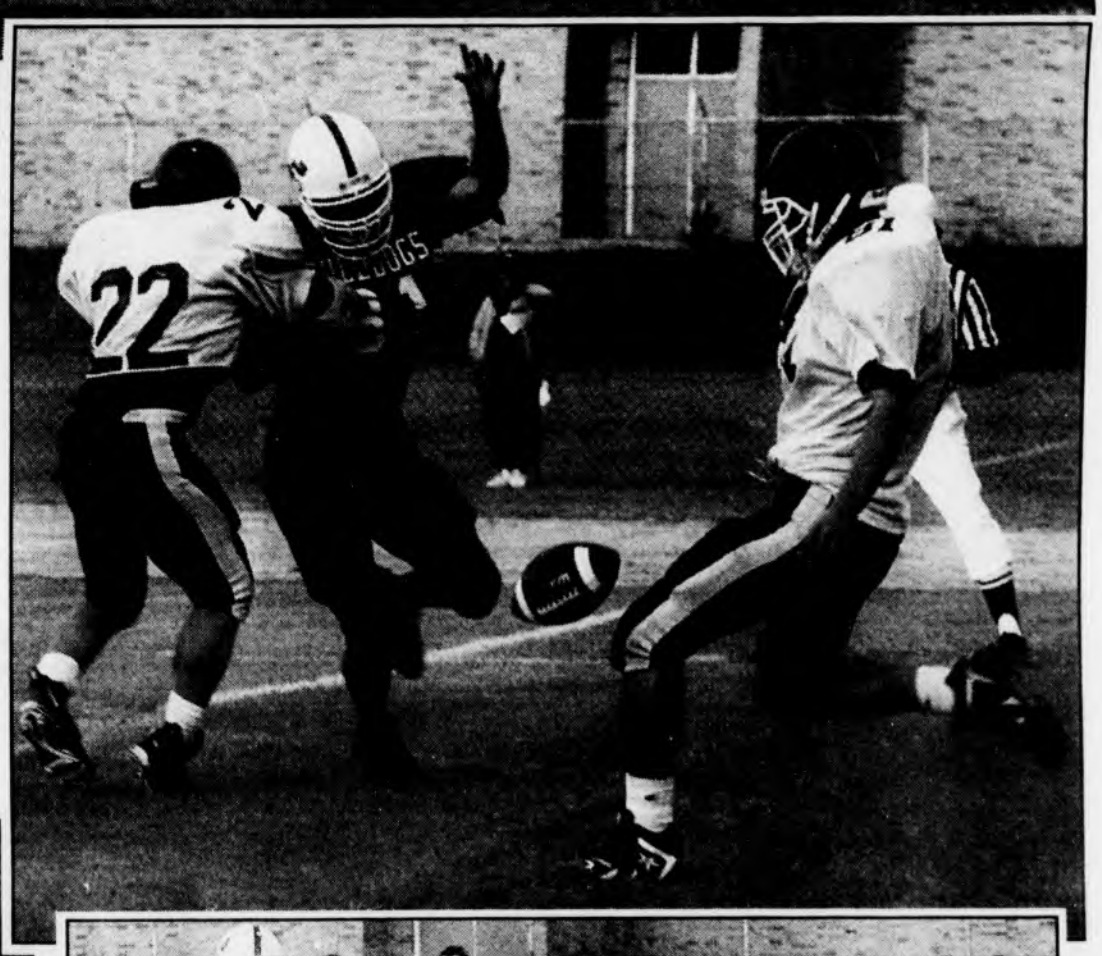
Next year, they will move back into Division 2, completing the restructuring. However, this year, the Skippers had the bad luck to run into them at the wrong time.

A good first quarter defense, led by Jamie Buick, James Edgeston, and Justin Golden, held the Bulldogs to seven points. Edgeston and fellow noseguard Darryl Jones clogged up the middle of the field, and Rockland was forced to pass and run outside the tackles.



The score of 7-0 held until the middle of the second quarter, when the Bulldogs managed to push across another touchdown. Despite the gutsy effort of second-string quarterback Ben Ketchum and the hard running of Raheem Shepard, the Skippers could not move the ball, and much of the burden fell to the defense.

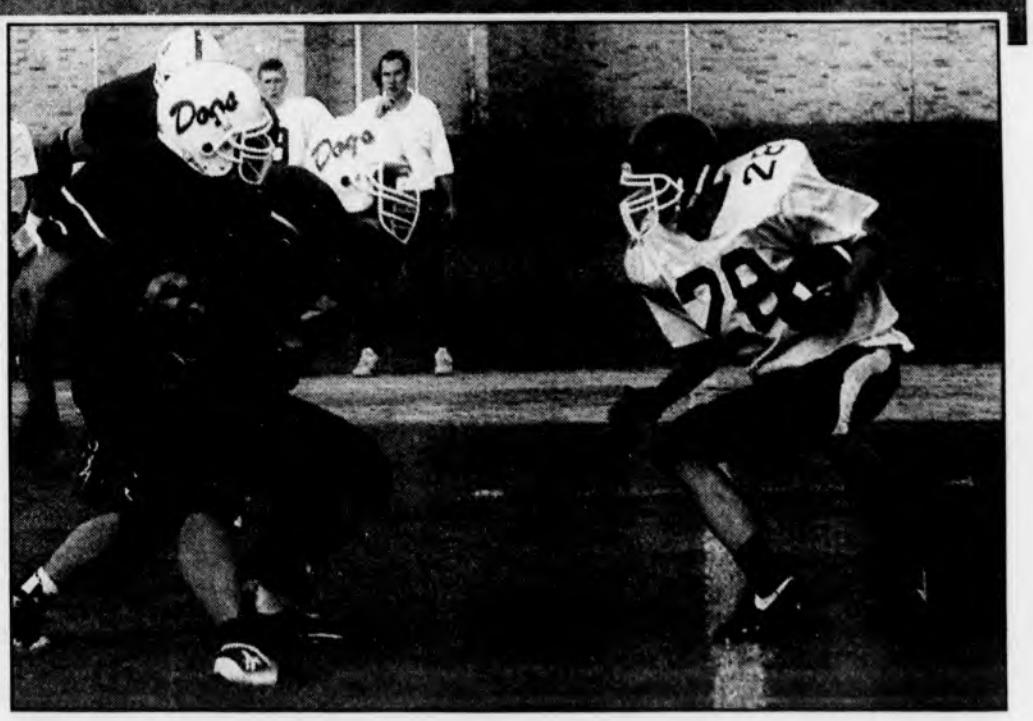
Indeed, it looked as if the Skippers would hold Rockland to two first-half touchdowns. However, with two ticks left on the clock, the Bulldogs squeezed off one last play, a 30-yard Hail Mary, which fell into Rockland hands for the TD, making it 21-0 at the half.



Deflated by injuries, the half-ending touchdown, and the fact that they were playing a clearly better team, Cohasset came out flat in the second half.

Rockland, behind their powerful offensive line and the strong running of Bobby Flynn, struck twice quickly in the second half. Cohasset's poor tackling technique was evident on one particular play, when Flynn scored on a long run after being touched by seven Cohasset defenders.

The home team scored twice in the third, but Rockland's coach showed class and pulled his starters. Cohasset still could not mount an offensive attack, and the Skippers were held scoreless.



Hosting Carver this week for Homecoming, the Skippers should put forth a better showing. With Caldwell, the only one of the starters even questionable for this week's game, the squad could be at full force for the first time in three games. More spirited practices this week and a feeling of desperation for a win should produce a new looking Cohasset squad Friday night at 6 p.m.

Tourney dreams coming down to the wire

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

A pair of important wins last week against Notre Dame (2-0) and Norwell (4-0) have brought dreams of an invitation to the state tournament a little closer for the Cinderella CHS field hockey squad.

It's not going to be easy, said head coach Debby Bostwick, but four points in their remaining four games will make it happen for the 5-5-2 squad.

The final drive for the state tourney began Wednesday with a home game against Scituate and will see the Skippers then take on South Shore League leader Hanover, travel to Carver (10/18) and finish the year at home against East Bridgewater on Monday at 3 p.m.

With three very winable games in that group, a trip to the tourney for the first time in three years has worked its way from a dream to a very real possibility.

"These girls deserve it," said Bostwick. "They've worked hard to get where we are and are really sky high about having a chance to go to the tournament. The attitude around here has just been tremendous."

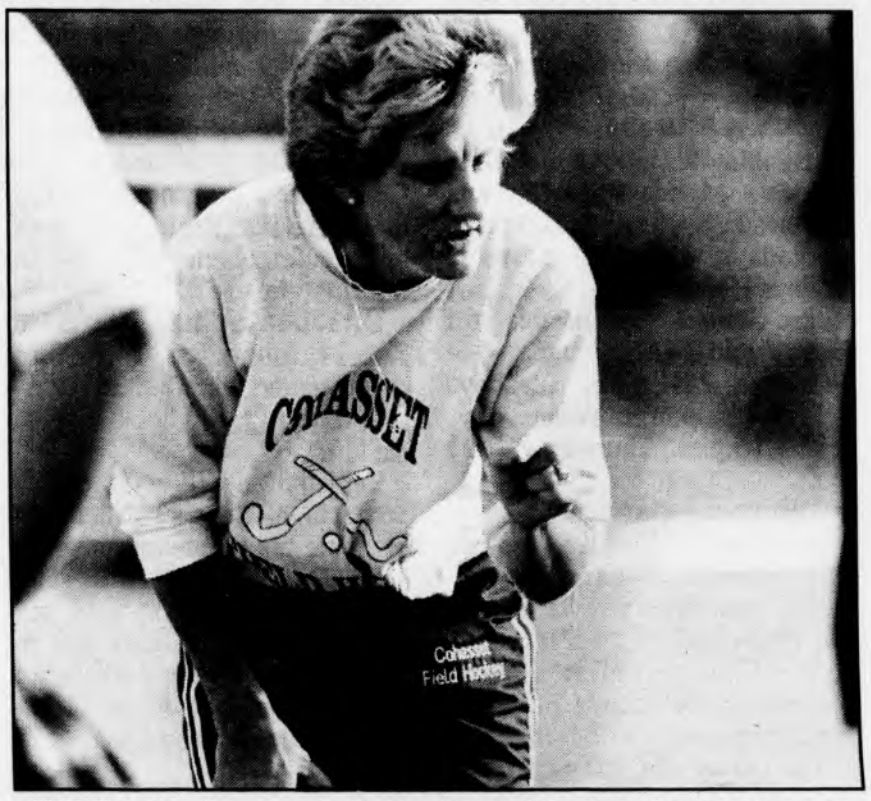
Defense wins championships, and it also was the key to the big wins last week. Goaltender Melissa Rosano only faced one shot in the two wins while playing behind a strong defensive performance from co-captains Alia Ashfar and Katie Buckley, Katie Devine and Lauren Dooley.

"They've played strong and together as a unit," said Bostwick. "When teams get the ball in our end they're doing the right thing and clearing to the wings and letting our speedy forwards take it from there."

Against Notre Dame, forward Meaghan Connelly opened the scoring off a scuffle in front of the net that saw the Notre Dame goalie make a series of nice saves before finally being beaten.

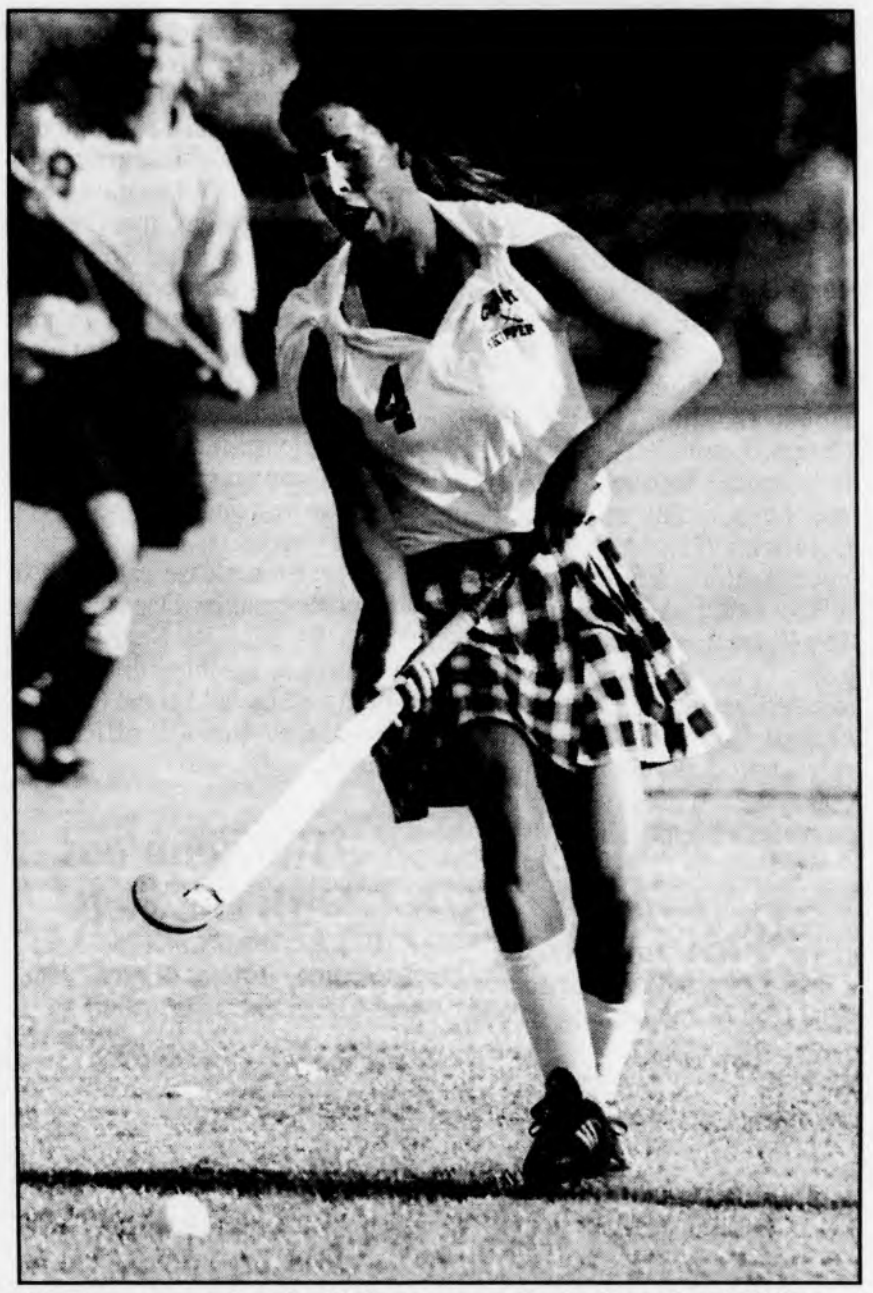
After a halftime pep talk from Bostwick, Buckley shed her defensive specialist tag and put in her first goal of the year, with an assist going to Kristen Reynolds off a corner shot.

"We came up with a good overall effort," said Bostwick. "Andi Shaughnessy and Maggie O'Conner came off the bench with big games."



The team shook off a series of bad games they have had at Norwell to come away with the win.

"We always seem to have problems with their field and the one in East Bridgewater," explained Bostwick. "We couldn't afford to come out slow against Norwell and I told them so before the game."



Whatever Bostwick said seemed to work as after a first period goal by Connolly, the Lady Skippers erupted for three goals (Laura Dooley (2) and Shaughnessy) on their way to their largest goal output of the year in the 4-0 win.

The team has scored 18 goals this season and has already surpassed last year's total of 4 wins.

Although fan support has been great this year, Bostwick said the team could use all the help they can get in their final home game against East Bridgewater on Monday at 3 p.m., which very well may decide the state tourney bid. "Our fans have been great, but I don't think a lot of people know that we are on the verge of getting into the state tournament," said Bostwick. "The girls would really love the community to come out and show their support for this team."

CHS field hockey coach Debby Bostwick gives her team a pep talk.

Senior co-captain Alia Afshar moves the ball up the field in a recent victory against Notre Dame. The Lady Skippers need two wins in their last four games to make the state tournament.

Collecting the best of the Massachusetts landscape

Trustees of Reservations own 77 properties

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Their mission can be stated simply. Nonetheless, the Trustees of the Reservations shoulder an immense undertaking. As Thomas Foster put it, "Much as an art museum collects the best works of art, the Trustees of the Reservations collect the best of the Massachusetts landscape."

Foster is the director of the land trust's Southeast Regional Office in Canton. Recently, his office played a pivotal role in the public's acquisition of Turkey Hill, 50 undeveloped acres with a panoramic view of the Atlantic and Boston Harbor. (see related story)

The significant achievement, according to Mario Romania, of the Hingham Conservation Commission, was not the first time the land trust has proved an able partner for the South Shore communities. Romania said the Trustees have been a big part of the effort to protect open space here, with responsibility for managing a band of green spaces between Wompatuck State Park and World's End.

"Hingham and Cohasset were just lucky to have their help with the Turkey Hill purchase," Romania said.

Foster acknowledged the land trust is no stranger to the local community. Though World's End is probably the most popular and best known of the South Shore holdings, with about 60,000 visitors every year, it is by no means the only foundation property in the area. The Trustees also protect the Whitney and Thayer Woods in Cohasset and in Hingham, as well as the Two Mile Reservation on the banks of the North River in Marshfield, and the 160-acre Norris Reservation in Norwell, with another half mile fronting the North, which is the only officially "scenic" river in Massachusetts, he said.

Moreover, they are on track to inherit the 82-acre Weir River Farm, located next to Turkey Hill, from artist Polly Thayer Starr. She has named the foundation in her will.

> "Sometimes I take a busman's holiday and go for a walk at World's End. I'm constantly amazed at how beautiful it is."
> — TOM FOSTER, TRUSTEES OF RESERVATIONS.

Yet because the Trustees, unlike the Audubon Society, seldom use their funds to promote public education at their properties, many people are unaware of their purpose, Foster said.

This weekend, however, naturalist Meg Moore will lead a guided tour of World's End. The tour, scheduled for Sunday from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m., will relate the story of the peninsula, which is actually two glacial drumlins connected by a beach.

Saved from development three separate times, the 251-acre spot was once a private park. (Its roads were designed by Frederick Law Olmstead, the landscape architect who also designed Central Park in New York City.) Later, World's End was a prospective site for two enterprises, the United Nations headquarters in 1945 and in 1965 a nuclear power plant proposed by Boston Edison and the New England Electric System but ultimately built in Plymouth. A coalition finally saved World's End in 1967 for the public's enjoyment, and once again the Trustees played a key role.

"We do try to create an awareness of the ecology and what it takes to care for these properties," Foster said.

For the record, the Trustees, the first private land trust in the world, were established in 1891 by landscape architect Charles Eliot, the son of a Harvard University president. Eliot was troubled by the push towards development in Boston and formed a private organization to "protect beautiful and historic places for public enjoyment," Foster said.

After more than 100 years of existence, the membership has stuck to Eliot's vision. Currently, the organization owns 77 properties, all in Massachusetts, including the Old Manse, the historic Concord house that figured in the writings of American author Nathaniel Hawthorne and has spawned numerous other preservation societies, serving as a model for the British National Trust.

Moreover, the Trustees, Foster said, deal only with outstanding properties which are notable either for beauty, historic significance or ecological importance.

Foster thinks of each one as a masterpiece.

"Sometimes I take a busman's holiday and go for a walk at World's End," he said. "I'm constantly amazed at how beautiful it is."

Though the Trustees of the Reservations is a private group, membership is open to the public. People who want to find out more should call the Canton office at 821-2977, Foster said.

Trustees sponsor guided tour of World's End

Ranger Gail Parks guards the entrance to World's End. This weekend naturalist Meg Moore will lead a guided tour Sunday from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. of the peninsula, which is actually two glacial drumlins connected by a beach.

The Trustees of Reservations has announced that a guided tour of World's End will be held from 1:30 to 3 p.m., Sunday, Oct. 19.

Join naturalist Meg Moore as she leads this guided tour and tells the story of World's End - its land and its people.

Members of The Trustees of Reservations will be admitted free, non-members must pay the $4 entrance fee.

World's End, a peninsula of two glacial drumlins joined by a narrow beach of rough sand, divides Hingham Bay and the historic Weir River. For more than a century, this 251-acre property has been admired for its dramatic topography and magnificent landscaping.

Its winding, tree-lined roadways were designed by famed landscape architect Frederick Law Olmstead in 1890, as part of a proposal to develop World's End as a "planned community" of more than 150 homes. Thankfully, the proposal never came to pass, and the land was farmed and maintained by its owners as a private park. In 1967, through an extraordinary public and private effort, World's End was saved from development and The Trustees were able to purchase the property and preserve it in perpetuity.

Today, World's End with its quiet walks and panoramic ocean views, offers visitors opportunities for a wide range of activities, such as jogging, horseback riding, cross-country skiing, nature study and photography.

To reach World's End, follow Summer Street from the rotary at Hingham Harbor 1/4 mile to the first set of traffic lights and turn left onto Martin's Lane. Follow Martin's Lane 1/4 mile to its end where the entrance to World's End is located.

For more information, call Mary Campbell at The Trustees' Southeast Regional office, (781) 821-2977.

Step-parenting program

The Social Service League of Cohasset will present a free program entitled, "Step-Parenting: How to Live with Other Peoples' Children" on Thursday, Oct. 16 from 7:30-9 p.m. at the Unitarian Church Parish House, 23 North Main St. In this free program, Judy Osborne, LMFT, LMHC, author of "Stepfamilies-The Restructuring Process" and director of Stepfamilies Associates in Brookline, will address the many challenges and rewards of this common family structure. Refreshments will be served. For more information call 383-0771.

Turkey Hill grand opening is slated for Nov. 1

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Turkey Hill is in the news again.

The coastal drumlin, which was made by glaciers, is an open space long known both for geologic and historic value. During the War of 1812, it served local residents as an observation post to witness a naval battle off the Scituate coast and still provides a panoramic vista of World's End and Boston Harbor.

But now the property is to be officially opened to the public Nov. 1, the coalition formed to preserve the site has announced.

A 12-3 p.m. "bring your own" picnic celebration has been scheduled opening day to welcome visitors. Beverages and desserts are free. Parking is off Turkey Hill Lane. The jam-packed afternoon of events is slated to include story telling, hayrides, nature walks and live music. (Rain date is Nov. 2.)

The 50-acres of undeveloped hilltop land, which straddles the Hingham and Cohasset border, is viewed as another jewel in the "green belt" which links the 800-acre Whitney and Thayer Woods and the 2,900-acre Wompatuck State Park. It was purchased this past May with funds raised from both public and private sources after the Trustees of the Reservations, a non-profit land trust which claims over 20,000 acres of open space and historic properties statewide, reached an agreement with then owners, the heirs of Joseph Saponaro, to buy Turkey Hill for $810,000, a price about $100,000 lower than the value.

Since May, several improvements to the property have been undertaken, starting with an approved landscape plan. The former Nike missile site has been dismantled, though one building was saved for historic interest. Finally, the Turkey Hill farmhouse is under renovation, and new parking lots and public trails are being constructed.

The Trustees of the Reservations are managing the site, although the two towns actually own Turkey Hill jointly. Both town meetings approved spending to help buy the property with $164,500 coming for the 30 acres on the Hingham side of the town line and $125,000 for the 20 acres in Cohasset. The balance came from donations and from funds earmarked by the Trustees, the Cohasset Conservation Trust and the Hingham Land Conservation Trust, but a timely $450,000 state grant from the Department of Environmental Affairs put the deal over.

Trusts & estates: What to do if a trustee is not trustworthy

By Amy K. Barrett & Claire Poole
Worth Magazine

Diantha Schierloch knows how hard it can be to fire the overseer of a trust fund – she spent more than $100,000 to oust one of the trustees of the $800,000 estate left to her by her husband.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

Her case demonstrates the hassle involved when a beneficiary of a trust gets rid of an unsuitable trustee.

Laws protect the trustee as long as he obeys the duties that the founder of the trust has entrusted to him. The trustee's obligation is foremost to the terms of the trust and secondarily to the beneficiary.

But, thankfully, there are steps you can take if the trustee – whether it be a bank, law firm or an individual – fails to obey the terms laid out by the grantor of your trust.

If your trust doesn't have a removal clause, look to see if it has an ancillary-fee agreement that will allow you to remove a trustee if he jacks up his fees without justified costs and without the permission of the beneficiary.

In Schierloch's case, she did what many dissatisfied beneficiaries are forced to do; she went to court. After her husband's death in 1989, the trustees of his estate, her husband's friend Earl Anderson and her stepson Derek Schierloch, stopped sending her regular payments of $3,000 a month, income she depended on to cover her living expenses. Instead, they tried to freeze her out of her husband's estate, sending money in dribs and drabs with no consistency.

After much angst and suffering for Schierloch (she was forced to use up her own savings), a New Hampshire court found the two trustees unfit to manage the fund. And Schierloch started receiving monthly checks soon thereafter.

Schierloch's case may be an extreme one. But it is not an uncommon problem, says Joshua Rubenstein, an attorney at New York law firm Rosenman & Colin. "I recently spoke at the Institute for Private Investors, and 25 percent of the questions involved how to get rid of a trustee you don't like."

Part of the difficulty comes from the fact that a beneficiary cannot actually fire a trustee. Instead, she has to prove in court that the trustee is unfit to manage the fund's assets – a lot more trouble than, say, giving your accountant the ax.

"As a general rule hostility is not enough. You have to have a good reason for getting rid of a trustee," says Charles Rounds, law professor at Suffolk University and author of Trustee's Handbook.

A beneficiary can take action, though, if a trustee shirks his obligations to the trust; if he thwarts the purpose of a trust, fails to account for investments, pays himself an excessive or unauthorized amount, shows signs of insanity or habitual drunkenness or fails in other ways to obey the terms of the trust.

(Mr. Schierloch, for example, specified in the trust document that he wanted his wife to receive income from the trust, so a failure to send her the money was a breach of contract).

The first step in getting rid of a trustee, says Standish Smith, founder of Heirs Inc., a group in Villanova, Penn., that helps people set up trusts, is to find out if the trust has a trustee-removal clause – a feature which allows you to settle your case outside of court.

With the removal clause, the burden of proof still lies in the beneficiary's hands, however. So beneficiaries should document their complaints thoroughly. But the clause will save them money and time normally spent in court.

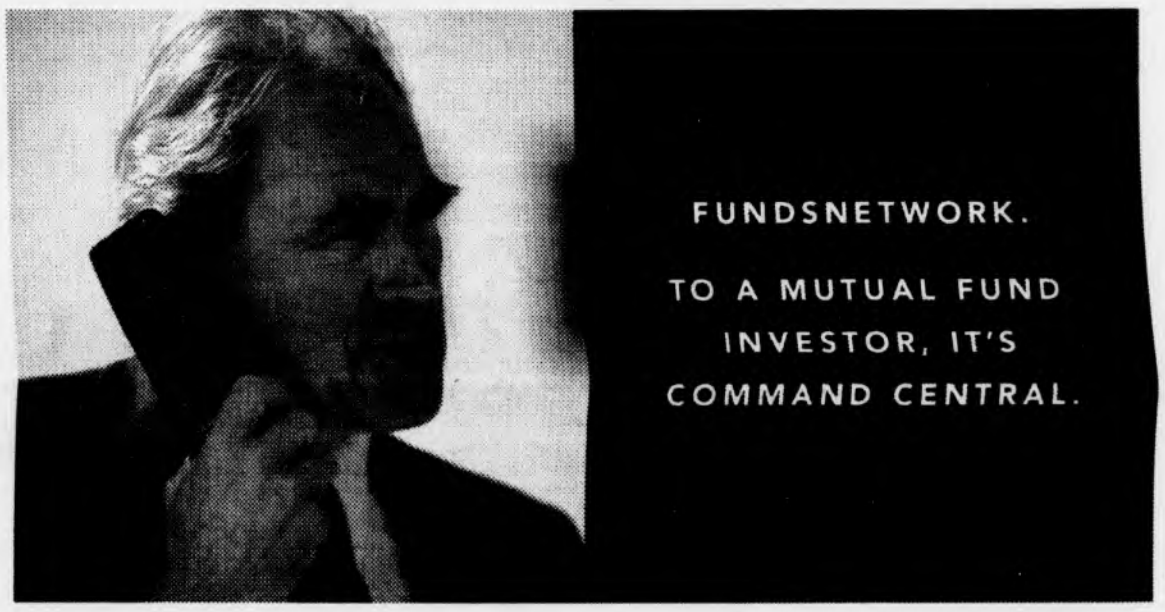
If your trust doesn't have a removal clause, look to see if it has an ancillary-fee agreement that will allow you to remove a trustee if he jacks up his fees without justified costs and without the permission of the beneficiary.

If your trust lacks both of these features, then you may want to make some demands of your trustee, with hopes that he will improve or voluntarily resign, says Smith. For instance, a beneficiary can require that a trustee document the reason for every investment transaction, which would require a lot of tedious paperwork.

Another sure fire way to make a trustee squirm is to ask him not to deduct his fees from the trust. Instead, insist that you mail him checks for his services after you receive your trust payments.

If your trustee is a bank or a law firm, they may be willing to retire from their trustee office for a fee – usually somewhere between 0.5 percent and 2 percent of the fund's assets. If a bank refuses to step down as trustee, then start a letter-writing campaign. Write to the person who directly oversees your trust, his boss, the chairman of the bank and anyone else who will listen. You should first try to resolve trust problems through negotiation. Of course, if your attempts fall flat, you will probably have to take the bank to court.

While banks tend to be popular corporate trustees, quite a few trusts in Massachusetts are managed by law firms (a practice apparently borne out of fortunes made in shipping and textiles earlier in the century.) "A lot of Massachusetts law firms serve as trustees," says Smith. "But we [at Heirs] don't think that lawyers make good trustees."



The danger of this arrangement is that by combining the role of lawyer and trustee, the necessary set of checks of balances are removed. Normally, a trust's lawyer can keep an eye on a trustee's activities and vice versa.

"Having a lawyer as a trustee is somewhat of a conflict of interest," says Round. And while federal and local government agencies monitor how banks charge fees for trusts, no one scrutinizes that practice for law firms – unless they end up in court, he says.

Of course, not all trustees are out to take advantage of beneficiaries. Indeed, trustees are an integral part of operating a trust. They do the trust's tax returns, monitor investments, keep abreast of changes in laws, shoulder the liability and do a lot of paperwork. It is when they neglect those responsibilities that a beneficiary should take action.

With FundsNetwork, control means choices. You have access to over 800 four- and five-star funds.[1] And only with FundsNetwork can you get Fidelity funds without paying a transaction fee.[2] This combination of choice and value is why SmartMoney magazine rated Fidelity "#1 mutual fund provider."[3]

Control also means convenience. With FundsNetwork, you can access your account by phone or online 24 hours a day. And for online investors, there's Fund Evaluator, the new research tool that lets you analyze funds according to your own needs.

To get started, call us today or visit our Web site. Soon, you'll experience what every investor wants, complete control.

Source: Morningstar data as of 9/30/97 and includes all equity and bond funds tracked by Morningstar. Highly rated funds were defined as those funds that have a 4- or 5-star overall Morningstar rating. FundsNetwork offers access to 575 4-star and 253 5-star rated funds out of 2,914 funds as of 9/30/97. Morningstar equity fund universe includes domestic stock funds (which included, but were not limited to, growth and income, and equity income objectives), international stock funds, and specialty funds. Morningstar bond fund universe includes both taxable and non-taxable bond funds. Morningstar proprietary ratings reflect historical risk-adjusted performance as of 9/30/97. The ratings are subject to change every month. Morningstar ratings are calculated from a fund's 3-, 5- and 10-year average annual returns in excess of 90-day Treasury, including loads, if appropriate, and a risk factor that reflects performance below the 90-day Treasury. Of all funds in each category: 10% rate 5-stars from Morningstar, 22.5% rate 4-stars, and 35% rate 3-stars. [2]All fees described in the funds' prospectuses still apply. 'Very unusual modern house' added to National Register

The Josephine M. Hagerty House, designed by architect Walter Gropius, has been listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

From the day of its completion in 1939, the Gropius House has spawned its share of architecture critics as well as admirers. Finally, almost 60 years after one of the first observers said it looked like an egg-crate, a timeless question — "But, is it art?" — has been answered both by the state and the nation's ultimate authorities.

Indeed, it is a national treasure, according to the Massachusetts Historical Commission, the Department of the Interior and the National Parks Service which in June listed the house with the flat roof on the National Register of Historic Places.

The news has circulated quietly, as is perhaps consistent with the house's peaceful and secluded surroundings. Until, this week, neighbor and former Gropius House resident Mary Hagerty was unaware this new laurel had been accorded to the house her husband's mother commissioned and which will now forever bear her name.

Though officially as the Josephine M. Hagerty House of 357 Atlantic Avenue, the current owner Dr. Richard Anderson, who did know about the decision, spoke softly when he said he too was pleased but wanted to maintain his privacy at home.

"I'm not conducting house tours," Anderson said, although he allowed the house, which is poised on a ledge near Kimball's Point, is exciting to live in.

"It's like living in a houseboat," Anderson said. He was not being whimsical.

"The ocean was in the living room," he recalled one time when waves, churned up by the "No-Name" Storm crashed through the windows.

Moreover, that was not the first time nature came inside, according to Hagerty.

Hagerty and her husba[redacted] in the house when they we[redacted] lyweds while their home next door to Gropius House was being winterized.

"There's nothing cozy about it," she admitted, although she still has affection for the house she still sees every day from her back yard and said the spot was quiet and peaceful and in the summers, a delight.

The push to get the house on the official government list was mounted by the local historical commission. David Wadsworth, who wrote up the initial report about the house, said it was a "very unusual modern house" in its day when most new architecture followed traditional lines. This architecture, Wadsworth said, was very untraditional.

"That is part of its historic value," he said.

As practically everyone by now knows, the building was designed by the architects who became known for the Bauhaus or International Style.

Walter Gropius, the principal architect, and Marcel Breuer fled Germany in 1928 when Hitler came to power and the Nazis made the Bauhaus Institute a target, due to "non-conformist ideas." In 1937 Gropius accepted a teaching position at the Harvard School of Design where he met a student John Hagerty. Hagerty's mother Josephine was about to build a summer house in Cohasset and because Hagerty was impressed with Gropius, he suggested the teacher take on the design.

For Gropius, the design remained paramount to the frustration and occasional amusement of Hagerty. In one article, Hagerty wrote about the day he tried out a chair in his new study, only to discover Gropius had traded the ocean view, Hagerty expected to enjoy, to maintain a consistent height between the band of windows around the house and the floor.

Eventually, Gropius and Hagerty had a falling out over changes Hagerty made to the design after 10 years of living with leaks and rust. Gropius, Hagerty said, had ignored the realities of wind and weather at the site, sacrificing practicality to design.

Nonetheless, the changes, in Wadsworth's view, did not diminish the quality of the house as an example of International Style architecture.

The Cohasset house was the second Gropius house built in America and followed the construction of the architect's own residence in Lincoln. But in its adaptation to the site on the New England coast, the Cohasset Gropius House also is important, Wadsworth wrote, as "a unique adaptation of the International Style to the rockbound coast of New England.

Cohasset now has a total of four National Register listings. The others are the Cohasset Common Historic District, Government Island and the Caleb Lothrup House at 14 Summer St., headquarters of the Cohasset Historical Society.

Fire boxes will soon be part of town's history

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Since about 1912, one of the easiest ways to report a fire has been to pull the little white lever on one of the more than 100 pole-mounted fire boxes in town. Alarm boxes were connected directly to the fire station. Fire-fighters would respond to the box location, and look for the fire or emergency.

But times change, and in the age of cellular telephones, commercial alarm services and Enhanced-911 (E-911) fire boxes have quickly become obsolete.

Officially known as the "municipal fire alarm telegraph system," the pole mounted boxes and master boxes in commercial buildings will all be deactivated by no later than June, 1998, when Fire Alarm Superintendent Steve Wigmore plans to retire.

Letters have already gone out to commercial businesses in town announcing that all master boxes will be deactivated on Nov. 15. Companies have until that

One year old Sex Offender Registry remains flawed, incomplete, poll finds

Mark Goldman appeared to be just a petty criminal with a string of nuisance arrests for vandalism and other minor crimes.

So it seemed appropriate for Melrose police to order him to cut grass at the Ripley Elementary School as part of the community service he was required to perform after his most recent run-in with the law.

A Special Report

That sentence seemed appropriate - except for one small detail.

Goldman had been convicted of open and gross lewdness in Malden, which put him on that town's list of registered sex offenders.

But it wasn't until a woman who lived across the street

Police wait for state to classify sex offenders

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Under the requirements of a new state law that went into effect last October, the Cohasset Police Department has a registry of five known sex offenders who live in town. All of the offenders are male.

The actual classification of the offenders is the responsibility of the state criminal history systems board, which is reviewing the histories of thousands of convicted sex offenders in the state. They will be placed in one of three categories based on the likelihood of a repeated offense.

Police can't say whether they're dangerous or not because the state hasn't set the criteria yet, according to Det. Lt. Richard Grassie.

Conservation members sought

The conservation commission is seeking two citizens to serve as associate members. Anyone interested should contact chairman Jeffrey Wall or Veneta Roebuck at town hall, 383-9900.

White stripes praised

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the white lines painted along the sides of Forest Avenue to help drivers and pedestrians look "wonderful."

The DPW also painted white lines along one side of Beechwood Road and one side of King Street, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Sullivan raised the issue several weeks ago and said it was a safety matter.

Football game gets high five

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said Friday night football games at Cohasset High School are great family events. He said last Friday's homecoming game was a lot of fun.

"There were a lot of people there, children there and everybody has a great time," he said.

Lights were added to the new athletic field last year enabling the high school to host night games.

Car license approved

Selectmen approved issuing a Class I auto dealers license to Thomas O'Brien of Scituate. O'Brien has purchased the former Autohaus dealership on Route 3A across from Shaw's.

He said he will run a full-service garage there.

"I purchased the property as well as the business," O'Brien said.

Library A/C on hold

Selectmen held off recommending spending more money to air condition the library than initially thought until the references of the sole bidder can be checked out.

Apex Corporation, the only bidder, priced the project at $64,900, about $17,000 more than budgeted.

Patience Towle, chairman of the library trustees, said the trustees urge selectmen to recommend approval of the additional funds if the bidder is qualified.

"We want to go forward," she said.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-9900 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays. Next week, however, selectmen will meet before town meeting gets underway at 7 p.m. in the AV room at the high/middle school.

Treasurer's office open Wednesdays

Treasurer/Collector Joseph Buckley announced the treasurer's office on the second floor of town hall is open Wednesdays.

For the past several years, the office was closed to the public Wednesdays to enable the staff to work without interruption.

(Un)common Cohasset house celebrates its bicenntennial

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

It has long been known as the tiniest house along the Town Common, but this year, there has been another way to set Jim and Patricia Murphy's home apart.

This year, the house at 27 Highland Ave. has been the house with the Christmas candles in the windows.

In fact, the lights have burned all night every night of the year to herald the house's bicentennial, according to Patricia Murphy, a former Cohasset teacher.

It was the couple's dream to be living in the house on its 200th, Murphy said.

"I must have lived here in another life," she said, as she searched for a way to explain how she knew she was home the moment she first saw the house in 1980.

The house was originally a barn built on the site where the town hall now stands but was later converted to a house and moved to its current spot around 1795. It is part of the Town Common district, listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

Yet despite humble beginnings, the house, dubbed the Nina Lincoln house, has continued to grow and change with contemporary times.

"It looks tiny," Murphy acknowledged, but said the doll house looks are deceiving. The building hugs the property line, she said, even shrinking in some corners to small rooms, shaped like a triangle, with almost every inch of land occupied. There are now 12 rooms, due to extensions added by previous owners, but in the process of discovering everything about the house, Murphy found nothing to take away the thrill she first experienced when she first threw open the tiny upstairs window casements and saw the view of the Common.

> "It's a special feeling, especially if you're a teacher and you like history.'
> — PATRICIA MURPHY, HOMEOWNER.

"It's a special feeling, especially if you're a teacher and you like history," Murphy said.

The couple has made some changes to the interior of the 12-room structure, but Murphy is committed to maintaining as much of the house's "integrity" as she can manage.

The process has been something of a compromise, she said.

"We kept the barn roof and horsehair in the ceiling of the master bedroom," she said, though the latter takes some maintenance. Nonetheless, some features had to go. A fireplace and some of the old casings eventually were replaced, but Murphy has also added details that continued ideas, such as an exposed brick wall in the kitchen, which a remnant of an original fireplace suggested. With little more than the two feet of the flue visible, Murphy brought in a mason to build a beehive oven, with "found" old bricks and then extended the brick along the entire wall.

"It's not an authentic bake oven," she conceded, but as a fireplace, it warms the cold northeast corner of the house.

In the kitchen, moreover, Murphy went against conventional wisdom by keeping the wood floor, a soft pine stained almost to the hue of embers.

"It gives the warmth to it," she explained. She also added white contemporary cupboards with maple knobs to brighten the room and repeat the natural look. Next, the texture of the wood floor planks was repeated in exposed maple ceiling beams, actually found items believed to be about 100 years old, which Hingham builder Peter Bickford contributed.

"We're trying to keep it historical," she said but noted the original barn didn't have a kitchen anyway.

Contemporary needs and history collided in a couple of other living areas.

For instance, in 1980 the old living room still contained the original barn's shed-style door (on the far wall beside the fireplace,) and wide, vertical tongue and groove panels. Though charming, there was no suitable place to hang the couple's paintings or display their books and collections. Murphy, with Bickford's help, got to work. The panels and the shelves came down, and the pair adopted the strategy of building bright warm rooms by preserving primarily the most unique features.

The couple, who both hail from New York, have lived in 17 different homes around the world, moving wherever husband Jim, a naval aviator, was stationed, sometimes in Europe but mostly in America and in the South. Both missed the change of seasons, so the return to the New England climate was a homecoming, she said, especially since both had frequently talked about one day owning an old house.

Sewer door opens slightly for Newtonville neighborhood

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The health board, selectmen and a handful of residents ganged up on the sewer commission chairman Monday demanding he extend the sewer district to include a cluster of homes on a private way off Atlantic Avenue.

For more than 90 minutes, Edward "Ted" Guild stood steadfast against attacks from all sides. Guild insisted that detailed documentation on the failing septic systems including causes of the failure and any possible remedies be forthcoming before sewers could be considered for the Newtonville neighborhood.

After being pressed repeatedly, Guild reluctantly agreed to allow Dan Coughlin, an engineer with Tutela Engineering which designed the town's sewer plant upgrade and expansion of the sewer district area, to accompany the town's health agent and an independent engineer on a visit to the eight or nine affected homes. They will investigate the causes of the problem and examine alternatives.

If the three are unanimous that there are no alternative solutions, Guild said he would consider extending the sewer to those homes.

The houses, some of which range in assessed value from the high $300,000s to $600,000s, are in a neighborhood off Atlantic Avenue just outside the sewer district. The houses are surrounded by ledge making septic repairs difficult. There is also concern that the failed systems are polluting the nearby salt marsh and ultimately the inner harbor.

The residents of Newtonville are caught in the proverbial "Catch 22" situation - in which Title V hangs over their heads like a cudgel.

They refuse to have Title V inspections unless they are guaranteed sewer connections if they fail. And the sewer commission has said it won't guarantee sewer connections unless they have Title V inspections. Under Title V, the state environmental code, homeowners have two years to replace or upgrade a failed septic system which can be very expensive.

One Newtonville resident said an estimate to replace her septic system was $50,000.

At this point, only one house, which is for sale, has had a Title V inspection. It failed. Two others are "in the ground water" meaning they would automatically fail - but the homeowners there have not had a Title V inspection and will not allow the health agent to conduct one.

The town has been granted some "advance capacity" of the 300,000 gallons per day in wastewater it will be permitted once the upgraded plant design is complete early next year. The advance capacity was granted after an appeal to the state because the current sewer moratorium was restricting commerce, Couglin explained.

Of that "sewer pool" of 15,000 gallons about 1,800 gallons are not already spoken for. Most of it is going for the new school and other buildings which have been "grandfathered" such as the community center and post office, Guild said.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said the remaining pool should be used to connect the Newtonville homes in light of the declaration of a state-of-emergency there by the board of health. Last summer the health board made the declaration after finding unacceptable levels of fecal coliform at the site.

Sullivan called Monday's joint meeting between selectmen, and representatives from the health board, and sewer commission after an acrimonious Sept. 30 sewer commission meeting reached an impasse on the same matter.

Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said soil tests at 26 Atlantic Ave. revealed a perc rate so slow that any on-site system would require a variance from the Title V code.

An alternative to those conditions is a waterless system which might include a tight tank or composting toilets and evaporation transport system for the gray water.

Godzik explained that a communal system for the neighborhood would be problematic because there is no area large enough to construct one.

He said in this case the environment would be better protected by hooking up to a sewer than by the granting of a variance to the state code. If the sewer is not an option, which is the case with most of Cohasset, then "you do the best you can," Godzik said.

The town is under a court order to fix its sewers woes and is emerging from about 20 years of litigation with the state due to overextending its sewer service area which cost the town hundreds of thousands of dollars, Guild said.

Guild said his job is to protect the town from over-committing its capacity.

Raising funds to enclose pool, will be an uphill climb

By Robert Ziff
CORRESPONDENT

Joe McElroy hosted the meeting held at Bancroft Hall in the Lightkeeper's Residence last Wednesday to discuss the $1.2 million proposition to enclose the Cohasset Swim Center in order to turn it into a year-round swimming facility rather than the ten or so weeks it's open each summer. The proposed renovations include a glass structure that would enclose the pool with an opening roof that slides down to allow the fresh air and sunlight in during warm days and would be closed during the winter months.

As discussed, the major stumbling block is the cost and who will carry it (see letter page 10). McElroy proposed that the money be raised by a three-year pledge system that will appeal to businesses, other non-profit organizations, benefactors and most importantly — a cross-spectrum of local area residents.

The cost to run the existing pool is $65,000 for the short time it is open each year, and the operating costs on a yearly basis are estimated at $150,000.

McElroy, who has three children including a 12-year-old, said that he started the drive after the events that occurred last Halloween in which a number of youths were involved in throwing eggs at police and creating a disturbance. He fears youngsters do not have enough creative and constructive outlets to spend their time on.

The pool, built in 1974, is located behind the baseball field on North Main Street and is not currently equipped to accommodate the handicapped. The new plans include handicapped accessibility.

Those in attendance supported the concept but were concerned about the cost to build and maintain it. Ideas included renting the pool out to neighboring communities and senior centers.

McElroy explained that it took more than three years of aggressive fund-raising to come up with the $400,000 to renovate the Lightkeeper's Residence into what it is today and it took the Cohasset Education Foundation three years to raise the $150,000 for school improvements. According to McElroy this will not be an overnight proposition unless he can find several "swimming angels" that are willing to contribute large sums of money.

Fire boxes will soon be part of town's history

time to contract services with a private alarm company.

Private alarm companies install their own master boxes in buildings. When an alarm is triggered, the company alerts the fire department by telephone.

Municipal buildings also contain master boxes. Town Manager Mark Haddad informed selectmen on Oct. 20 that the town must also switch to a private alarm service by Nov. 15.

Currently, there are five buildings in town which require alarm service.

The demise of municipal fire alarm systems can probably be traced back to the advent of E-911. When a 911 call comes in to the dispatch office, the caller's name, address, telephone number, and apartment number appear on a computer screen. Even if the call is interrupted, the information is transmitted as long as an initial telephone connection is established.

Cellular telephones have also contributed to the demise of fire boxes, making it simple for callers to report fires or emergencies from any location, even a car.

Former selectmen Peter Pratt is leading the town's effort to decommission the municipal fire alarm system.

Pratt pointed out that there are two components to the system: pole-mounted fire boxes and commercial building master boxes which monitor entire buildings.

Pratt said town officials saw E-911 coming as much as 10 years ago and knew it would eliminate the need for municipal fire alarm service.

Selectman Nan Roth was chairman of the advisory committee from 1991 through 1995, when the town developed its plan to implement E-911. Roth said E-911 all but eliminated the need for fire boxes.

"The town was getting only one or two calls a year, plus false alarms," Roth said. "E-911 made the box system appear redundant. Plus other towns were successfully dismantling their alarm systems."

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln confirmed that very few calls for fire service originate from pole-mounted boxes.

With E-911, the town also moved fire registers—electrical boxes that record the origin of a call requesting emergency service—from the fire department to the centralized E-911 civilian location.

Pratt said the decision to officially dismantle the box system came last year soon after Wigmore announced his desire to retire after 32 years on the job.

"When Superintendent Wigmore announced his intention to retire, it just seemed like a good time to revisit the issue of decommissioning the alarm service," Pratt said." We had the choices of also privatizing our service or appointing another superintendent."

Pratt said the position was enshrined in legislation, and only the state could eliminate the job. This step was necessary to transfer the wire inspector's duties to the fire chief and selectmen.

Voters at last spring's town meeting gave the go-ahead to eliminate the position.

The first step the town took was to petition the legislature to eliminate the position of superintendent of wires.

Wigmore spent most of his time upgrading and installing wiring at municipal buildings and schools, Pratt said. It didn't seem necessary to maintain the position of wire inspector.

Once the legislature approved the request, the town could focus on dismantling the rest of the system.

Pratt said the advent of E-911 virtually guaranteed that the town would disconnect commercial businesses from the municipal service.

"The town has for years subsidized commercial businesses using the municipal fire alarm service," Pratt said. "But it's not as simple as just turning off a switch. There are questions of liability, and we will assist commercial businesses with the transition."

With that done, town officials moved to dismantle the physical system.

Wigmore has already been hard at work removing boxes and overhead wires for the system. He said he is confident the entire system will be dismantled before his retirement.

"The entire town was rewired after the blizzard of '78," Wigmore said. "I put those wires up, and now I'm taking them down."

Wigmore pointed out that the wires are on Boston Edison poles, and it's unlikely that the electrical company will want obsolete wires to remain on its poles.

And while Wigmore removes the wiring, the town is trying to choose a commercial alarm service for municipal buildings.

Haddad has obtained quotes from two companies: Sonitrol of Canton and Atlas Alarm Corp. of Weymouth.

Sonitrol uses regular telephone lines to monitor its system at an annual charge of $1,770 ($295 per building), plus $1,368 ($228 per building) per year for monitoring. Sonitrol tests its telephone once once a day.

Atlas uses a dedicated line, which allows them to know instantly if the telephone line is not operational. Atlas charges $3,510 for installation ($585 per building), plus $2,738 for monitoring ($456 per building).

Pratt said that the town's municipal alarm service cost about $55,000-$60,000 per year, including Wigmore's salary. However, Wigmore also serves as the town's electrical inspector and municipal electrician.

In a memo to selectmen, Haddad pointed out that Atlas' system is more expensive than Sonitrol's, but more reliable because of the early warning afforded by a dedicated line.

Selectmen have not yet decided what company will monitor municipal buildings.

Wigmore said fire alarm boxes will are not completely obsolete, especially in big cities.

"Everyone thinks of these as things of the past, but there are a lot of them out there," Wigmore said. "Big cities will keep these boxes for a while. They're easy to identify, and everyone knows what they're used for."

But Cohasset is not a big city, and the future is now. By this time next year, fire alarm boxes in Cohasset will be rooted firmly in the town's past.

Wigmore is last wire inspector

Steve Wigmore, 62, has served as the town's wire inspector and superintendent of wires for the last 32 years. But that all comes to an end on June 26, 1998, when Wigmore plans to retire--reluctantly.

Wigmore will retire, although he may stay on part-time as electrical inspector and town electrician-- if the town wants him. Town Manager Mark Haddad has asked Wigmore to come in sometime soon and discuss his plans for the future.

Wigmore began his job as superintendent of wires after he got laid off from a job in Boston for a few weeks.

"I started working for Edward Parker Malley and he showed me all the tricks of the trade," Wigmore said. "When I got called back to my other job, there was a $2 difference in the hourly rate, so I stayed on here."

Wigmore worked as Malley's assistant until 1973, when the senior man retired. Wigmore immediately took over as superintendent and has had the job ever since.

Now, Wigmore admits he is part of a dying breed.

"Most of the guys who hold the wire inspectors job have been replaced," Wigmore said. "As each old-timer goes by the boards, they do away with the position. I think I'm one of the few left. There's one in Milton."

Wigmore said he realizes the time has come for him to go, although he is interested in coming back in some limited capacity.

Wigmore has paid into the municipal pension system for the past 32 years. He will receive 80 percent of his last year's salary when he retires.

County rules allow retired municipal employees to work at town or county municipal jobs, only if their salary does not exceed the 20 percent not paid by the county pension.

"I've been here for a long time, and I've really enjoyed it," Wigmore said. "But they've eliminated my department and the time has come to go. It's really up to the town now if it wants to hire me back in some capacity, maybe part time."

GETTING A LEG UP

People who quickly embark on fitness programs may find themselves doing more harm than good. Take for example, the overly ambitious exerciser who, instead of easing into an exercise regimen on his rowing machine, decided to go full bore from the very start of his program. As a result, he experienced shooting pain down his leg that he thought was due to a pulled muscle. Chiropractic examination however, revealed that the patient could not raise either leg without discomfort while lying on the examination table, indicating a protruding disc pressing against one of the sciatic nerves. Because this type of injury is less likely to occur with someone who is fit, exercisers are encouraged to slowly work their way into shape before fully exerting themselves.

Are you exercising correctly? Do you suffer with pain? Why not give SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC a call at 545-7388 to help you live a healthier life,free of pain and discomfort. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we work with you to restore your health and guide you in a personalized approach to overall wellness.

P.S. About one percent of the 20 million cases of back pain experienced in the U.S. each year are associated with discomfort in the legs.

Tree issue branches out to Monday's town meeting

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

William Ross had a question for the Town Meeting voters this Monday about a tree near his driveway.

But this week, he found out the question did not get on the meeting agenda in exactly the words he wanted.

Now it's more of a math question than a nature question, and even if the public takes his side against the selectmen, Ross, who wants the tree felled, is likely to be disappointed.

As Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said, regardless of the town meeting's action, the tree warden still has to follow Massachusetts state laws which protect healthy shade trees.

"You can't have an article to cut down a tree," Sullivan said. "The only thing that article will do is appropriate the funds to pay for cutting down a tree."

The silver maple is a healthy tree, according to both the tree warden and Town Manager Mark Haddad who dismissed Ross' claim that falling branches from the silver maple posed a hazard to drivers.

"His particular driveway was cut in between a tree and a telephone pole," Haddad said, "and he has a couple of other options. There's nothing wrong with the tree. That's the selectmen's opinion."

Nonetheless, Peter Laugelle, the tree warden, has said if the town meeting sides with Ross, he will hold a special public meeting, as required by state law, to hear the case against the tree.

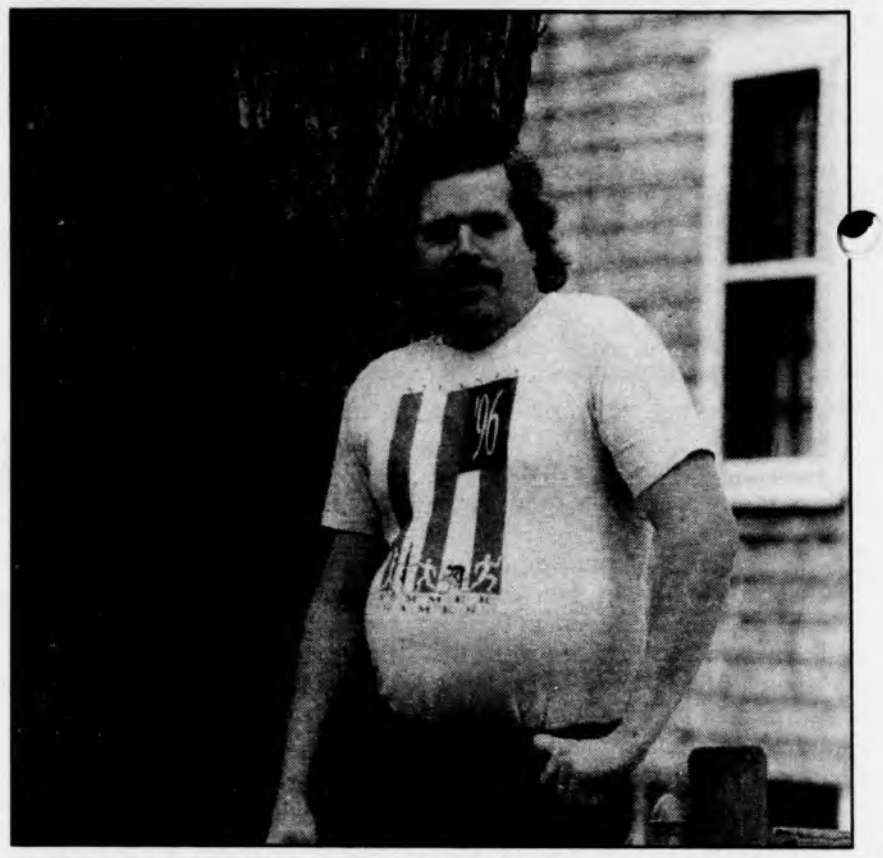
This last week of confusion over the article's wording capped about 10 months of frustration for Ross who has been taking his problem to town boards since last December, he said.

Originally, Ross asked the local government to chop down the silver maple tree at 16 Church St. and also foot the bill for the ax job. The tree, which has a majestic girth of roughly 12-feet around its base, gets in his way when he rides a snow plow into his driveway, he has said, and he has also had other problems, due to the roots beating up his asphalt.

Much later, after Ross got turned down by the selectmen, he opted to poll the voters, on the basis town meeting would have the authority to vote to chop down the tree.

And though the selectmen unanimously opposed Ross, the advisory committee last week backed him. Both also made unanimous, but contradictory, recommendations to the town meeting. (For the Advisory Committee, Chairman Roger Whitley said he thought his board treated Ross the way they would want to be treated if they had a problem).

If the voters need a hint about the answer Ross wants to hear, he has a picture that should solve their dilemma. It is a sepia-tinted picture of the house with the utility pole and no trees anywhere in sight. That's the way things used to be at 16 Church St., and Ross would like to see a yard without trees there again.



Nonetheless, Ross has acknowledged the tree is only one of many obstacles around his driveway. A neighbor's mail box across the street stands in a plumb line with the entrance. Hemming him in on the other side of his driveway is the utility pole.

However, Ross doesn't think moving the pole will be a long-term solution, and the telephone company and the cable company want to be reimbursed $1,200 and $800, respectively if the pole is moved.

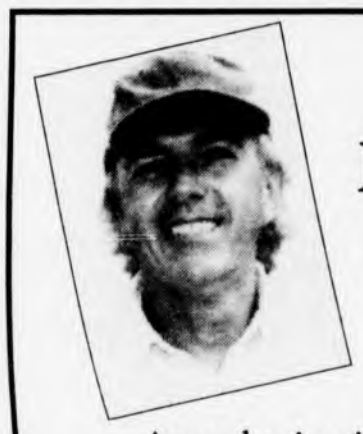
Moreover, because the silver maple's a town-owned tree, planted squarely on town property, Ross has maintained the town should pay to cut it down.

Ross has previously told selectmen the big silver maple's roots are beating up his driveway and damaging his vehicles.

"I've been through hell," he said in an interview this week. "I am being denied access to my property."

William Ross, 16 Church St., stands by the embattled silver maple in his driveway.

Silver maple has cut marks



The embattled silver maple tree has already had one brush with destruction this year. Police chief Brian Noonan confirmed one of his men in August investigated a neighbor's complaint about cuts on the base of the tree, though no suspect was identified.

The cuts, about the size and shape of an elephant's hoof, appeared to police to have been made by a chain saw. "The tree is so large," Noonan said, "the cuts did not appear to have damaged it, although it could have been an attempt to end the life of the tree."

State law protects shade trees, according to the chief, who said cutting down the tree without a public meeting was prohibited by Chapter 87, Section 3 and Section 12.

It would also be a criminal offense.

"You could be charged with destruction of town-owned property," Noonan said, although he acknowledged he didn't think a person convicted of such an offense would go to jail.

BUMPER CROP

We must begin by telling you that we surely are hearing a lot about John Blaze's garden - he had a real bumper crop this year, tons of pumpkins, squashes, etc. Isn't it just the best feeling to look at all of that and think "I grew that!" Congratulations go to you, John!

MILESTONES FOR MACNEIL

There is a wonderful gentleman in our community, one who deserves special hugs the next time you see him! Millard MacNeill turned 87 a few weeks ago, although you would never know it to look at him! He also celebrated another milestone at the same time; Mr. MacNeill has been a member of the choir at the Second Congregational Church for 70 years! And what a wonderful voice he has, clear as can be! We hope that your day was a grand one, and that this year is a very special one for you!

A SAD NOTE

From a happy note to a sad one, "Pop" Fone passed away last Wednesday. Ken and Sue were frequent visitors, and he was so happy to see them always - on that day he went out to the nurses' station and just fell asleep. Everyone who knew Pop has a memory of him; he was one unique person! We will let you know as details are available, he will be buried in Quincy. Meanwhile, our deepest sympathies go to Ken and his family.

Lauren and Caroline Casey share a cookie at the recent Harvest Fair in the village which capped off the weekly farmers' market. The farmers market will be back in the spring.

COHASSET TV STAR

There is a great reason to watch "Evening Addition" this Saturday, Oct. 25. Karin Anglin is going to be on it, playing Sarah. It will air at 9 p.m. And, speaking of air, she also taped a commercial with Michael Jordan recently, promoting his new clothing line that will be out Nov. 1. Karin reports that he is quite a gentleman, and sooo good looking, and nice, etc. All we would hope that he would be! Karin is also slated to be in a PBS series in January, we'll alert you before-hand so that you can be sure to watch. Another Cohassetite destined for stardom, it's really great! By the way, Karin lives in Chicago now, but maybe she'll be home over the holidays so that you can tell her that you saw her!

GET WELL SOON

It is hoped that Phyllis Leighton is feeling much better as she reads this, she is recuperating at home. At least it is a beautiful time to gaze out of the windows and see the festive colors that surround us at this time of year!

FOOD PANTRY DONATIONS

As the cold weather approaches, please remember the Cohasset Food Pantry! We now have one kind lady who makes periodic trips to B.J.'s just to help stock the shelves with much needed items (we applaud that). Anyway, the items uppermost on the wish list are sugar, toothpaste, tea, pasta sauce, sugar, flour, coffee, beef broth and maple syrup. Actually, anything that you use every day is what you could buy an extra one of for the Pantry.

First Parish coming of age program

Seventh- and eighth-grade children at First Parish enroll in the "Coming of Age" program as part of their own transition from childhood to young adulthood. The program provides information about the Unitarian Universalist Association, as well as the history and traditions of First Parish in Cohasset.

There are six parts of the program: learning the history and philosophy of the UUA; attending worship services at a variety of churches; taking a more active part in the leadership of the church; participating in a mentor program; giving 10 in-house service hours and 10 hours in the community.

This year's class will visit Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham and a CCD class at St. Anthony's as part of its study of Roman Catholicism. The Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox will meet regularly with the students in the spring to discuss course work in "How Do I Know What to Believe?" These meetingswill help the students write a "Statement of Belief" that is the culmination of the two-year program.

On a special Sunday in the spring, each student delivers his or her "Statement of Belief" to the congregation. It takes a lot of courage for early adolescents to speak publicly about their beliefs, let alone in front of an adult group during a worship service. Each year, the eighth-graders who complete the program impress the congregation with thoughtful reflections on their faith and philosophy of life.

If you are interested in learning more about the Coming of Age Program, call the director of religious education at First Parish at 383-1100.

Sex Registry needs work

The idea of a sex offender registry has been well received by Massachusetts residents, according to a recent poll commissioned by Community Newspaper Company. However it is equally clear that the registry that came into being in October of 1996 needs to be fine-tuned to make it more effective and to make it fair.

Topping the list of flaws found in the registry as it currently stands is its failure to differentiate between sex offenders who pose a real risk to their communities and those who do not. We need to know about a repeat offender, a pedophile, or a rapist in the neighborhood, but the college student who mooned his graduation should not be included.

Other problems that need to be resolved include:

• Instructions to local police departments about their responsibilities and obligations need to be clear and consistent. Currently, how the registry appears to work depends on which police department you ask.

• Police across the region must learn to coordinate their efforts to use the registry. Otherwise efforts to track residents who pose a risk to our safety will be defeated by political geography.

• The role of the media must be reconsidered. Local newspapers cannot be expected to serve as the instruments of police as they seek to publicize lists of registered sex offenders they deem to pose a risk to public safety.

And finally, the state invites failure when it gives a volunteer, part-time, five-member board the key job of sifting through the records of thousands of sex offenders and judging which are most dangerous and which are least dangerous.

Who should take the lead to make this legislation effective and fair? In interviews with CNC reporters, both Acting Gov. Paul Cellucci and Attorney General Scott Harshbarger conceded the current version is unworkable. Both should be held accountable for working to secure meaningful improvements. And the legislators who brought us this registry should take responsibility for working with them to make it better.

Concrete pool support sought

To the Editor:

A public hearing on Wednesday, Oct. 15, to provide year round swimming opportunities for local area residents was attended by less than 20 interested citizens. In view of newspaper coverage and a mailing to approximately 400 residents, the response was disappointing. Those in attendance were supportive, but a number of attendees also expressed concerns about the daunting task of financing the estimated $1.2M project as well as assuring that the pool could operate at affordable rates while maintaining its financial viability. Their concerns are valid and have caused us to reassess our current timetable.

We will not conduct our first fund-raising effort on Nov. 9, as had been tentatively scheduled. In addition to our own evaluation and input at the Oct. 15 meeting, we have received a consulting report that says we need to do more homework before taking the plunge. We are not abandoning our plans. We now have an architectural rendering that is exciting and cost-effective. We know that there is great enthusiasm for the proposal. However, we must be assured that "enthusiasm" will translate into "support."

Accordingly, we are going to take additional time to more accurately identify the optimum scenario for operating the year-round pool in the context of affordable rates while "breaking even" financially.

We cannot ignore the disappointing attendance on Oct. 15. Does it reflect a lack of support? Are enthusiasts sitting back and counting on others to finance the pool? Ten years ago, the Trustees tried to do what we are revisiting now. They had to defer their plans because of financial considerations. Do we need to delay again? I hope not. Personally, I took on this project because our youth need constructive outlets for their energies, year-round. However, the beauty of a year round swimming facility is that it will benefit residents of all ages.

We are all very busy and most of us support a number of worthy causes. Please ask yourself whether this project is worth doing and telephone me with your ideas, encouragement, and willingness to financially support a well conceived and financially viable project to provide year round swimming opportunities for local area residents of all ages.

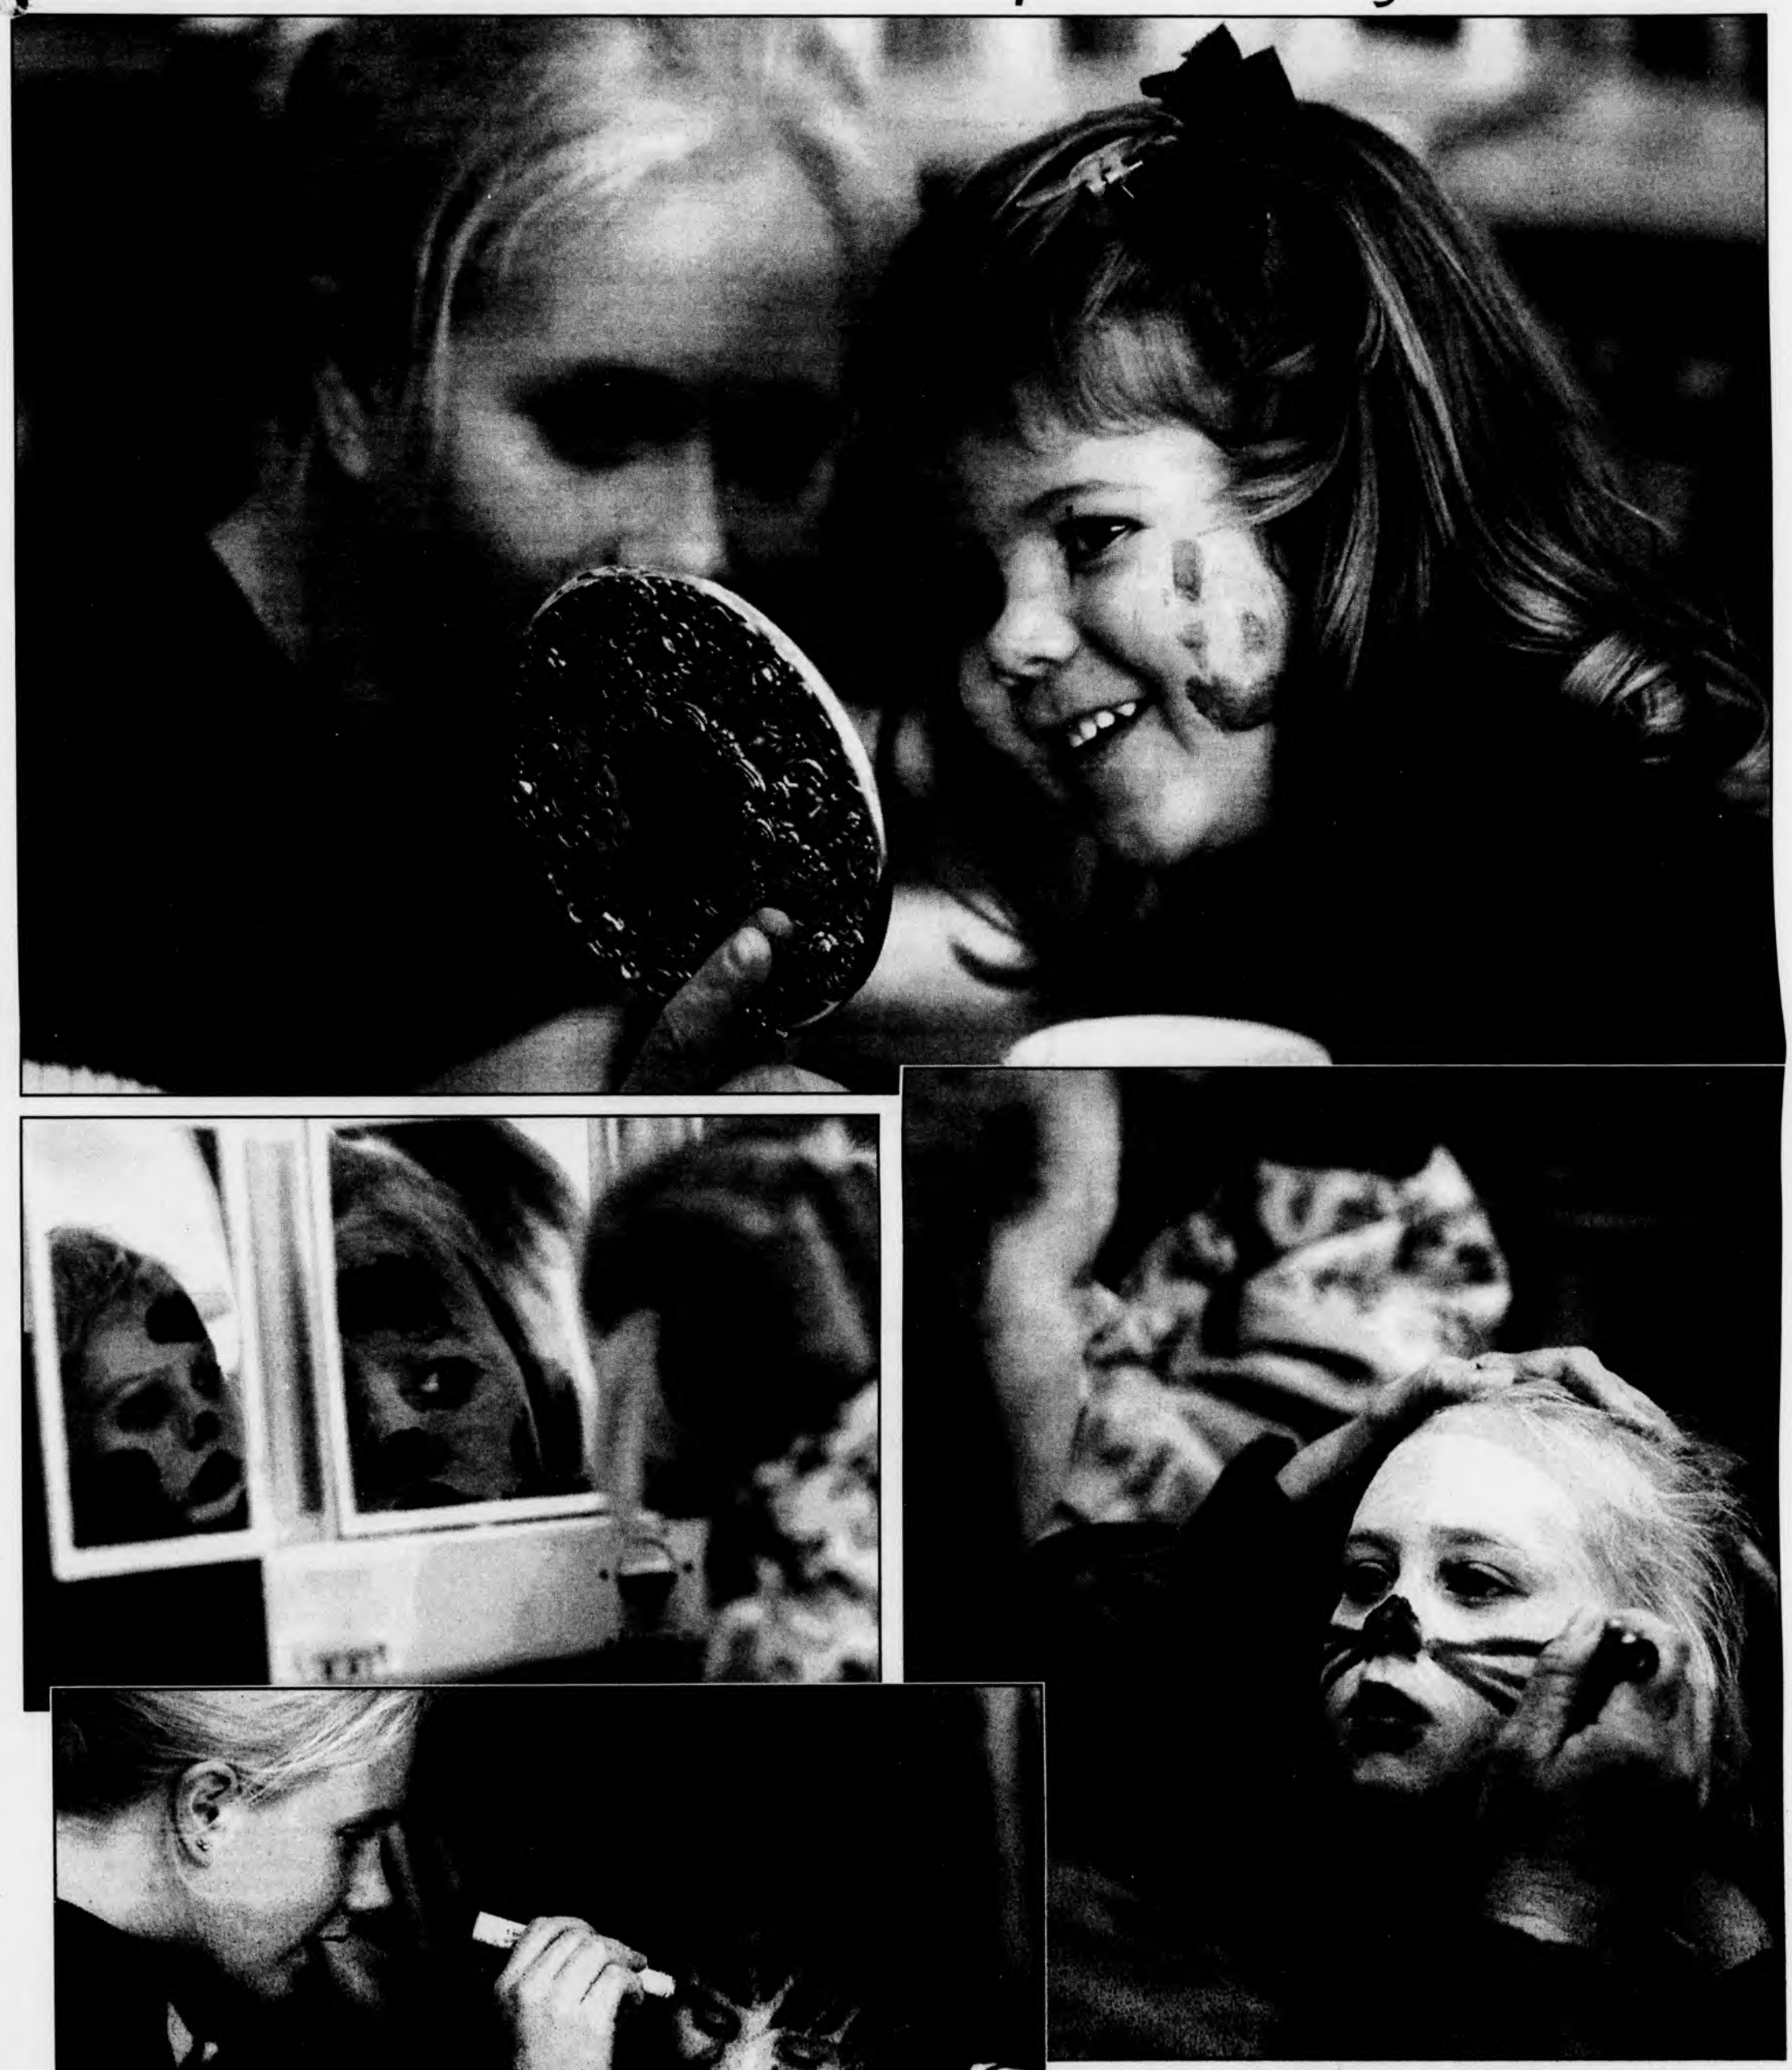
Train stop clarification

To the Editor:

In Joe Reardon's recent article on private schools and the reopening of the Old Colony Railroad, he quotes me as saying that there will be an Old Colony stop near Boston College High School, and that it will be closer to the school than the present JFK/UMass stop.



The MBTA has made a commitment to have a stop near the school in a little more than two years, but it will be at the JFK/UMass station. Plans are under way for the construction of a new platform at JFK/UMass for the Old Colony trains.

Drugs and alcohol are a community problem

By Jason Bouffard
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset School Committee reaffirmed its "zero tolerance" stance on student drug and alcohol use last week in light of recent concerns from parents and students.

Representatives of the Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee told the school committee that some students had voiced concerns about other students who attended a recent school sponsored dance allegedly under the influence of drugs or alcohol. The school committee agreed that steps will be taken to diminish the problem.

In a letter to the school committee (see letter page 10), the drug and alcohol committee proposed several recommendations to help "abate, if not eradicate, unacceptable behaviors" such as drug and alcohol use. Among those recommendations is a proposed letter to parents of students in grades 7-12 which would reemphasize the school's policy on drug and alcohol use on school grounds.

"When we communicate, it lessens the tension," said the Rev. Clifford Cutler, a member of the drug and alcohol committee, stating his reasons for proposing a letter to parents. He later pointed out the importance of keeping the lines of communication open once they have been established.

While the school committee strongly supported the idea to highlight the policy found in the student handbook, committee secretary Ralph Kidder suggested broadening the letter to express community-wide concern.

"This is a community concern as much as it's a school concern," Kidder said. He suggested that the letter to parents should be cosigned by other relevant members of the community, such as church leaders and members of public health agencies, as well as the school and drug and alcohol committees.

"I think it has to be noted in the letter that the rules apply not just at school," Kidder said.

The drug and alcohol committee also recommended steps be taken to ensure that school dances are properly chaperoned. The letter to the school committee suggested that the chaperone/student ratio for dances should match the ratio required for school field trips.

According to Cutler, nine chaperones attended the recent dance in question, attaining a ratio which he described as prudent. He also noted that adequate care was taken to clearly staff the entrances and exits at the dance.

While the letter suggested that a written expectation of duties be presented to chaperones, especially non-school employees, current practices include a verbal briefing of chaperones before school events.

The letter also called for a police officer to be stationed at all high school dances, but members of the school committee agreed that past use of police officers at such events has only added to the event's cost. While dances normally last for two hours, police officers must be paid for four-hour shifts. However, it was noted that police are notified immediately when a drug or alcohol-related incident occurs.

Kidder hopes that making parents more aware of the problem will also alleviate it. Since drinking and drug use does not occur at the dances, but rather before, he reasoned that parents should be aware of their children's whereabouts from the time they leave the house to the time they arrive at a school event. Ideas such as the Halloween night curfew are aimed at achieving that end.

While they are hopeful that these simple solutions will reduce the problem, the drug and alcohol committee is prepared to recommend stronger actions if necessary.

LETTERS

Steps to deter teen drinking backed

Dear School Committee Members:

There is a concern in the community that there may be a problem with an increasing number of students who arrive at school-sponsored events under the influence of drugs/alcohol. Specifically, reports have been made from students in various grade levels who attended a recent back-to-school dance at the high school cafeteria. They allege a significant number of students appeared to have been high on drugs or alcohol. Their observations were unsolicited and were reported out of concern for the safety of those attending the dance.

Such information is disturbing and should not be taken lightly. We share in the responsibility to provide a safe, drug-free environment for the children of Cohasset, especially in a school or community-sponsored setting. We recognize the culpability of parents in this situation, and the difficult task school representatives have in controlling activity of this kind.

Nonetheless, this committee agrees that certain steps can abate, if not eradicate, unacceptable behaviors, and recommend the following immediate actions:

1. Ensure that the ratio of chaperones/students at a school dance conforms to school policy for the ratio of chaperones/students for field trips.

2. Present written guidelines/expectations for chaperones, especially non-school employees.

3. Mail to parents of Cohasset students in grades 7 to 12 a restatement of the School Committee-approved drug policy found in the student handbook describing consequences of drug use on the school campus.

4. Station a police officer at all high school dances.

We feel simple steps like these can send a message to students who abuse drugs, that they are not welcome at school-sponsored events. If the problem does not diminish or increases, we are prepared to recommend stronger actions.

As representatives of the community, it is our wish to continue to support the school, including both staff and students, in efforts to control substance abuse.

Scituate Hill tank site backed

To the Editor:

I was actively involved in the design, construction and operation of the Water Treatment Plant on King Street. This plant was designed to deliver three million gallons per day, meet the water demands of the town to a projected population of 12,000 and expandable to 4.5 M.G.D. if necessary.

A proposal such as presented in article 24 for the special Town Meeting Oct. 27 would (in my opinion) jeopardize the intended design of the entire facility. To add clear well, holding tanks, hi-lift pump etc. will not accomplish the required end results as would constructing a second standpipe properly located.

The plant design also took into consideration, that a ground water supply would always be available from the town's two well fields. (This is the most economical and cost efficient way to help increase the supply and pressure, in addition to standpipe storage).

Shortly after the plant went on line, a distribution system evaluation was completed by S.E.A. Consultants Inc. of Boston. As a result, a 15-year, three-stage improvement and expansion program was recommended. Stage 1 included a second two-million gallon standpipe on Crocker Hill, (Scituate Hill, on land zoned light industry) and a main trunk line through Forest Avenue to Jerusalem Road. For some unknown reason this most important phase, which was to begin in the early 1980s, was never accomplished. (Forest Avenue was finally done in 1995).

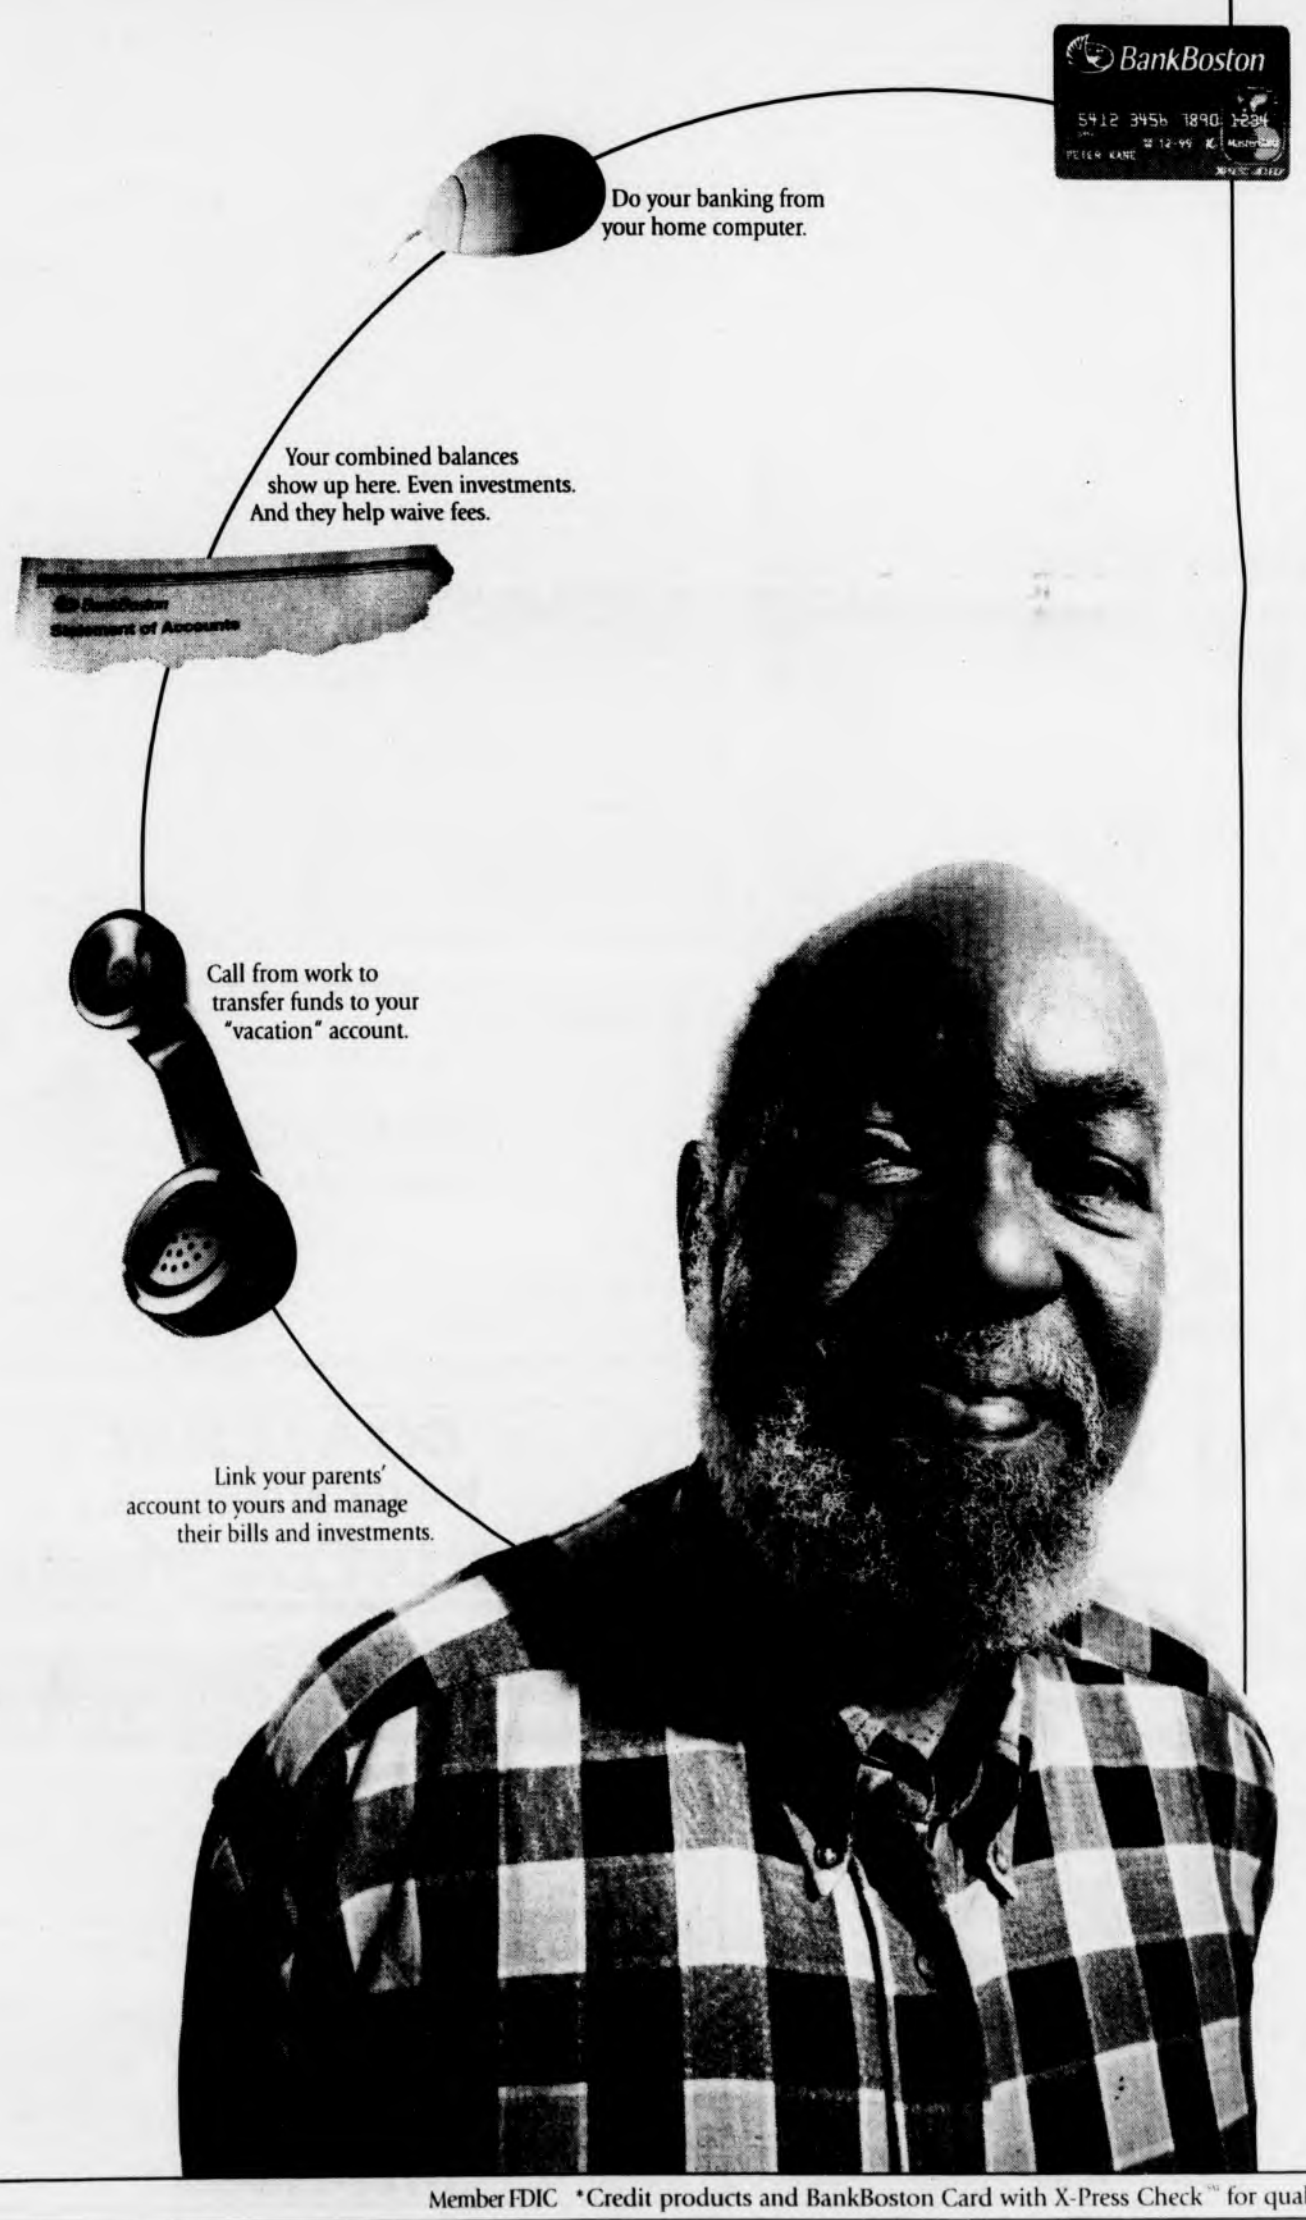
The result of the most recent studies (1994/96) basically recommended the same improvements, and phase schedule. In view of these facts an amendment to the zoning bylaw (article 26) is not necessary to accommodate the construction of the second standpipe.

Article 26 must be defeated and construction of the second standpipe should go forward strategically located on land at the highest elevation in town, Scituate Hill.



The Board of Water Commissioners and/or their consultants have lost sight of proposed future expansion of the distribution system in the northern section of 3-A and North Main Street. The North Cohasset, Hull Street system is also a realistic possibility for expansion.

If the second tank is not located on 3-A, the town could certainly face the construction of a third standpipe to accommodate these foreseeable expansion projects.

Now is the time to do it right. This project is already 15 years behind schedule. Construction should begin without any further delay at the 3-A site for all the above reasons and many others not mentioned in this letter.

Sunrise living offers home, assistance for people in the sunset of their years

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The turreted Victorian manor home going up on the west side of Route 3A in Cohasset comes complete with port cochere, concierge and resident dog and cat.

The "house" is actually a 64-unit apartment building for the elderly. But, officials with Sunrise Assisted Living Inc. stress that no detail will be overlooked in making the assisted living facility home-like for its residents.

"As people move along, they move up in housing," says Carol Dignan, director of Community Relations for Sunrise Assisted Living of Cohasset.

She said a move to Sunrise should be another step up that ladder.

Assisted-living facilities are for the frail elderly who need assistance with day-to-day personal care such as bathing and dressing, and medication reminders.

They do not provide skilled around-the-clock nursing care like nursing homes do.

Sunrise of Cohasset, which is slated to open in March, combines a residential setting with a trained staff to provide residents with a

"There's no need to institutionalize frail elderly people."
— CAROL HURLEY OF SUNRISE

"very residential, social, non-medical model for care," said Carol Hurley, regional director of sales and marketing.

The company, founded in 1981, is based in Fairfax, Va. Sunrise owns and operates 53 assisted living facilities in 11 states with a capacity of about 4,000 residents with plans to develop 40 more facilities over the next three years.

Sunrise went public in June 1996 and currently trades for about $36 per share on the Nasdaq National Market under the symbol SNRZ. It reported $47.3 million in sales in 1996. Nationally, assisted living is a $20 billion industry.

And demographics indicate the growth trend in assisted living will continue.

As much as 60 percent of those who have reached the age of 85 need help with daily living activities. The 85-plus age group is expected to double from 3.1 to 7 million people by the year 2020.

Sunrise of Cohasset will offer a range of apartments from small studios to two-room suites which come with refrigerators and a kitchen sink. Residents may bring microwave ovens. Rents will start at about $2,700 per month which includes three meals a day, recreational activities, laundry and housekeeping. Pets are allowed.

Dignan said the staff is specially trained in care for the elderly, something that sets assisted living apart for the old-fashioned rest home.

"Our staff has a good heart but a good head also," she said. "We have informed caring according to what research has shown."

Residents who have problems with incontinence, for example, are assessed and get help managing that, Hurley said.

She said studies show 30 to 40 percent of the elderly suffer from incontinence.

"That's no reason to have someone in a nursing home and not in assisted living," Hurley said.

Assisted-living is a private-pay industry for the most part and is not covered by medicare which is federally funded. Hurley said as a result, attention to the customer is paramount.

"We are customer driven," she said. "We have to provide a service that's needed and that our customers want and are willing to pay for."

She said when the government becomes the customer, there's a different focus.

"If we don't do our job well, we hear about it. Our people are empowered because they are paying the bills."

From the main lobby to the second floor, Sunrise buildings feature a grand staircase which is one of the company's "signatures." It immediately sends the message that this is not an institutionalized setting.

"When did you ever see a staircase in a nursing home?" Hurley asked.

Assisted-living facilities are a growth industry

Cohasset will soon join other cities and towns across the state that have become part of the explosive growth in assisted-living facilities.

The Virginia-based Sunrise Assisted Living, Inc. is building a 64-unit Victorian-style manor apartment building off Route 3A.

According to Connie Sullivan, executive director of the Massachusetts Assisted Living Facilities Association, the state trade association for the industry, assisted living does not replace the nursing home.

"It's a choice people didn't have before," she said.

And as the population ages, assisted living has become a popular pick with the elderly.

Sullivan said five years ago, you'd be hard pressed to find an assisted living facility. Ninety ASFs — containing a total of 4,600 units — will be open in the state by the end of 1997 with 40 more ASFs expected to open in 1998.

The typical ASF resident is female, 83 years old, and lives within 20 miles of family. One-half rely on financial assistance from family and friends and the average length of stay for a resident is 28 months.

Sullivan said ASFs are not health facilities, like nursing homes, but are residential housing with services.

They are part of the spectrum of choices for the elderly which include congregate "senior" housing, ASFs and nursing homes.

Sullivan said the cost of ASFs should be put into perspective and may be less expensive than operating a home.

"Your taxes, food, utilities, transportation, housekeeping and laundry are covered. What you're left paying for is your personal phone bill and dry cleaning (in addition to rent)," she said.

ASFs provide meals, social activities, help with medication and assistance with bathing and dressing, incontinence and cognitive issues.

Some, like Sunrise, include Alzheimer units so those with dementia can stay longer, Sullivan said.

ASFs must be certified by the state Executive Office of Elder Affairs. The statute defining ASFs was passed in January 1995 with the governing regulations going into effect in 1996.

Sunrise Assisted Living is the first facility of its kind locally.

Marriott Senior Living Services, Inc. is proposing a 115-unit, three-story assisted living facility on 15.7 acres in Hingham by Hingham Plaza off Derby Street.

"If they are having a good day, they can use the stairs. The elevator is also there for them to use," she said about providing residents with as much choice as possible.

Hallways are short with chair rails that serve as hand rails and rooms are arranged in small clusters.

No fluorescent lights is used, only incandescent and natural lighting, Hurley explained.

Toys are available for the grandchildren who stop by.

Reminiscence program

A special feature of the facility is the "reminiscence program" for Alzheimer's sufferers.

Twenty-two apartments on the third floor will provide a secure unit and "peace of mind," Hurley said. The unit includes common space and an area for wandering.

"We've found people have wonderful long-term memories," she said. "Women remember themselves as young brides and men remember playing sports with their kids."

Sunrise's life skill centers include nurseries with dolls or an office equipped with an old-fashioned typewriter, for example.

Sunrise opened an information center this week across from Shaw's Plaza at 746 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. Model apartments will be open by the end of December or early January. Call 383-6300 for more information.

Hurley stressed assisted living can be a positive choice for seniors.

"Studies show 40 percent would prefer to die than go to a nursing home," she said. "There's no need to institutionalize frail elderly people."

Failing to register

Poll finds year-old Sex Offender Registry remains flawed

from the Ripley School recognized Goldman as a convicted sex offender that Melrose police learned about his record.

The police quickly yanked him off the school detail.

"I had no idea he was on the Malden registry - otherwise I never would have sent him to a school," said Melrose police spokesman Sgt. Daniel O'Neil. It just never occurred to Melrose police to check Malden's sex offender list or Goldman's criminal record.

New doubts have been raised about the effectiveness of the sex offender registry as a tool to protect children following the murder and molestation of Jeffrey Curley, the 10-year-old boy who was snatched from a street in Cambridge earlier this month.

The state legislature designed the registry to be a first-line defense against sexual offenders who prey on the public, but the Melrose case proves the registry is far from foolproof. Polls conducted by Community Newspaper Company before and after Curley's murder together with an in-depth examination by a team of CNC reporters found fundamental flaws with the registry:

The public is largely in the dark about the registry after almost a year in existence. A poll taken before Curley's murder found that while 83 percent of area residents support the registry, more than a third did not know they could get a list of convicted sex offenders and their addresses.

Few people ever use the registry. Though 84 percent of area residents know sex offenders must register with police, only 2 percent have checked their local registry. The residents were evenly divided about whether they would ever go to their police station to ask for a list of all registered sex offenders.

In the aftermath of Jeffrey Curley's murder, however, a second poll shows a significant increase in the number of people who said they might use the registry in the future. A surge of requests sporadically flooded some towns, including Medford, Sandwich and Wakefield.

Some local police departments are confused about their roles and their responsibilities to monitor sex offenders and make their names public.

The registry includes such a broad scope of offenders its purpose is diluted. In addition to pedophiles and rapists, people convicted of seeking or having consensual gay sex must register. So must anyone convicted of lewd behavior, such as "mooning," streaking or urinating in public.

The law that created the sex offender registry is being challenged as unconstitutional because it subjects criminals to double jeopardy - years of public scrutiny after they have served their sentence.

Many sex offenders have simply failed to register. Of an estimated 13,500 sex offenders in Massachusetts, only 6,200 have signed up.

The state agency that manages the registry, the Sex Offender Registry Board, with an annual operating budget of $555,000, is overburdened and understaffed.

CLASSIFICATION BACKLOG

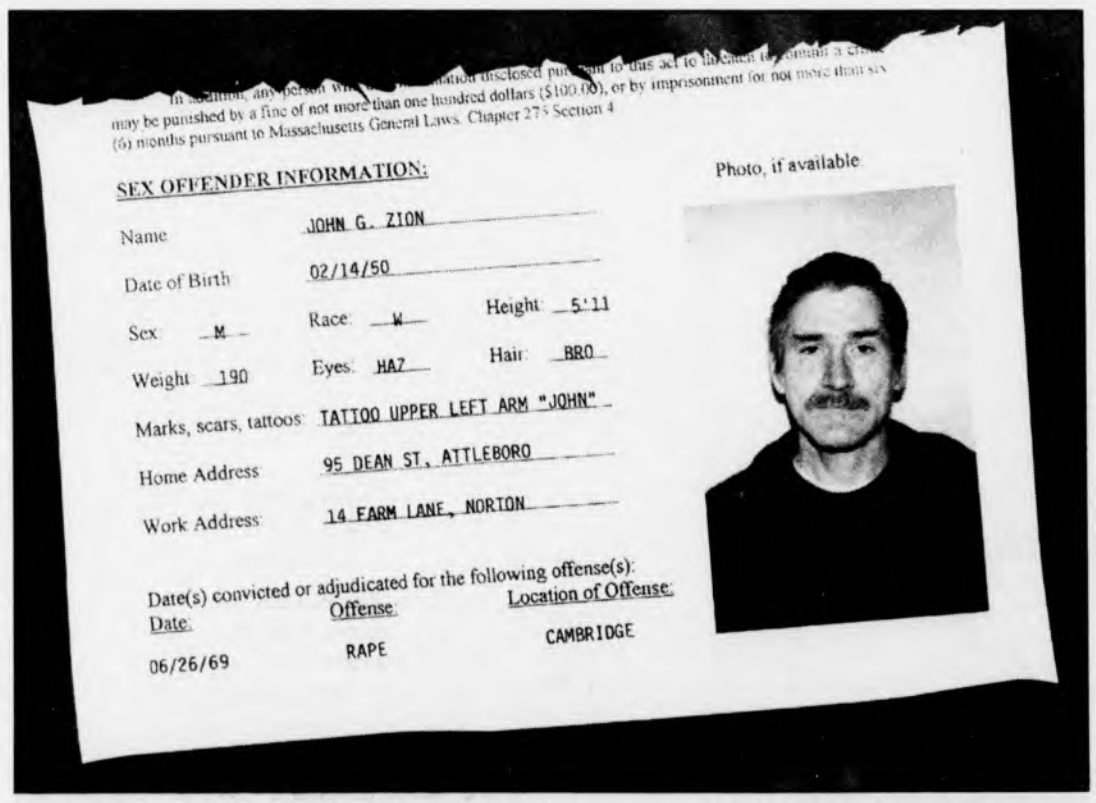
Of the 6,200 sex offenders who have registered, only 500 have been classified by the agency's six full time staff members in categories designed to identify which offenders are least dangerous and which are most likely to commit another crime.

"I think its unworkable," Acting Gov. Paul Cellucci said last week of the registry law. "The classification will take forever." In response to the newspaper poll, Cellucci said state officials and police need to make more of an effort to explain the registry to the public.

Mary Bonauto, an attorney with the Boston-based Gay and Lesbian Advocates and Defenders, has mounted a court challenge to the Sex Offender Registry law on behalf of a 61-year-old man. The man, who was arrested and pleaded guilty to groping an undercover state trooper during a sting operation, said he would rather kill himself than register.

James Gilbert, chairman of the Sex Offender Registry Board, which oversees the classification process, admitted it has become bogged down. "It's very, very slow," he said. "We're not the least bit happy with it."

Neither are some of the legislators who originally promoted the registry. "I'm upset to hear that a year later we're not up to speed," said state Sen. Cheryl Jacques, D-Needham, referring to the classification process. But she and Gilbert both defend the registry as a good tool for parents to use, despite the problems.



One concern is that some people will assume that if the registry is in place, it must be working. "People figure if there's a sex offender in my neighborhood, I'm going to be notified, and if I'm not notified, I don't have a sex offender," said state Rep. Donna Cuomo, R-North Andover. "People have been lulled into a sense of complacency."

Another universal issue is that while local police departments are responsible for monitoring sex offenders, local police say they cannot keep track of this highly mobile population. With nearly 70 sex offenders on the registry in Waltham, for example, "it puts a tremendous burden on manpower," said Waltham police Detective Jim Auld.

And if a sex offender fails to register or lies about his address, the worst punishment he faces is a misdemeanor charge - not much of a threat to those who face public embarrassment and perhaps harassment.

So many just don't bother to sign up.

A man convicted in Randolph after he molested an 11-year-old boy was hired as an umpire for a youth league in Weymouth. Officials had not checked his criminal background and he had not registered as a sex offender. He was later arrested for failing to do so after someone tipped off police.

may be punished by a fine of not more than one hundred dollars ($100.00), or by imprisonment for not more than six (6) months pursuant to Massachusetts General Laws. Chapter 275 Section 4

John Zion signed up with the registry, but argues that because his crime occurred over a quarter century ago - and because he served his sentence - he is being unfairly subjected to humiliation and public exposure.

PITFALLS AND PROMISES

The sex offender registry, even if it operated perfectly, would not have saved Jeffrey Curley from the men charged with his abduction and murder. Neither Charles Jaynes nor Salvatori Sicari had a record of sexual offenses, so their names were not on the list.

"I think you just have to depend on yourself and your kid," said one parent who lives in Needham. "There is just so much you can do to prevent a crime. I see the registry as just one more tool."

She said she has never checked the registry, but would do so if someone who seemed suspicious moved into her neighborhood. Like 45 percent of the people polled, she said she would tell her neighbors if she discovered a sex offender nearby.

It was the abduction and murder of another child, Megan Kanka of New Jersey, by a repeat sexual offender who promised to show her a puppy, that prompted states to create registries. Many states adopted a version of what came to be called "Megan's Law," which requires that community residents be notified when sex offenders are released into it from prison.

Last spring, President Bill Clinton signed into law a national act - named after a Minnesota boy who was kidnapped in 1989 and never found - that required states to set up registries by 1997 or risk losing 10 percent of federal funds for police departments. Massachusetts became the last state in the nation to set up its registry.

The law is designed to let people know if potentially dangerous sex offenders are living in their midst. The reasoning: sex offenders are prone to repeat their crimes despite treatment. As a result, experts like Gregory Canfield, a director at the Massachusetts Treatment Center in Bridgewater, believe sex offenders should be monitored for the rest of their lives.

"Every time they offend it's a tragedy," said Canfield, who feels the registry is an insufficient tool to keep track of sex offenders.

Today the Sex Offender Registry Board still labors to separate offenders into high-, moderate- and low-risk levels of repeating their offenses. But the process is tedious. Six staff members have sifted through 2.5 million criminal records to identify the sex offenders. Now the five-member voluntary board is in the process of classifying each of the 6,240 offenders who have registered so far.

The names of all who do register are entered into a state database available to local police. The problem is that the police are often unsure about what information they can release. So when Debbie Singleton went to the police station in Allston-Brighton in June, for instance, she said "They gave me such a run-around that I didn't even bother to fill out the form to get the information."

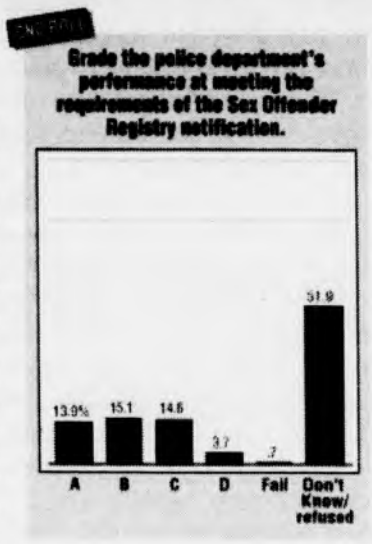
The mother of an 8-year-old, Singleton said the police told her she had to have the request for the list of sex offenders notarized and gave her a stern warning about the list.

"They told me that I couldn't share it with anyone else. I couldn't give it to the media, my next door neighbor or even the school my daughter goes to," Singleton said.

"The law is just a waste of time," she said. "It's just not being implemented right."

THE IMPACT ON OFFENDERS

John Zion agrees with Singleton's assessment.



He wants his name removed from the registry. He symbolizes a multi-pronged attack by a mix of critics that includes gay

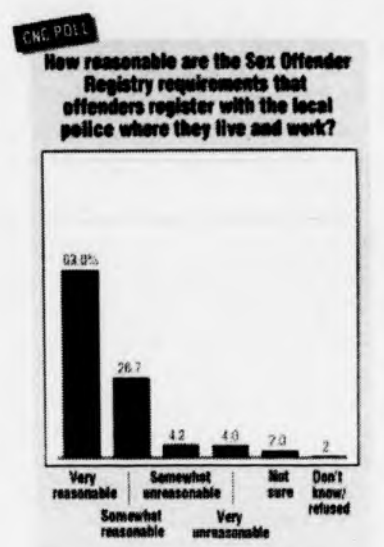
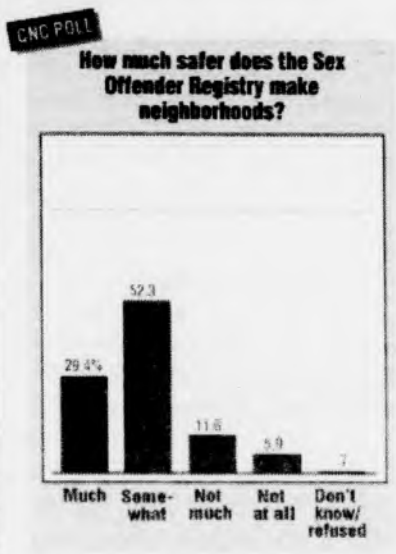
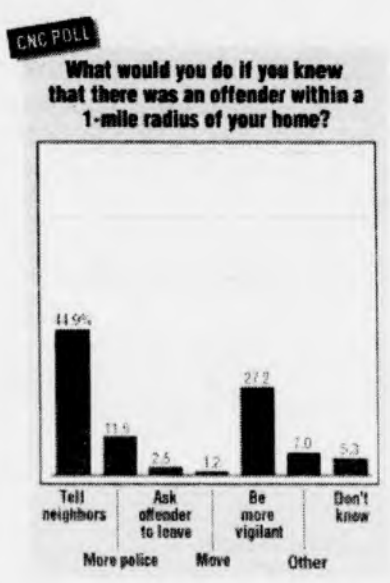
Failing to register

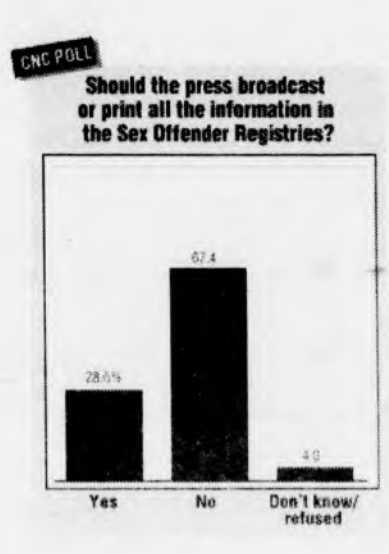


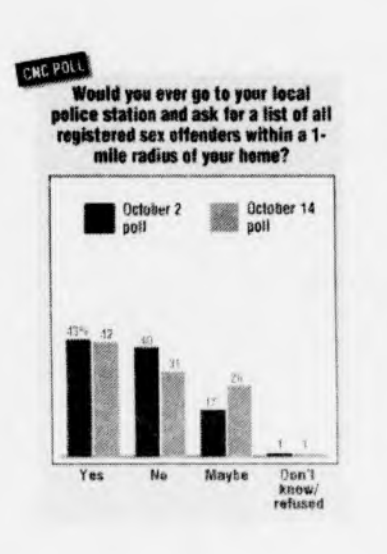
How the poll was conducted



Community Newspaper Co., the paper's parent company, recently commissioned a poll of public opinion on the subject of the state Sex Offender Registry law from residents across eastern Massachusetts. The poll, executed by DiNatale and Hock Research, queried a random sample of 402 Massachusetts voters, with results accurate to within plus-or-minus 5 percent. The graphics included in this article indicate key aspects of the public perception of the law.







Follow-up poll

Because the Community Newspaper Company poll was completed before the news broke of the abduction and murder of 10-year-old Jeffrey Curley Oct. 2, CNC commissioned a second poll to determine how that crime and the news coverage that followed affected how local residents view the Sex Offender Registry.

activists as well as convicted criminals who say they do not deserve to be blacklisted.

Before last year, things were looking up for Zion. He had just been released from prison. He was working for his brother-in-law. But then he registered as a sex offender. Afterward, the Attleboro resident said his life was permanently altered.

"I can't walk out my door without feeling like a dog," said Zion. "It's turned me into the bogeyman in town."

Zion was convicted in 1969 of raping a woman during a home invasion. He was 19 years old at the time. He served 27 years in prison and was released in January 1996 with a parole period of 10 years.

Despite the fact that Zion's parole ends in 2006, the law mandates that anyone convicted of a sex offense or released from incarceration after August 1981 must register with the local police and continue to register for 20 years. That means Zion will continue to be classified as a sex offender until 2016.

"I'm not a threat to the public," said Zion, who is classified as a level three sex offender, meaning he poses the highest degree of risk of repeating a sexual offense. "This was when I was 19 years old, living on the streets and I did something stupid."

Now his picture and offense is plastered in posters in day care centers and the police department in Attleboro right next to the pictures of child molesters. He believes he is being unfairly lumped together with sex offenders. "There's no question this law violates my rights," said Zion, 47, who said he was molested as a child and entered state institutions when he was 7 years old.

After Zion's name and offense record became public, his brother-in-law's business - listed as Zion's work address - was vandalized. Three of his family's cars have been vandalized. But Zion continues to work in apartment maintenance and, as part of his parole, he attends weekly counseling sessions.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONCERNS

No other case underscores questions of how fair the registry is as clearly as one that involves a 61-year-old grandfather who was arrested in 1989 for groping an undercover state trooper during a sting operation at a popular gay cruising area in Norwell.

Under the new law, he must register in the small town where he lives and provide home and work addresses as well as a photograph, which could be made available to the public.

But the man, a self-employed carpenter, said the law will cause him unbearable humiliation. He said he would rather kill himself than register.

"The law was intended to apply to people like rapists and child molesters who may pose a serious risk of recidivism," said Mary Bonauto, an attorney with the Boston-based Gay and Lesbian Advocates & Defenders, who is representing the carpenter along with Boston attorney John Ward. "But they're including people who are not dangerous and don't prey on women and children."

After his arrest, the man pleaded guilty to resolve the case as quickly as possible. Like many others, he never expected his name to become public. His case is now pending before the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court. A decision is expected by the end of the year.

Despite the constitutional concerns, Attorney General Scott Harshbarger defends the law.

"I still believe the Sex Offender Registration Law is constitutional, legal and good public policy," Harshbarger said. "The challenge now is to implement the law, make it workable and get some of the legal issues resolved before we make major new strides."

This special report was prepared by a team of reporters, including Linda Rosencrance, Adrianne Appel, David Caruso, Allyson M. Irish, Doreen Leggett and Harry R. Weber. It was written by Projects Editor Chris Szechenyi and Steve LeBlanc. It was edited by Richard Lodge.

How to use the registry

To obtain a list of sex offenders who live or work in your neighborhood, local residents may go to the local police department and simply ask for it. The state law that created the sex offender registry entitles residents to the name, address and offenses of all of convicted sex offenders who live within a mile of your home, workplace or other locale such as a day care center.

Any person, including juveniles, convicted of a sex offense, including abuse, abduction, or rape of a child or of an adult, or lewd and lascivious behavior after April 1, 1981, must register with his or her local police department within two days of being released from prison. Sex offenders who fail to register may be imprisoned for up to two and a half years. And under a bill recently passed by the Legislature, police may arrest a sex offender who has failed to register without a warrant.

Anyone 18 years or older who produces a valid form of identification may ask for information from the registry at a local police department. However, you must state that the information is for your protection or the protection of a minor or, any other person, in your care. You may ask for the following:

√ whether a specific individual is a sex offender;

√ whether any sex offenders live or work within a one mile radius of a specific address of the person making the inquiry, or at a specific address that can include a residential area, business, school, after-school program, licensed day care center or recreation area.

The police will give you the sex offender's name, home and work addresses, offenses for which he or she was convicted, the date of conviction, identifying characteristics and, if available, access to a photograph of the individual within seven days. Police will release the data for all sex offenders.

The sex offender data also may also be obtained by making a request to the Criminal History Systems Board, 200 Arlington St., Suite 220, Chelsea, MA 02150. The person making the request must state that he is over 18 and that he is attesting to that fact under the pains and penalties of perjury.

However, the Criminal History Systems Board will only process requests for a specific individual, or individuals. The board will not provide a list of individuals who live or work within a one-mile radius of an address.

In addition, the five-member volunteer Sex Offender Registry Board will classify all sex offenders according to their risk of reoffense. A sex offender classified as a level one would be least likely to commit another sex crime. A level two offender would pose a moderate risk, and a level three offender would be the most dangerous.

Once the board makes its classifications a police department is required to publicize the information about level two or level three offenders.

For level two offenders, the police can distribute the information to organizations in their towns that are likely to encounter sex offenders, including schools, licensed day care centers, religious organizations, sports leagues and individual community members.

Police are required to disseminate level three sex offender information through at least two of the following ways: a local cable television station; a local newspaper; or, by posting the information in public areas, like the police station, town hall, public library or U.S. Post Office.

Special town meeting is Monday

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Air conditioning at the new school, the Lobster Lab, water tank, private ways, and what to do about a tree are just a few of the topics at Monday's special town meeting.

The meeting starts at 7:30 p.m. at the Cohasset High School auditorium. A quorum of 100 registered voters is required before town meeting can get underway.

There are 28 articles — or items of business — before the meeting. Some are fairly routine housekeeping matters such as taking care of unpaid bills but others are bound to stir debate. The fate of the Hagerty House on Parker Avenue has been consistently in the news since the annual town meeting approved the Lobster Lab concept for the building. Since then the Lightkeepers Corporation has backed out of the project prompting selectmen to push to have the building demolished.

Voters can expect to hear compelling debate on both sides including arguments from marine biologist Kevin Ulmer, the prime mover behind the Lobster Lab project, who still wants to see it go forward.

The water commission is backing the Bear Hill site for the town's second water tank needed to improve the town's fire flow capacity and to enable the existing tank, also on Bear Hill, to be cleaned. Bear Hill abutters won't sit this one out. They've fought the proposal since last spring's town meeting approved constructing the tank in their neighborhood.

William Ross of Church Street has appeared at numerous selectmen's meetings demanding a tree in his driveway be removed. The advisory committee and selectmen are split on this issue. And the school building committee says if the town wants air conditioning at the new school, it will have to vote the money at Monday's special town meeting. The committee refuses to use the contingency fund at this stage to pay for the installation of the duct work necessary for the project.

If all the business cannot be covered Monday, the meeting will likely reconvene at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday. Citizens with questions, can call Marlette at his office at 508-586-2123 or at home at 383-6809.

King Street water tank is sunk

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The King Street water tank is off the table, water commissioners said Monday.

In a meeting with selectmen, water commissioners said the proposed $1.9 million 750,000-gallon, ground-level tank next to the water treatment plant off King Street was too expensive.

Commissioners have decided to back placing the town's second water tank on town-owned Bear Hill next to the town's existing tank because that is what town meeting voted last spring. However, they said they are not opposed to using Scituate Hill for the tank if that's what the Oct. 27 special town meeting decides.

Both sites are suitable from an engineering standpoint. At $1.5 million, the Scituate Hill site would be about $140,000 more expensive than Bear Hill because the town would have to buy about two acres of land to place it on. But the additional cost could be covered in the current water rates, commissioners said.

Efforts to get a height variance for Bear Hill from the zoning board last summer appeared doomed because of neighborhood opposition. Town by-laws do not allow structures higher than 35 feet in a residential zone. The tank would be 65 feet high.

One of the water commission articles before Monday's special town meeting asks for a zoning by-law change exempting height limits for construction of water storage tanks on town-owned land. The zoning change would have to pass muster with town meeting voters for the Bear Hill site to be viable, commissioners said.

Wayne Sawchuk, a local developer who backs the Scituate Hill site, said a height variance would probably not be needed for Scituate Hill. He explained the tank could be 20 feet shorter and wider because the ground elevation is higher at Scituate Hill than Bear Hill. Height limits in an industrial zone are 45 feet.

He said the location is better for Forest Avenue and Jerusalem Road and for any future development on Route 3A.

Glenn Pratt of King Street who also backs the Scituate Hill site, said the landowner has agreed to talk to the town about selling a piece of the 67-acre former Webb-Norfolk conveyor site.

"We're all on the same sheet of music," he said.

Selectmen voted 4-1 to recommend the Scituate Hill site at town meeting. Saying she would support the water commissioners, selectman Diane Sullivan cast the sole dissenting vote.

Greenbush hearing is tonight

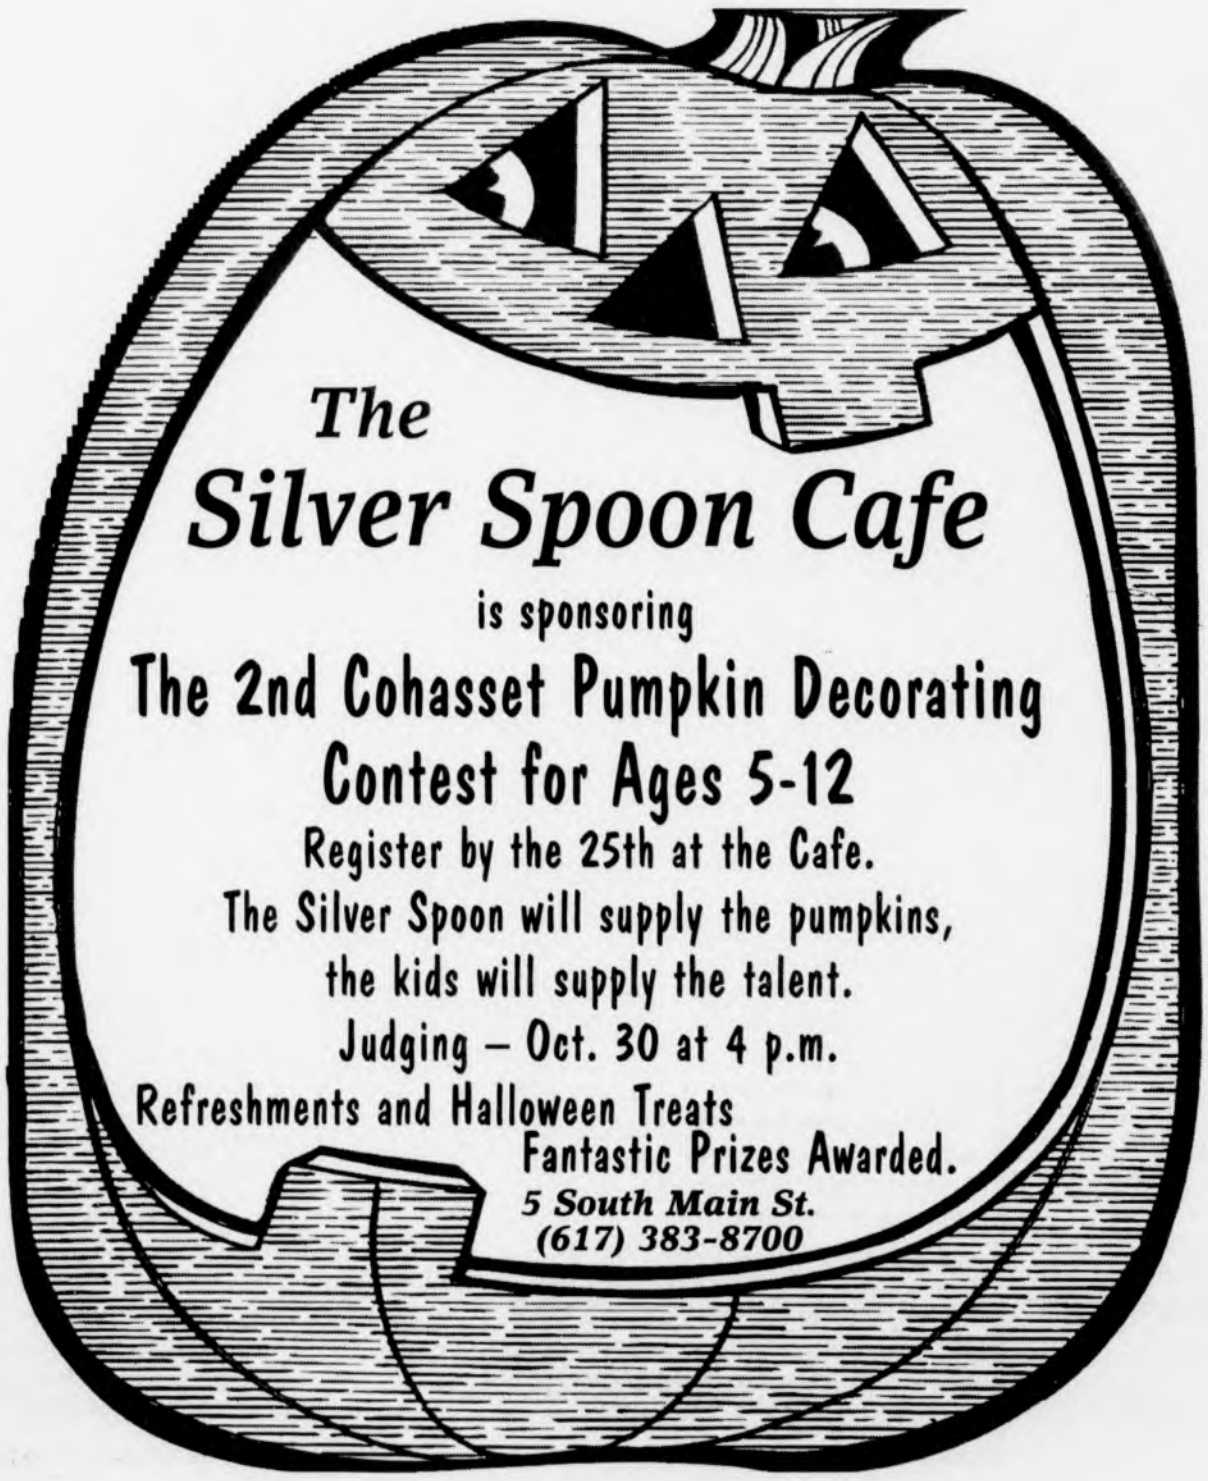
The Joint Committee on Transportation will hold a public hearing on the Greenbush segment of the Old Colony rail restoration project.

Rep. Joseph C. Sullivan, D-Braintree, chairman, and Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, ranking minority member of the committee, announced the hearing earlier this month..

The meeting is scheduled for 6 p.m., Thursday, Oct. 23, at the Barnes Auditorium in Hingham Town Hall.

"This meeting is the place for concerned residents to express their views," said Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan.

The MBTA may be given the opportunity to make a half-hour presentation at the beginning of the hearing, according to Macmillan.



He stressed the importance of the hearing as a means for residents to convey their concerns to the transportation committee.

Prior to the hearing, at 5 p.m., members of the committee will be joined by local officials in a "walking tour" of some sections of the rail line.

Chairman Sullivan stated that it is "essential that the public fully understands the impacts proposed rail service will have on the communities along the Greenbush corridor."

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, and state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, strongly urged Sullivan to conduct a hearing in the Greenbush corridor.

"It is essential that we continually monitor the progress of the project and keep the public and the legislature involved," said Hedlund.

COHASSET MARINER

Homecoming hopes dashed by Carver

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Despite an outstanding first quarter and some fiery defense, the Cohasset Skippers fell to the Carver Crusaders by a score of 28-14 Friday night. The game, which marked Cohasset's Homecoming, was tied 14-14 at halftime, but the visiting Crusaders, led by back Jocko Rooney, pulled away in the second half.

Cohasset's defense excelled early. Linebacker Greg Parkinson made several backfield tackles and cornerback Justin Golden helped by coming up to stop the run. Defensive tackle John-Paul Laugelle played a strong game, especially defensively.

After a stop on the first Carver series, the Skipper offense couldn't get much and punted away to the Crusaders. Senior captain Pat Hurley intercepted a Carver pass and carried it back 30 yards for a touchdown, behind the aggressive blocking of Andy Hamilton.

Cohasset capitalized on this momentum on their next possession. Runs by Golden and tailback Raheem Shepard marched Cohasset down the field, and Shepard scored from three yards out. Hurley tossed a strike to Golden and Cohasset was up 14-0.

However, the home team's offense was done for the night. Rooney caught Cohasset with their guard down and, unable to run inside due to the presence of noseguard James Edgeston and defensive tackles Laugelle and Daryl Jones, sprinted around end and downfield for 84 yards and the six points.

The Crusaders picked up the two-point conversion and it was suddenly 14-8. Still reeling, the Skippers allowed another TD at the end of the first half. When the teams headed to the locker rooms, it was 14-14.

Unexplicably, the boys in blue, "smurfing it" in their blue jerseys, pants and socks, came out flat in the second half. When they should have been fired up at their best first half performance all year, they were instead fairly unemotional.

Carver took advantage of this right of the bat.

Cohasset fumbles were recovered by the visitors and Rooney rushed for two scores.

Conversely, the Skippers failed to capitalize on their offensive opportunities. Carver added the final insult when their swarming defense, rushing through the Cohasset line, brought down Hurley in the end zone for a safety, bringing the final tally to 28-14.

Cohasset's defense did show promise Friday night. In fact, when looking at the Carver scores, only the first long run by Rooney could be placed squarely on the shoulders of the defense.

The Skippers struggled offensively and had a fumble on special teams, both of which gave the Crusaders excellent field position, and pinning the home team against their own goalposts on defense.

Also important to note about the game was the re-injury of Luke Caldwell's knee.

Caldwell, a starting guard and linebacker, will probably be lost for the rest of the year, joining cornerback and running back Jamie DeMichele, who is still sidelined with a broken scapula (behind the collarbone.)

Hamilton was also banged up, re-injuring his ankle, but remained in the game.

Still seeking their first victory of the season, Cohasset will host the Charlestown Townies Friday night. The game will begin at 5 p.m.

Alia Afshar and Greg Bitton were crowned Homecoming King and Queen at halftime of the game. Afshar is a co-captain on the CHS field hockey team.

RB Joe Pergola tries to find a hole in the Crusaders defensive line.

Justin Golden, #22, follows the lead block of Joe Pergola in an attempt for a big gain. Even a lively Homecoming crowd could not bring a victory to the winless Skippers, who fell to a 28-14 defeat at the hands of Carver.

'Sidewalk of Stars' brings personal touches to Alumni Field

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Twelve years ago, planners on the field study committee set into motion the initial conceptual groundwork for Alumni Field at Cohasset High School.

Thirteen months ago, CHS graduates and enthusiasts from near and far gathered to officially dedicate the stadium and enjoy what more than a decade of their hard work had brought.

On Tuesday, workers began cementing in the bricks near the stadium stands dedicated to those who helped make the stadium a reality.

Cohasset A.D. Clark Chatterton said that nearly 200 of the ceremonial bricks had been sold to this point and there were more orders still to be taken.

"The community has really come together for this whole project," said Chatterton. "They've been very responsive to the ceremonial brick project."

Volunteer workers gathered on Tuesday to begin cementing in the inscribed momentos on the walkway that leads people from the stands to the press box and the high school.

Throughout the project, Chatterton estimated that donated labor and expertise from around the community had shaved at least $100,000 off of the project.

This "Sidewalk of Stars" as it has been lovingly termed was established to help fund some of the finishing touches to the project, which among other things provided the school with a new track, and athletic field for the soccer, field hockey and football teams, new baseball diamonds, tennis courts, drainage improvements, an updating of Milliken Field, a 500-seat grandstand as well as a state of the art scoreboard and press box.

One year later, Chatterton and others around the CHS sports program don't know how they lived without their new accommodations.

"It's been all that I expected and so much more," said Chatterton. "We now have different organizations and teams wanting to come here and play. It's been a tremendous change from the way things used to be and has become the talk of the community.

"It's definitely a first rate facility."

In the past, things were not so great. Football games at Milliken Field were hampered due to the poor conditions of the stands and the fact that since the field was separated from the school, teams had no place but their bus to go and get warm at halftime.

As well, the field hockey team was playing on a field that was not regulation size and track teams could not have home meets because the accommodations failed to reach league standards.

Those problems have now been eliminated with the advent of the new stadium, which passed town meeting and a subsequent debt exclusion override in 1994.

Town meeting had defeated the original move for new fields in 1985.

"Things are much better than they were before, for both the players as well as the fans," said Chatterton. "We now have the school available for people to get warm and use the facilities during the games and the teams have a locker room readily available."

Chatterton emphasized that Alumni Field was not just for the high school athletes and their fans, but instead for the whole community.

"No exaggeration, their has to be 50 to 75 people out here everyday using the walking track," said Chatterton. "The track is open to all the community and people have been taking us up on our offer and making good use of it."

In addition, the lights were designed to keep the track well lit and safe during the nighttime hours.

Gary Smith taps bricks into place along the "Sidewalk of Stars" that's being put in place next to the grandstand at Alumni Field. Rocky Laugelle and Neven Bunstein are seen working in the background.

Chatterton said the lights have brought some added revenue to the school in the form of night football games, but added that attendance this year was not as high as was hoped.

"We saw a good bump last year, but I'm surprised and a little disappointed that attendance this year hasn't been what we were expecting," said Chatterton.

Fans and others around the CHS sports program also expressed their pleasure after the first year of Alumni Field.

"This year has been phenomenal, I just only wish we were able to practice on this field also," said said head field hockey coach Debby Bostwick, who puts her team through their paces "on a 2-by-2 field in front of the school. The field conditions on the practice field are a little rough, but it does sharpen their ball-handling skills.

"Alumni Field is one of the best fields you are going to find on the South Shore."

SPINNING is a combination of visualization technique and cardiovascular exercise—all achieved on a specially-designed, stationary racing bicycle. Set in a classroom environment, participants of all fitness levels are taken on a "spin," or cycling workout, under the guidance of a trained instructor to the beat of dynamic music that fills the room. The trainer and the music set the pace; you adjust the bike's tension to your fitness level.

In our ongoing commitment to your health and fitness program, BayState Athletic Club is proud to offer its own, unique SPINNING studio and invites you to come in and SPIN! As an introduction, we're offering free, open-house SPINNING classes on Saturday, November 1st. Try a class and we'll provide all you need to know about this exciting cardiovascular exercise.

Join us at BayState Athletic Club to experience a whole new revolution in motion...and may the Tour de Force be with you.

CHS field hockey team is tourney bound

Senior leadership is one of the main reason why the CHS field hockey team is heading for the state tournament for the first time in three years. Pictured is this year's senior group. In fron are co-captains Alia Afshar and Katie Buckley. In the back row are Kristen Reynolds, Sue Gill, Lauren Dooley and Lindy Holway. Buckley and Dooley were named this week to the South Shore League all-star team.

When last we left the CHS field hockey team, the girls needed four points in their last four games to get an invitation to the state tournament.

Mission accomplished.

It took all four games to do it, but the Lady Skippers (7-6-3) earned their ticket to the dance Monday evening before an enthusiastic crowd at Alumni Field with a 1-1 tie against East Bridgewater in their final game of the regular season.

This is the first trip to post-season play for the team in three years. The first round pairings will be announced next week.

An ecstatic head coach Debby Bostwick had nothing but praise for her girls after the victory.

"I could not be prouder of this group," said Bostwick. "They accepted the challenge and made something happen and they played their guts out. A win would have given us a little better seeding, but I'll happily take the tie."

"It's taken us three years to get back here and the girls really worked their butt's off to make the tourney," she added. "They should be very proud."

On the way to the final game the girls dropped a 2-1 decision to SSL champion Hanover, but defeated Scituate 2-1 and tied Carver 1-1.

Lauren Dooley scored the lone goal in Hanover loss as well as in the East Bridgewater tie, which was assited by co-captain Alia Afshar and Meghan Connelly.

Dooley as well as defender Katie "K.B." Buckley were named this week to the South Shore League all-star team.

As well, the team was given the sportsmanship award from the SSL field hockey association.

Going into the final contest, Bostwick said the object was to keep the ball as much as possible on the left side of the field, away from the stronger players of the Vikings.

.Aside from a mistake on a defensive corner that led to the East Bridgewater goal, Bostwick said she was very happy with the way her team responded to the pressure of playing for the playoffs.

"We've been playing really well," said Bostwick. "We were in a position to tie Hanover and defeat Carver, but it wasn't meant to be. Things have come together for this team."

Bostwick singled out the play of sophomore keeper Melissa Rosano as well as Wendy Holloway, Alia Afshar, Meghan Connelly and Katie Devine for praise.

"Kristen Reynolds was just incredible" against E.B., she added. "She went up with the strength of the other team all game long and gave a great accounting of herself."

For Your Health

Your new beginning

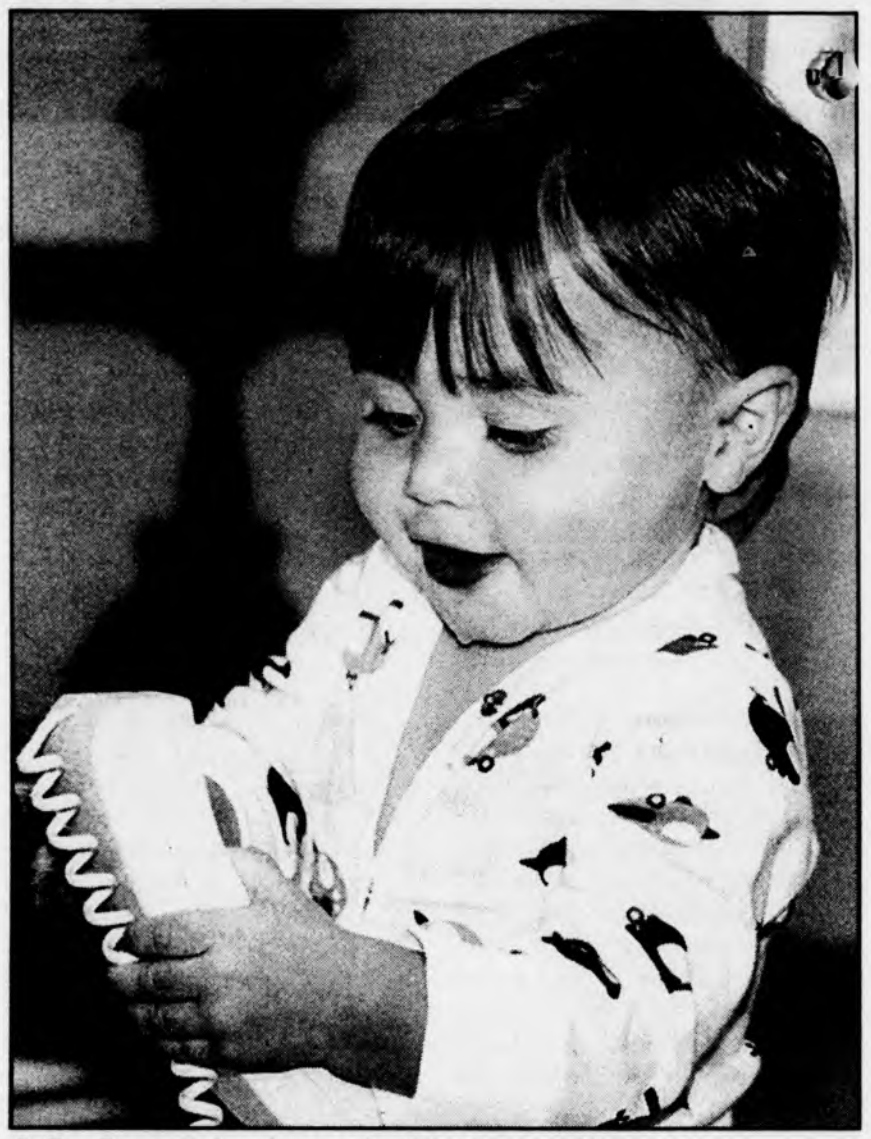
Take care of the new baby and you

By Esther Csapo Rastegari
CORRESPONDENT

Unbuckling the carseat for the first time, it hits you - this precious baby is yours, yours to care for, yours to love. The pregnancy was long, labor and delivery seemed longer; only the hospital stay was short. Reality is starting to sink in. Bringing your newborn into your home is exciting, but scary as well. This new baby is such a big responsibility. Your hopes and dreams and fears swirl together.

As a pediatric nurse visiting newborns and their parents at home, I see parents who are tired and often overwhelmed. No one is ever really prepared for the 24-hour life, the round-the-clock care of a newborn. Wonderful and unique as this time is, it is exhausting. Here are some tips and information to get you through the next few weeks.

Grab rest when you can



It sounds easy and obvious, but it isn't. Gone are six to eight hours of sleep a night. A newborn needs to be fed several times nightly, diapers need changing, and this little person needs loving and comforting. Lack of sufficient nighttime sleep means trying to catch up during the day. Take up friends and family on their offers of help. No one person needs to do everything, but if several people each do a little, your life can be a lot easier.

If you are more on your own, try to just focus on those things that need immediate attention. Rest whenever the baby is sleeping. Let the answering machine screen your calls, or just don't answer the phone when you are resting. Getting rest allows your body to heal. It helps you be more relaxed and patient, to feel more like yourself. Taking time for yourself is not being selfish: It is allowing you to be a better parent.

Feeding

The decision to breast-feed or bottle-feed is an important, personal one. Medical research indicates many advantages to breast-feeding, but no woman should feel pressured into making the choice. A mom who is anxious with one method, but relaxed with another, is better off choosing what makes her more comfortable. The baby will benefit from the calmer environment, and the bonding between parent and child will be more firmly established. Feeding should be a pleasurable time for both baby and parent.

Breast-fed babies tend to feed more frequently and erratically in the beginning than formula-fed infants because breast milk is more easily digested. To make sure the baby is well hydrated, and to assist in the establishment of breast-feeding, try to nurse at least every two hours during the day, and every three hours at night. Certainly, if she wants to be fed more often, go ahead. Formula-fed babies can go up to three hours between feedings. At this early age, their stomachs are small, so don't expect them to take much more than two to two-and-one-half ounces per feeding. If you are bottle feeding with either formula or pumped breast milk, aim for an ounce an hour. If the baby takes two ounces, he's fine for about two hours. If she only takes half an ounce, try feeding her again in an hour.

Tina Dwyer, of the Norwell Visiting Nurse Association, relaxes Colby with play during a home visit.

Caring for mom

While both mom and dad are exhausted from the new schedule, mom has her own healing to do. Rest, as we discussed above, is an intrinsic part of healing. Are you feeding yourself as well as the baby? All new moms need plenty of fluids, but if you are breast-feeding be sure you have a glass of water or juice every time you nurse.

The vaginal flow after delivery is called lochia. In the beginning, it is quite bloody, and small (dime-sized) clots are not uncommon. Large clots (quarter-sized), going through more than one pad an hour, or dizziness should be reported to your physician. As the days pass, the flow should decrease. If you notice an increase in amount of flow, or of bright red blood, you are doing more than your body can handle right now. This is a signal for you to back off, do less, and ask for more help.

If you are walking a bit like John Wayne with bedroom slippers, here is a tip for your healing: Try a sitz bath. The warm water increases the circulation, thereby promoting healing, to the vaginal area (perineum). There is a flip side, however. Increased warmth can also increase the swelling, which may well be present. At least half an hour after doing the sitz bath, or the next time you use the toilet, place a row of witch hazel pads (Tucks, or the drugstore generic) on your sanitary napkin. Keep the Tucks in the refrigerator, or in the bathroom in a container with an ice pack. This allows you to alternate the warmth for increased circulation with the cold for decreased swelling. You'll be walking straight in no time!

Signs of dehydration

Dehydration in a newborn is dangerous. If not properly addressed, a baby's condition can worsen within a few hours, perhaps requiring a hospital admission. Therefore, prevention is always the safest path. What to look for: four or less not-very-wet diapers within 24 hours of dark yellow to brown urine. Orange spots on the diaper indicate the presence of uric acid crystals, another sign of dehydration. Further signs are a fontanel (soft spot at the top front of the head) which is sunken in, as well as a mouth that is dry. There may not have been a bowel movement for 24 to 48 hours. At the first signs of dehydration, increase the fluid intake and call the pediatrician.

Jaundice

Jaundice refers to the yellowing of the skin and whites of the eyes, which is due to an elevated amount of bilirubin in the blood. Risk factors for jaundice include preterm birth (less than 37 weeks gestation), ABO blood type incompatibility, Asian descent, bruising or cephalhematoma, and a family history of neonatal jaundice. Signs of jaundice are similar to signs of dehydration. The baby will become less and less alert, with a decrease in muscle tone. This is cause for concern and you should contact the pediatrician right away. An elevated bilirubin is confirmed by testing the newborn's blood. The bilirubin level of a full-term baby usually peaks around the third to fifth day, while the level of a preterm infant will peak a day or two later.

Postpartum depression

While this time is often overwhelming, it is also wondrous and full of joy. If the joy and wonder is absent, and all you feel is incompetent, overwhelmed, sad and tearful, it is important to speak to a professional skilled in handling such issues. If focusing on your needs feels selfish, do it for your new baby. The better you feel, the more you are able to give emotionally to your child and the more you will be able to bond together. Help is available, and you deserve to receive it.

Project Safeguard health program returns to Cohasset

By Robert Ziff
CORRESPONDENT

For seventh-grade students and their parents, Wednesday, Oct. 15 was no ordinary day in Cohasset where the second annual Project S.A.F.E.G.U.A.R.D. (Student and Family Education Guards Us Against Reliance on Drugs) was held. Project Safeguard is one of the events that is part of the school's health education program in conjunction with the Cohasset Health Education Advisory Council.

Rather than attending classes at school, the students and their parents congregated at the common, which was termed "Cohasset's Campus on the Common," to listen to speakers and attend workshops that address issues ranging from the use of tobacco, alcohol and drugs, the role of parents, the development of healthy and constructive attitudes, family relations, life ambitions, gender respect and other subjects that confront today's youths and their parents. For the day, the town hall, the Second Congregational Church, and St. Stephen's Church were converted into makeshift classrooms where the groups met.

Kathy Grossman, the mother of Lindsay Grossman, one of the seventh-grade students, said that the stories that were told were done so in a graphic and honest way. Grossman said that when she was brought up she didn't have this type of education and that it is something that her children need to know about. She is a strong advocate in keeping the program in the school's curriculum.

At 7:40 a.m. Ed Gerety, the keynote speaker and author of "Teen Power, Too" kicked off the morning with a powerful and energetic speech given to the entire seventh-grade class as well as all the parents who were in attendance. Then the group as a whole was divided into smaller groups. Gerety spoke to more than 80,000 students last year and says that the importance of the project lies in the fact that it brings families together to talk about issues that have a direct impact on their lives, and helps the students reach their full potential. In his speech he spoke of the importance of a positive attitude, being patient and working for a purpose in order to reach the goals and dreams that we all set up for ourselves.

Dan Duval told a heartbreaking story of how his life as a star high school athlete and promising future were destroyed by his love affair with drugs and alcohol and how that changed his life so drastically. With his fine sense of humor Jack Agati spoke to the parents about parent-child relations touching on subjects such as how they could help their children become independent and self-sufficient, time management issues, and who's really in charge, the parent or the child?

Karen Burns, who three-and-a-half years ago was diagnosed with cancer of the larynx as a result of smoking, spoke to the seventh-graders through an artificial voice mechanism that she held against her throat. She said that every day 6,000 teens in the United States start smoking. One half of them will become addicted and of those a third will die from smoking related diseases. Because she breathes through the hole in her neck she can no longer swim or take showers, for if water were to get in she would drown. Holding up a jar filled with black, gooey tar, the amount that one would end up with in their lungs if they were to smoke a pack a day for a year, her chilling message of the hazards of smoking came across crystal clear. Pam Laffin also described the toll smoking has taken on her life.

Susan Etkind, the head of the Diversity Committee in Cohasset who was also in attendance, said that the people there that day spoke about things they had never talked about before and that she received some good pointers on how to approach these issues in the future.

Cohasset Police Sgt. Robert Jackson and Officer Lisa Matos teamed up with attorney Lisa Hewitt-Dick, who resides in Cohasset, and gave talks on the legal consequences of alcohol and drug use by minors. Tom Penichter, Tony Burns and Jeff O'Brien of MVP Strategies, addressed the issue of how subtle and blatant sexism in our society erodes interpersonal respect.

The students and parents attended five sessions throughout the course of the day where they had the option of doing so separately or together. They were encouraged to attend at least one session together.

Maureen Smith who attended a similar program in Weston, Mass. played a key role in bringing Project Safeguard to Cohasset.

She said that the project is important as it provides an opening for children and parents to enter discussions about the important issues that were presented throughout the day.

"On one of the comment forms from last year," she said, "one of the students wrote, 'I'll never forget this for as long as I live.'"

Smith and many others want to make sure the program remains a part of the school curriculum.

Halloween fair bigger and better

There will be lots of new games and surprises for South Shore ghosts and goblins at this Sunday's annual South Shore Community Center Nursery School Halloween Fair. Encircling Cohasset Common this year will be a host of games of skill and chance for children of all ages. Adding to the fun for the first time this year will be an arts and craft activity and Halloween-themed water target game. Back again this year are annual favorites like the moon walk, Ghostball, Treasure Hunt and Donuts on a String, as well as lots of refreshments.

The fair gets underway Oct. 26 at 1:30 p.m. sharp with a costume parade led by a friendly witch. The spooktacular time continues until 3:30 p.m.

Tickets for all games and activities may be purchased at the fair. Tickets are three for $1. Most games and activities require two or three tickets to participate. Proceeds from the fair benefit the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, including the school's scholarship and program funds.

For more information about the fair or the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, call Lynne Sheridan at 383-0036.

Investing: Self-defense against brokers' mismanagement

By Amy K. Barrett
Worth Magazine

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

What do you do if your relationship with your broker goes sour? For example, what if your broker buys and sells securities in your account without your permission, ignores your request to buy or sell, stops returning your calls, or fails to give you all the relevant information on a supposed hot security?

Investors are protected by the Securities Act of 1934 when a broker breaks the rules. However, even though there are several organizations that can help catch the infraction and enforce punishment — the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), the National Association of Securities Dealers Inc. (NASD), your state's securities agency and exchanges, to name a few — the onus is on the individual investor to take action first.

The most important step in seeing that justice is served and, perhaps more importantly, to recouping losses is to notify your broker of your complaints immediately after you discover wrongdoing. A delayed response may be read as tacit consent by the arbitrators or jurors who later hear your case.

A prompt reaction on your part will also ensure that you will not miss the deadline for filing a complaint. In Massachusetts, the statute of limitations for filing suit is four years after the date of discovery.

"The biggest problem for most people," says Gerri Detweiler, a consultant on investor concerns, "is that they wait before they act."

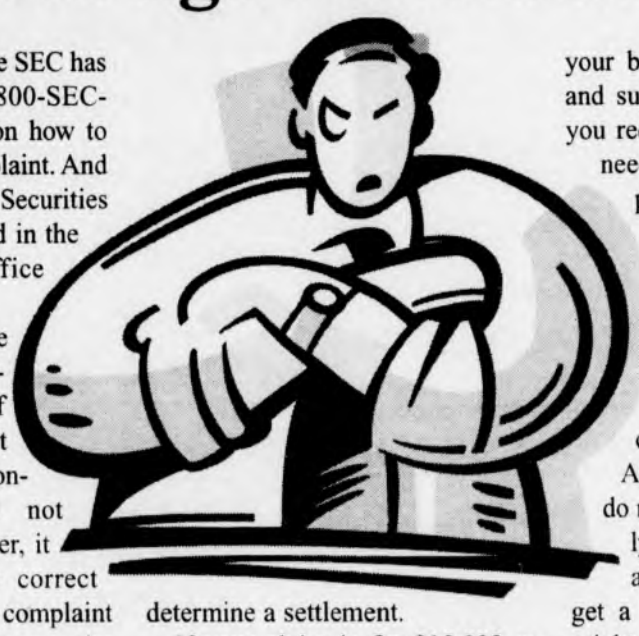
The best way to initiate an investigation is to write a letter to your broker that outlines your complaints and requests an explanation and a solution, says John Markese, president of the American Association of Individual Investors in Chicago. Include your account information and any relevant documents. Specify a reasonable deadline — 10 days, for instance — by which time you need a response, so that your complaint does not get shelved.

Then, send a copy of the letter to your broker's manager as well as to the compliance officer of the firm — the person who is charged with the responsibility of making sure the brokerage firm's employees adhere to SEC rules. Send all of the letters by certified mail, and keep the receipts so you can prove later that they were received. Sometimes a strong letter is all that is needed to get your broker on track.

But what if you get the runaround? Then it's time to alert the market watchdogs. The SEC has a toll-free number (1-800-SEC-0330) with instructions on how to write to them with a complaint. And alert the Massachusetts Securities Division, which is housed in the secretary of state's office (617-727-3548).

You should alert the NASD as well. This organization has thousands of broker-members and if it turns out that the questionable transactions did not involve an NASD member, it can direct you to the correct exchange. You can file a complaint on the Internet site (http://www.nasdr.com), or contact the regulation division's regional office to send supporting documents or ask questions. The telephone number in Boston is (617) 261-0800.

At this point, the key to building a convincing case is documentation. To charge a broker with wrongdoing, you have to be able to provide evidence that he violated the rules. Regulatory organizations usually ask to see documents that support your accusation — signed affidavits, financial statements, copies of tax returns, even notes about your conversations if available — before they pursue your case.



The NASD, for instance, states on its Web site that "your complaint by itself, without supporting evidence, is usually not sufficient to prove that there has been a violation."

Once you get the regulatory ball rolling, then it's time to think about how to recover the money you have lost. For if the NASD finds your broker to be guilty, it may fine, suspend or bar him from working in the securities industry; but it will not necessarily help you recover money. Its investigation is primarily concerned with bringing the broker or his firm into compliance with industry rules and regulations.

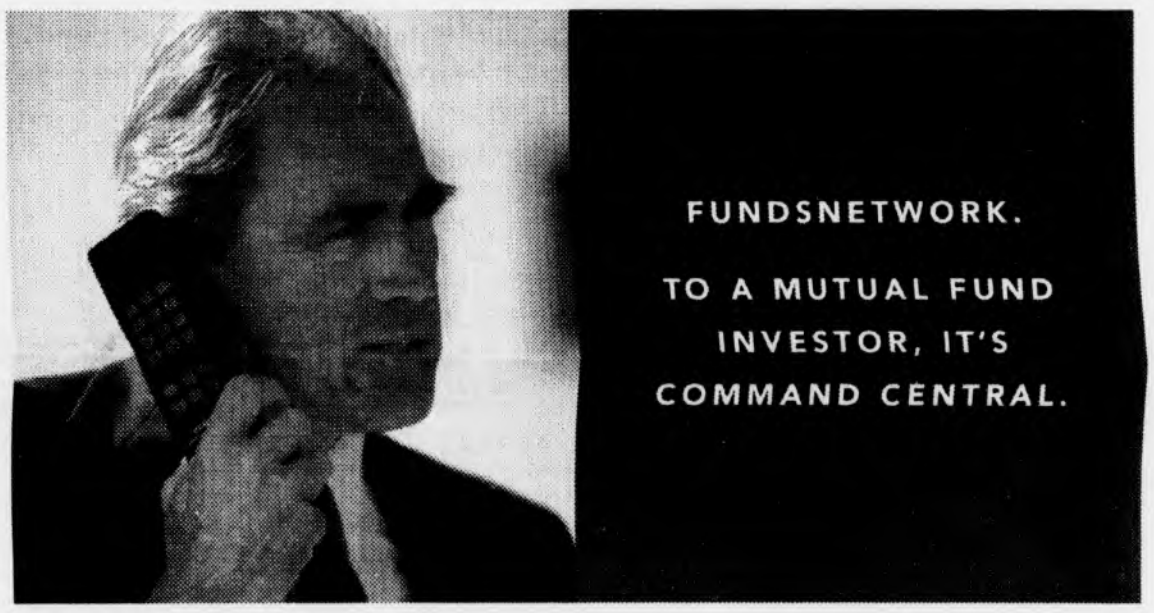
To resolve financial disputes you can usually choose between mediation, arbitration or a lawsuit — although many brokerage houses now require investors to agree to settle any disputes by arbitration in order to avoid costly and time-consuming court battles.

The least expensive and litigious method is to hire a mediator through the NASD to help your broker and you find a mutually acceptable solution. The NASD charges a fee for this, the amount of which is based on the complexity and time horizon of the case. Unlike the other two methods, mediation is voluntary and a settlement must be reached with agreement on both sides. The final decision is not binding under law.

If both sides cannot easily cooperate, arbitration would be the next best option. By filing a statement of claim with the NASD arbitration forum (again, for a fee), you can have a panel of impartial industry experts hear the case and determine a settlement.

If your claim is for $10,000 or less, the arbitrators will most likely decide your case based on your and your broker's written submissions and supporting documents, unless you request a hearing. You do not need a lawyer for the arbitration process, although you and your broker are allowed to have one. Most importantly, the arbitrators' decision is final and binding and usually cannot be appealed for review by a court.

And if these avenues of redress do not work for you — especially if the broker has committed a criminal offense — you can get a lawyer and go to court. It might be helpful to call your local bar association and request the names of attorneys who specialize in securities-fraud cases.



Of course, before you wage a battle against your broker, it is important to remember that just because you have lost money does not necessarily mean he has done something wrong — stocks can plunge without warning, after all.

But you should protect yourself by keeping a close eye on your account and documenting its progress. If you suspect wrongdoing, do not sit back and watch.

"Sometimes investors will go along with an inappropriate investment while it goes up and then fight it when it goes down," says Markese.

And that will not make a panel of arbitrators very sympathetic.

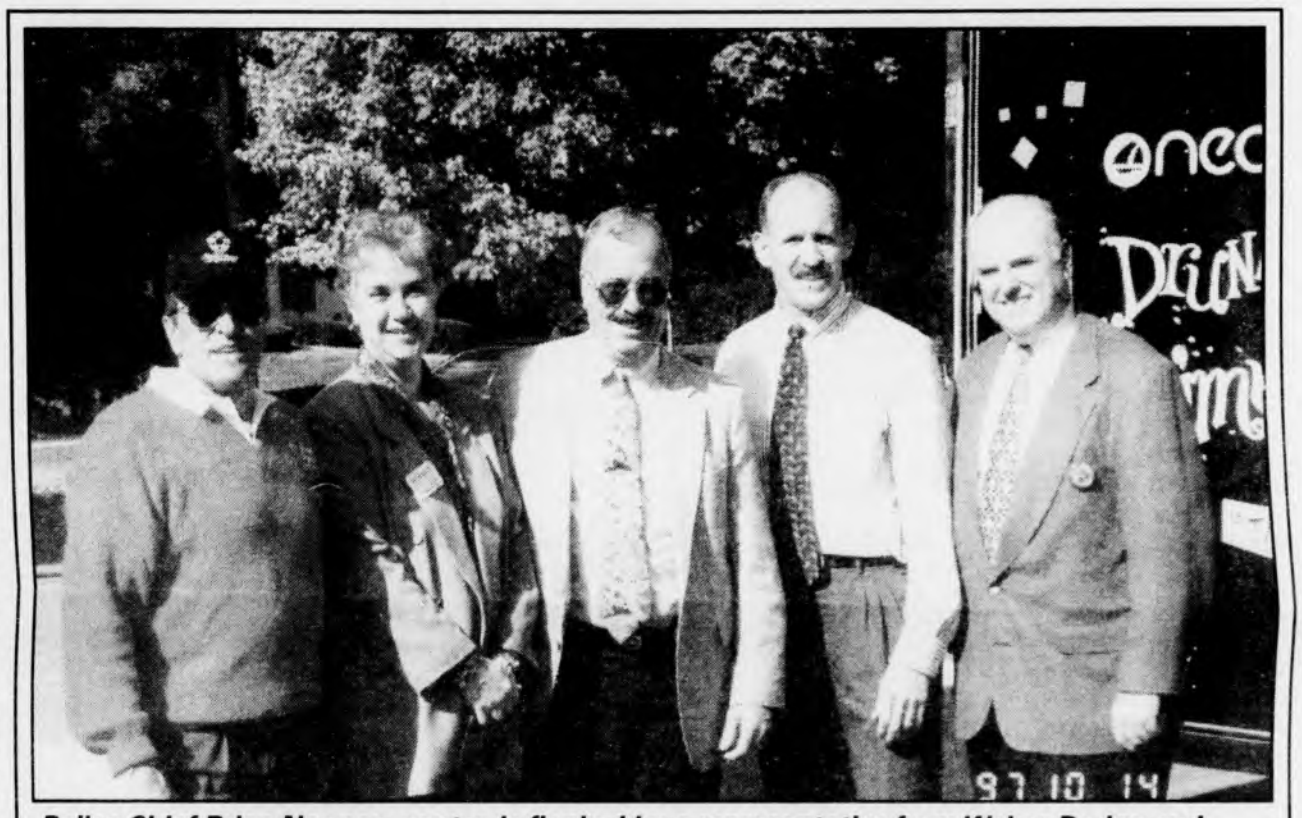
POLICE BRIEFS



Be safe on Halloween

The police are encouraging safety first on Halloween next Friday. To that end, they are offering free candy bags and glow sticks to Cohasset children. The bags, which are silver and decorated with safety tips, are available at the police station.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said if parents find any suspect candy, they can call the police station which will call the candy hot line.

Community policing grant awarded

Police chief Brian Noonan said the department has been awarded an $11,000 policing grant which will be used to beef up bicycle patrols and add new marine patrols. The marine patrols will use the harbormaster's boat. A uniformed officer will patrol alone or with the harbormaster. Noonan said there have been a lot of complaints about drunk boaters.

Sex offenders

fense after Aug. 1, 1981, was required to register with local police departments, which are working to develop formal community notification plans.

According to Grassie, the [illegible] set police will come up with [illegible] cial plan to notify community [illegible] nizations, including youth groups, of Level 3 offenders once the state completes the categorization of sex offenders in Cohasset.

Until then, the town is taking a "wait and see" approach.

"We are working on a policy on how to notify people. We plan on combing the guidelines from the Sex Offender Registry with what other towns' policies, practices and procedures are," Grassie said.

Level 1 sex offenders are those deemed to be at low risk of committing repeat offenses.

Level 2 sex offenders are regarded as having a moderate risk of repeating a sexual crime, and Level 3 individuals are considered high risks in the community.

Officials estimate there are some 6,000 convicted sex offenders who have not registered. Those may include some who have moved out of the state as well as others who are ignoring the law.

The state set aside $300,000 to operate the registry in fiscal year 1997 and an additional $500,000 for FY1998.

In April, the state executive office of public safety acknowledged the public notification process for Level 2 and 3 sex offenders at the local level would be a slow one.

In the meantime, the police department can't officially respond to inquiries about any sex offenders who might live or work within a one-mile radius of a specified address.

Since the registration program was first announced, Grassie said the police received three written inquiries.

Neighborhood associations, youth organizations and day-care centers can provide police with the name of a contact person so they can be given a list of Level 2 and 3 sex offenders when the classification has been completed.

Because Level 3 sex offenders pose the highest risk within the community, the presence and identity of a Level 3 sex offender can be posted in public places, including the police station, public library and other places frequented by the public.

The law also allows local newspapers to publish the identity of Level 3 sex offenders.

The town hasn't published the names of Level 3 sex offenders in town because they haven't yet been categorized, Grassie said.

Once that has been completed, Grassie said if the police knew an individual was classified as a predator, they would attempt to notify everyone within close proximity.

"If I think the person next door is a problem, I would go to the people in the area and give them a heads up," he said.

State law requires that the offenders provide the police with their home and work addresses.

Grassie said Cohasset police will follow specific guidelines set forth by the state in relation to sex offenders.

However, Grassie said while he thinks the law is a positive step, it will not protect all children.

"Parents should keep their eyes open and make kids aware of strangers," he said.

"In a town like Cohasset, kids walk and ride bikes and don't have an adult with them 24 hours a day. Parents should educate their children that things could happen."

Kevin Ulmer's Lobster Lab claws for survival

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Lobster Lab ain't down yet.

The embattled proposal to turn the Hagerty House into a marine educational research facility dodged the latest torpedo and has survived to at least the next request for proposal (RFP) stage.

Pleas from a majority of selectmen to tear the former Cohasset Colonials showroom down to make way for more parking at the harbor-front site failed to win a majority at Monday's session of special town meeting.

By a slim 117-110 vote margin, local biologist and Ph.d., Kevin Ulmer walked away with the hope that this time, his concept to bring what he describes as the excitement of hands-on scientific research to all ages will at last become a reality.

"This is an opportunity to proved a resource unique in the region where students

Annual Halloween fair scares up a crowd

By Robert Ziff

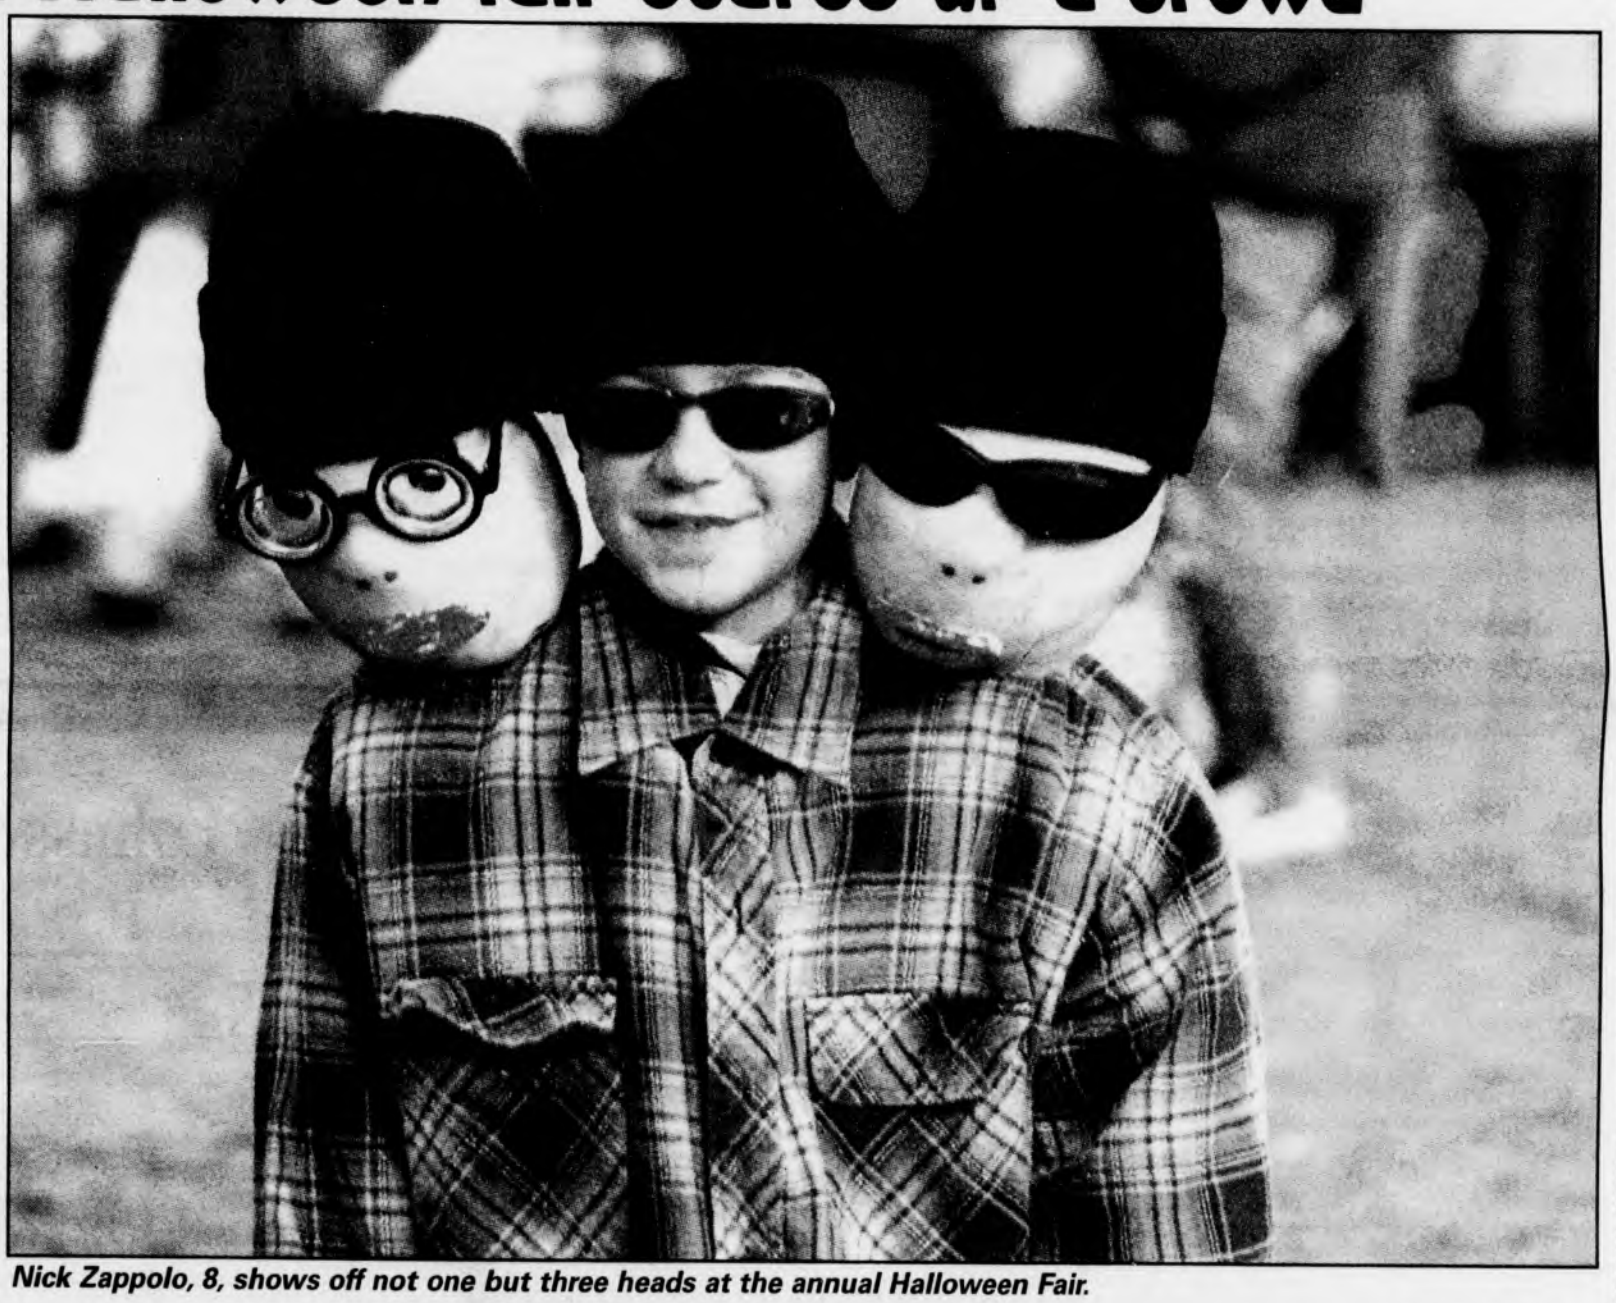
Lions and tigers and bears, "Oh my!" They, along with other children decked out in a wide assortment of costumes including "little" Big Birds, Supermen, clowns, ballerinas, pumpkins, cowboys, Dalmatians, cats, witches, ghosts, fish, bunnies, devils, Pooh Bears and Elmos.



"The fair is to celebrate those young at heart."
—LYNNE SHERIDAN,
NURSERY SCHOOL DIRECTOR.

And that's not all, there were insects galore such as lady bugs, butterflies, bumble bees and an elaborately created, bright-green praying mantis. They all congregated on Cohasset's Common Sunday for the Halloween fair.

The kids, most of whom brought their parents, all had a ball participating in the games and activities. The favorites seemed to be the Fun House, the Haunted House, the Moon Walk, Donuts on a String, Ghostball and the Treasure Hunt. At 1:30 p.m. sharp, the parade began, led by a man on horseback and a friendly witch.

The blustery cool day with the autumn leaves falling off the trees under the overcast sky was the perfect setting for the fair. With a larger turnout than last year, hundreds of children, oblivious to the cold, could not get enough of the fall fun.

Cohasset man to pay tribute to Princess Diana

Land-mine survivor to speak at Kennedy Library

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A Cohasset man will be back in town this weekend to promote a cause that is very near to his heart.

Jerry White, co-founder of Washington-based Landmine Survivors Network, is one of several guest speakers Sunday at the John F. Kennedy Library's "New England Town Meeting to Ban Landmines."

Part of White's talk on helping landmine victims will be a tribute to Britain's Princess Diana who drew attention to the scourge of land mines on her trips to Angola and Bosnia earlier this year.

White, a Cohasset High School graduate whose mother Mimi White lives on Sheldon Road, knows about land mines first-hand. In 1984, White — then a college student at Brown University — stepped on a land mine while exploring Israel on a hiking trip. The encounter cost him part of his right leg.

White's remarks at the Kennedy Library will focus on victim assistance. As an American, he can contrast getting the best rehabilitation possible to those who suffer with little support in third-world countries.

"Victim assistance is more than prostheses," White said. "It is providing vocational and employment training so they don't become beggars."

White and his partner, Ken Rutherford, another amputee, met Princess Diana at the land-mine conference in June where she was the keynote speaker. The late princess subsequently chose LSN to host her three-day visit to Bosnia in August where she went house-to-house visiting land-mine survivors and their families.

White said he will show slides of the princess's trip to Bosnia as part of the tribute.

"People over-emphasize that she was part of the movement to ban land mines,"

COHASSET'S WEEK

Setting the record straight

In an unfortunate coincidence, last week's story about the sex offender registry detailed the history of a sex offender named Mark Goldman. This 36-year-old sex offender is in no way related to the Goldman family of Norwell who have a 27-year-old son, also named Mark, who resides in Norwell and North Cambridge.

Norwell's Mark Goldman, the son of Henry and Joanne Goldman of Prospect Street, graduated from Norwell High School in 1988. Since his graduation from Bridgewater State College he has been employed as an echocardiographer at St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

Henry Goldman is the retired principal of Norwell's junior high school, since named the Henry E. Goldman Junior High School in his honor.

Library to get air conditioning

Special town meeting voters approved spending an additional $17,500 to air condition the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The library went out to bid twice for the project. The first time, there were no takers and the second time, Apex Corporation was the sole bidder at $64,900.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Apex's references checked out and he recommended the company be awarded the bid.

Fire radios are approved

The town will spend $5,500 to purchase six new two-way radios for the fire department. Chief Roger Lincoln explained that the radios are needed so that each fire-fighter has one. Lincoln said it is important there be one radio per fire-fighter to ensure the fire-fighters' safety should they get separated on fire gound.

Request for spending overview

Ray Kasperowicz of South Main Street suggested that at future town meetings, officials provide an overview possibly with view graphs of the spending patterns to enable citizens to follow more clearly.

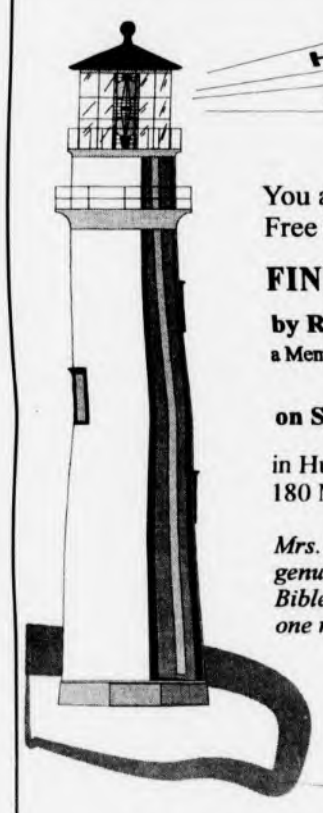
Money for this week's Special Town Meeting articles came from a combination of free cash, borrowing, overlay surplus and taxation making it difficult to understand, he said.

Police equipment authorized

The police will purchase a mobile data terminal to enable an officer to track outstanding warrants and stolen motor vehicles while on patrol. The department will also purchase a new breathalyzer and two moving radar units for cruisers. Voters at Monday's special town meeting approved spending $15,800 for the capital items.

Public reading packet available

In an effort to promote communcation, the school department will provide a public reading packet and make if available to local citizens, the school board said last week.



The packet, which will be available in the superintendent's office, will contain recent correspondence and other documents. There will also be an index of documents including items such as teacher contracts and school handbooks, so people will know how to access those.

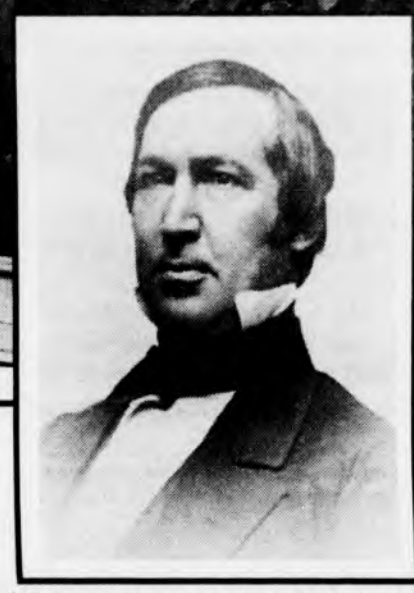
John Bates no longer haunts Maritime Museum

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

It was seasonably chilly but only a little spooky inside Cohasset's only official haunted house this week, the week of Halloween.

Yes, the upstairs floorboards did shimmy a tad, just in spots where an old nail or two had popped loose. Indeed, there were not one but two counting house desks to be found inside, with brass fittings, of just the sort Scrooge and Marley might have employed.

But ultimately, even those slight, though promising, glimmers of a ghostly presence were snuffed out when all the rest of the interior, as perhaps befits a former chandlery, was declared to be in ship-shape order.



Absent were the trails of amusingly misplaced objects ghosts are said to enjoy leaving in their wakes.

Most disappointing, the tramp of John Bates ghostly footfall was not to be detected.

In fact, the ghost has been quiet for the last 15 years, according to David Wadsworth of the Cohasset Historical Commission. Though Wadsworth acknowledged he too has heard strange sounds which appeared to be coming from the house, a little detective work has usually rooted out the source.

"Most of the noises turned out to be coming from something outside," he said.

The authentic 18th century architecture of the Maritime Museum astounds visitors from all over the world. The ghost of John Bates, at right, is said to have formerly haunted the house.

Staff photos/Alan Chapman

Nonetheless, Wadsworth opened the office the ghost used to haunt for inspection Monday and rehashed the oft-told tale of the ghost.

"It's not valid history," he said, but according to the speculation advanced by a ghost hunter, the spirit of John Bates, the last of a line of merchant ship owners, became distressed when the chandlery was cut in half in 1959 and moved from its old digs across from Bates' Wharf to its present quarters next to the Capt. John Wilson Historical House. (The move was occasioned when then owner, Mrs. William Cox, gave the building to the Historical Society.)

Absent were the trails of amusingly misplaced objects ghosts are said to enjoy leaving in their wakes.

According to Wadsworth, turning the old place into a museum was a capital idea, despite the complications from supernatural forces. "It's good to have the buildings together," he said. "They are one of the centerpiece attractions of the village during the summer months and enhance Cohasset Center visually."

Moreover, Wadsworth said visitors from all over the world are astounded by the maritime museum, due to the authentic 18th-century architecture.

"This was the standard type of construction," he said. "Hand-made, hand-cut with hand tools, one chop at a time."

As a consequence, much of the downstairs looks something like a tree house, with posts hewn from trees and still showing the knots and knarls where the branches were lopped off,

While some of the old beams are as sturdy as iron, Wadsworth said a few have turned to powder inside, a situation that occasionally calls for re-inforcement work and worries him a lot more than ghosts.

Despite his practical skepticism, after a series of strange sounds, perhaps footsteps pacing in the John Bates' former office, interrupted a meeting of the Historical Society,"word got around the building had a ghost," Wadsworth recalled.

"I wasn't myself present at that meeting," Wadsworth said, but remembered two of the museum curators had detected strange noises before.

"Then the ghost hunter Hans Holzer visited here; and though he didn't actually hear the ghost, he made the determination, most likely, it was the ghost of John Bates and he was unhappy about the move."

John Bates was the last of the family to use the chandlery office which, unlike the rugged quarters in the downstairs chandlery, looks like a room used by a gentle-

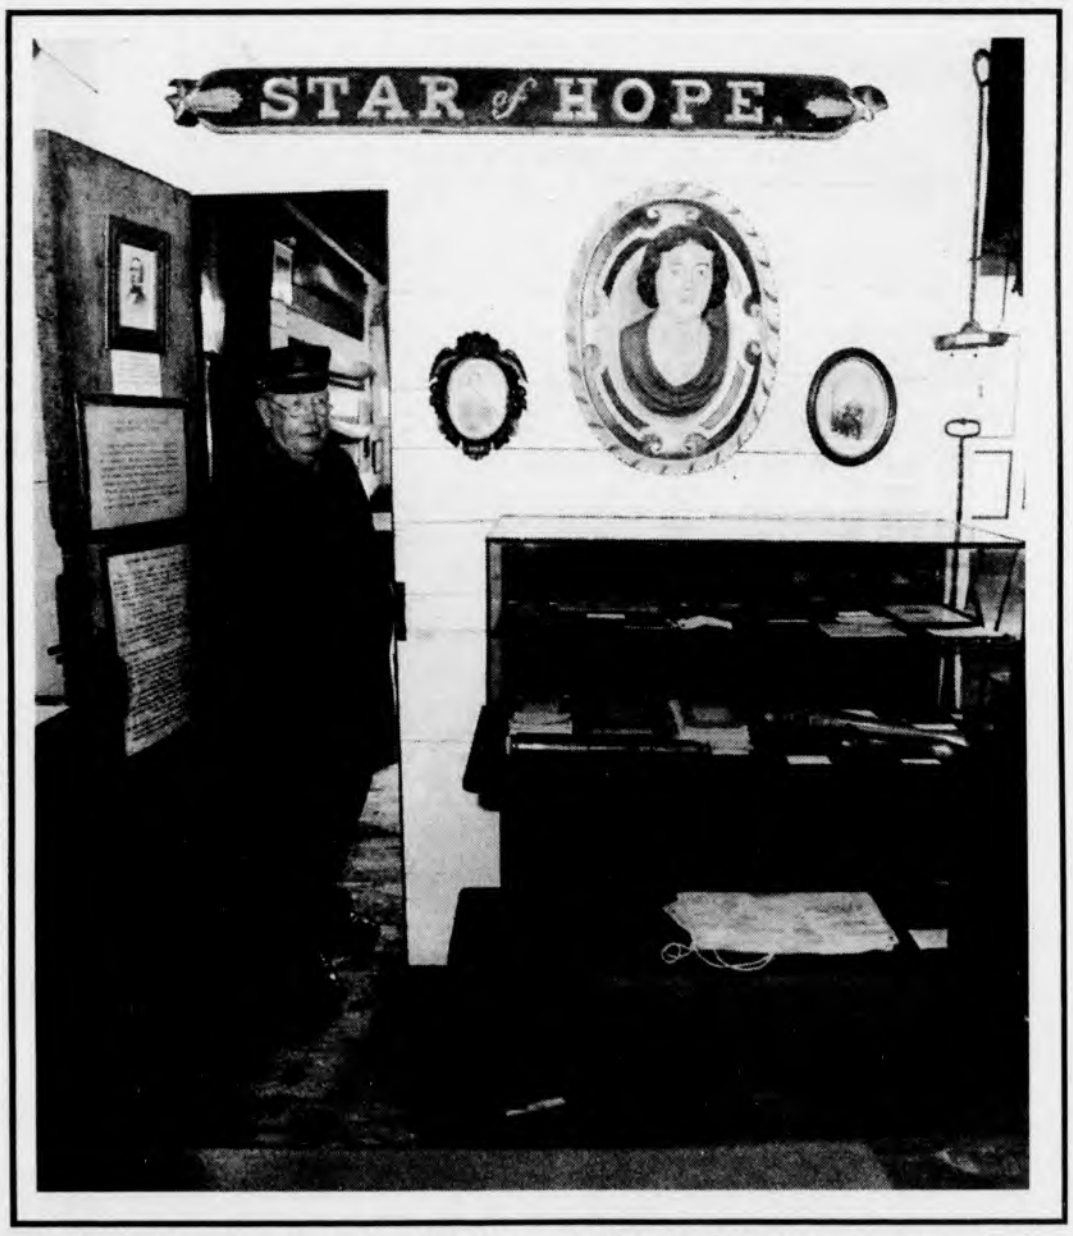
Haunted House Names: The Maritime Museum or The Ship's Chandlery Museum



Address: 4 Elm St.

Former Spirit: Ghost of John Bates, d. 1886. He is believed (by some) to have haunted the premises between 1960 and 1972 but might since have moved away.

Current Owner: The Cohasset Historical Society

Open to the Public: June through September afternoons (except Mondays)

Features: An example of 18th-century post and beam construction, the museum was originally built as a ship's chandlery and previously stood near the wharf on land across the street from the site now occupied by the Chart House. A gift to the Historical Society, it was cut in half and moved by truck to the village in 1959 where it has since been nestled under a rock ledge and surrounded by gardens. In 1994, after a series of strange events, it was listed in the "National Directory of Haunted Places" as a "Ghostly Abode."

Kevin Ulmer's Lobster Lab claws for survival

spend time pursuing their interest and curiosity about science," he said.

For Ulmer, now the real work begins. No longer backed by the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, the non-profit group that renovated the Lightkeepers Residence on nearby Government Island, Ulmer will form a new entity headed by a board of scientific overseers. He must also set out to raise anywhere from $400,000 to $1 million to refurbish the house and get the lab up and running.

Already committed to serve on the board is an impressive list that includes Richard Roberts, 1993 Nobel Laureate, of the N.E. Bio Labs in Beverly; Eric Lander of the Whitehead Institute MIT Human Genome Center in Boston; and Jake Peirson, retired associate dean at the joint program in oceanography between Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute and MIT, Ulmer said.

Special town meeting authorized selectmen to issue an RFP for a learning lab at the now dilapidated Victorian-era house. However, that is no guarantee that the process will be a smooth one.

Last spring's annual town meeting heartily endorsed the lobster lab but selectmen — who oppose the project — demanded so much detail in the months that followed that the Lightkeepers, which offered to raise hundreds of thousands of dollars for the project, gave up in frustration.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, the sole selectman to back issuing another RFP, told voters Monday they had nothing to lose.

> "One more shot can't hurt anyone or anything."
> – SELECTMAN DIANE SULLIVAN.

"One more shot can't hurt anyone or anything," she said.

The previous RFP authorized selectmen to lease the building for 10 years at $1 a year. Those were the same terms offered to Cohasset Youth Resources which leases the Independence Building in the village for the teen center and Cohasset Maritime Institute which leases the boat house on the Hagerty Propery for a rowing center.

Joseph McElroy, 59 Windy Hill Rd., former president of CLC, told voters that parking concerns at the site is a "red herring." He said during his 100-plus weekend days on Government Island when the Lightkeepers Residence was being refurbished there was a total dearth of boat trailers in that area.

But Alex Koines, 380 Atlantic Ave., said too much of the harbor front is occupied by private entities and he was worried about giving property away at the town's only public boat ramp.

In trying to persuade voters to tear the building down, Selectman Nan Roth said the lobster lab would be better suited at the high school integrated with school programs.

"The town should not lose control of this property," Roth said. "There are other places for labs but no other place to provide access to this beautiful harbor."

The town purchased the 2.2-acre Hagerty property four years ago. The Hagerty Property Committee was appointed to develop a passive recreational area for the site. The committee which has dwindled from 15 to about eight members is still developing the plan, member Veneta Roebuck said. She said the group has held 125 meetings in the four years and envisions a pavilion and a park area with granite seats, landscaping and trees and shrubs there. She explained the group had had to deal with demolishing the factory buildings, finding a use for the old boat house and trying to grapple with what to do with the house, which at one time they considered leasing or moving across Parker Avenue to a private marina.

Before the town bought the site, the Hagerty property was home to Cohasset Colonials, a furniture kit manufacturing company, which is now located on Beal Street in Hingham.

Hagerty committee chairman Alfred Moore said it was important that the town purchase the property because it was zoned industrial and with the sort of buildings there would not have attracted "clean industry."

Now that the area is cleaned up, it's time to move forward with the site, he said.

Bates no longer haunts Museum

man. In the plain and narrow room with its small brick hearth and tongue and groove walls, there are even ledger books and spectacles on the desk, to suggest the owner might have just stepped away.

But these are all displays provided by the Historical Society. In fact, none of the furnishings ever belonged to Bates, and as for the focus of the room, the counting desk that hugs the inside wall below a picture of a majestic mackerel schooner, it once belonged to the rival Tower Brothers company, Wadsworth said.

Personally, Wadsworth also said, he doubted there ever was a ghost in the museum, a view championed by Historical Commission Chairman Noel Ripley.

According to Ripley, the house is really unsuitable for a ghost.

"It's too small," he said. "You need a big place with a lot of towers and rooms and long passageways, so you can wonder which door the spook is behind."

Furthermore, with the price of real estate so high in Cohasset, the Chairman doubted there were really any haunted houses here.

Special town meeting lays foundation for new sidewalk

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A brick sidewalk on South Main Street in front of St. Stephen's Church could be in the village's future.

Monday's session of special town meeting authorized spending $10,000 from surplus revenue to design and engineer plans for a new sidewalk from the corner of Robert E. Jason Lane to the intersection of South Main and Elm streets.

The sidewalk will be the first step in a plan to revitalize the beleaguered village area.

The plans will be based on design concepts from the village "charrette" held last December. The charrette was an open forum sponsored by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and Cohasset Rotary to look at ways to enhance the village area. The architectural design firm Carr, Lynch and Sandell, Inc. were the planning consultants for the workshop which attracted about 40 people.

Detailed plans are needed to be eligible for a state transportation enhancement grant which would pay for 90 percent of the sidewalk, Chamber of Commerce vice president Dean Rizzo said.

If the town qualifies, the grant money would not be available until 1999.

Rizzo explained that the revitalization committee planned to return to town meeting in the spring with a more extensive plan for the entire village. He said proceeding with the sidewalk along South Main to Elm Street is one part that can be separated out and won't conflict with later improvements.

In a majority vote, the advisory committee did not recommend spending the $10,000 because the board had reservations about proceeding with the project at this time.

But selectmen endorsed the plan.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the narrow sidewalk in front of St. Stephen's has been a safety factor.

Herbert Towle cautioned that blasting the ledge by St. Stephen's to create an area wide enough for a proper sidewalk there could be disastrous. He said no one knows what the rock is like inside and he worried the church building could be undermined.

The existing sidewalk by the ledge outcropping is level with the road and is delineated by a white line. Cars often drive up on the area to get past oncoming traffic making it very dangerous for pedestrians.

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce hosted a meeting last week with state officials and about 40 interested citizens to provide an overview of the charrette process and design concept for the village.

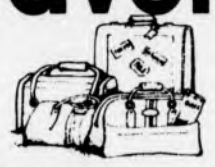
Turkey Hill opening day celebration

The Coalition to Preserve Turkey Hill invites you to the Opening Day Celebration at Turkey Hill Saturday, Nov. 1, from noon to 3 p.m.



Please come, bring colleagues, friends and family for an afternoon featuring live music, hayrides, story telling, nature walks and fall fun outdoors!

There is much to celebrate: presenting this wonderful property was accomplished only with a creative and dedicated partnership including the towns of both Hingham and Cohasset, three land trusts, the state through its Open Space Self-Help Program, and hundreds of individuals who contributed critical personal funds. Preserving this land forever was truly a team effort!

A brief update on progress since the land transaction was completed in May: a landscape plan for the property has been approved, the Nike site has been dismantled (except for one building retained for historic purposes), the residence is under major renovation, new parking lots are under construction, and new trails are being readied for public access. Rain date is Nov. 2.

Parking will be off Turkey Hill Lane. BYO picnic; beverages and desserts will be provided. If you have any questions, please call The Trustees of Reservations' Southeast Regional Office at (781) 821-2977.

Acceptance of private ways is a touchy subject for many

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The debate over accepting private ways has kicked into a higher gear. The private ways committee has been working for more than a year to develop a list of private ways that the town can accept as public ways. Currently, the private ways committee has developed a first and second-tier list of 20 streets that can be accepted in the near future.

Yet some residents who live on private ways, but haven't been included in the first or second tier, feel left out. A group of residents who live on private ways has submitted a citizens article to town meeting asking that five streets be accepted as public ways.

The article was expected to be the first order of business at the second session of town meeting, which was scheduled to reconvene Wednesday night after the Mariner went to press.

The private ways committee has selected 12 streets on the first tier to be accepted as public ways at next year's annual town meeting. The list includes Bates Lane, Forest Notch, Lantern Lane, Locust Road, Norfolk Road, Reservoir Road, Riverview Road, Rocky Lane, Short Street, Whitney Woods Lane, and Norman Todd Road.

The second tier is a preliminary list of streets for acceptance, including Fair Oaks Lane, Old Pasture Road, Fern Way, Hillside Drive, Ledge Way, Ledge Wood, Wood Way, and Brewster Road.

The citizen's article asked town meeting to accept five private ways as public ways. The citizen's article included two streets on the private ways committee's second tier list — Fair Oaks Lane and Old Pasture Road — as well as Cedar Acres Lane, Cedar Acres Drive, and Surry Drive.

> "This is not political or popular. We will do what is in the best interests of the whole town."
> — HENRY RATTENBURY, PRIVATE WAYS COMMITTEE

Residents who live on private ways say they pay taxes and should be able to utilize the same town services as residents on public streets.

The citizen's article has not been supported by the advisory committee, the private ways committee or the board of selectmen. Town officials have indicated that some private ways would require too much costly alterations to qualify for acceptance as public ways.

Laura Doherty lives on Cedar Acres Lane, a private way that is not one of the eight streets up for acceptance next year.

Doherty helped sponsor the citizen's article because she felt the private ways committee was moving too slow.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said the wording of the citizen's article may not be adequate for legal approval.

Doherty planned to reword the article before Wednesday night's session of town meeting.

The town has known for some time it must do something about the high number of private ways in town.

Currently, there are 11 miles of private ways in Cohasset — about 80 streets— and 34 miles of accepted streets.

Voters at last year's annual town meeting allocated $50,000 to prepare some private ways for public acceptance.

For the town, accepting private ways translates into more chapter 90 highway funding from the state. Chapter 90 money is used for repaving, repairing and improving roads.

The roads must conform to state standards and the planning boards subdivision rules to qualify for acceptance and chapter 90 funds.

The state uses a simple formula to determine the amount of money a town receives in chapter 90 funding. Seventy-five percent of the calculation depends on how many miles of accepted roads there are in a town, 12.5 percent is based on population, and the remaining 12.5 percent is based on the number of residents who work in Cohasset.

For residents, living on public ways means public maintenance and repairs to sewer and water lines, and roads and sidewalks.

Some residents have complained about the private ways committee's slow pace, pointing out that the committee didn't meet for several months at one point.

Private ways committee Chairman Ross Rosano did not return telephone calls from the Mariner.

Private ways committee member Henry Rattenbury commented at length about the committee's activities and progress. Rattenbury said the committee was being criticized unfairly by residents angry that their streets aren't on the first two lists.

"People have complained that we didn't meet for several months," Rattenbury said. "But we didn't meet for two to three months because we needed legal counsel about where we are going. Some private ways are privately owned, and it's always very touchy when you take people's property."

Rattenbury said the committee decided not to meet until town counsel Paul DeRensis supplied information about the legal implications of taking private ways. The committee was also waiting for the Norfolk County Engineers to look up deeds and information showing who owns specific private ways.

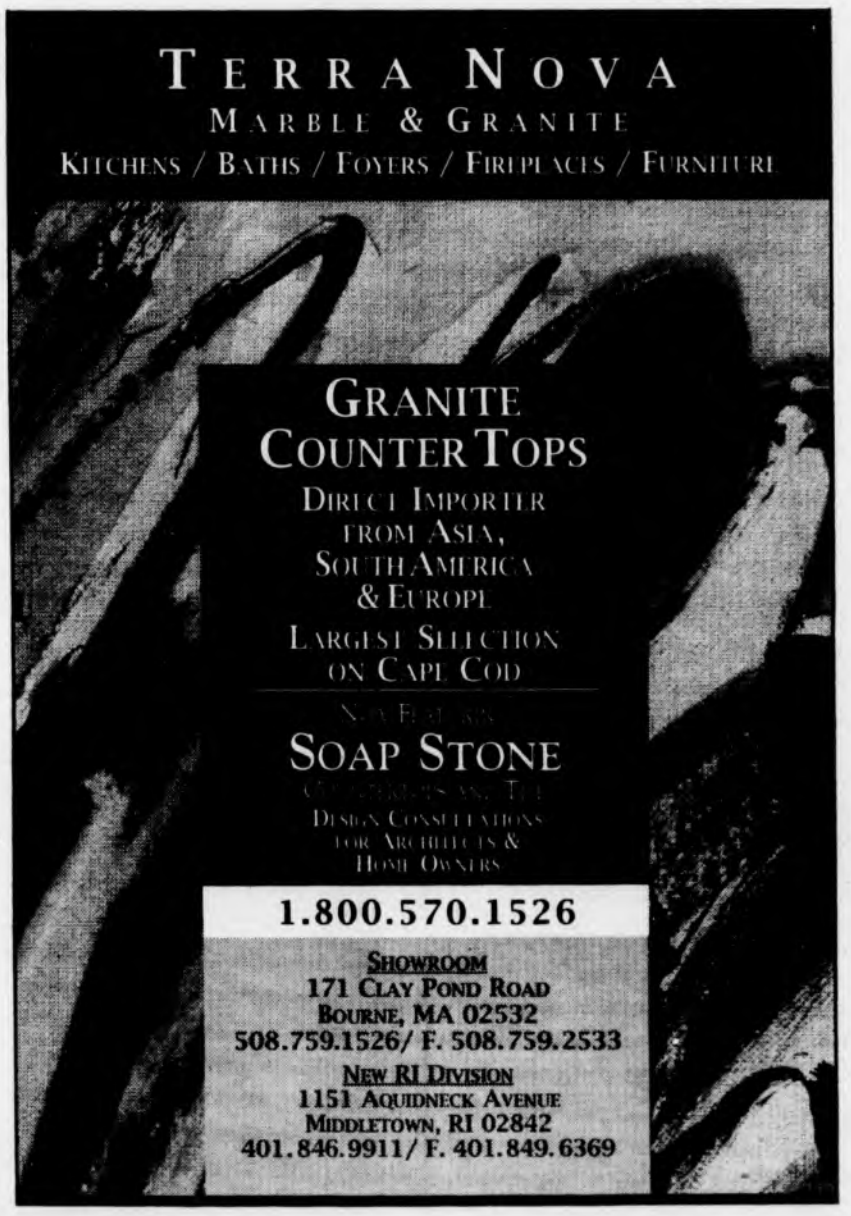
The committee has not spent any of the $50,000 allocated for private ways, Rattenbury said.

The committee also is aware that some residents feel it is not being open about the way it selects streets for possible acceptance, Rattenbury said.

"This is not political or popular," Rattenbury said. "We will do what is in the best interests of the whole town."

Rattenbury pointed out that he lives on a private way, Briarwood Lane, which probably will not be recommended for acceptance to the town. Briarwood Lane is too narrow for legal acceptance and has no drainage.

"A gentleman from Cedar Acres Lane came to one of our meetings and became very upset that his street wasn't being recommended for acceptance," Rattenbury said. "But the people that are serving on these committees don't get paid, and they're just trying to do the best they can."



Rattenbury said the DPW Superintendent Harold Litchfield inspected Cedar Acres Lane, but felt that the pattern of cracking and erosion showed that the structural underpinnings of the road were inadequate. Major work would be needed to bring

Private ways

Cedar Acres Lane up to the planning board's standards.

Other residents on private ways have informed the committee not to consider their streets for acceptance as public ways.

"Some residents like things just the way they are," Rattenbury said.

Rattenbury said that there is nothing easy about what the committee is trying to accomplish, and several key problems remain unresolved.

The water commission will not replace broken water lines under private ways. Rattenbury said. This was the case recently in the Newtonville area off Atlantic Ave.

Residents had a persistent water leak, but the water commission would not repair it because it was on a private way. Residents eventually had to band together and pay for the repair themselves.

Some private ways are used as public access roads, like Howe Road. The town will need to take some sewer easements on private ways when it puts in new sewer lines on Jerusalem Road.

Rattenbury cited Black Rock Road as one private way that will require a sewer easement, which essentially places the maintenance of the lines under town control.

In the meantime, Rattenbury and the rest of the private ways committee will continue working on identifying streets acceptable for use as public ways.

And Doherty and other residents of private ways will take their case to town meeting looking for public support.

Annual Halloween fair scares up a crowd who were there with their two children, Blair, almost three, and Shannon, 17 months, said that the "o Fish" game was their favorite because they had all won prizes. Bill said that he had a great time with his kids and also ran into friends whom he hadn't seen for a while and that was nice, too.

The fair, which has been an annual tradition in town for 20 years, was sponsored by the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, its largest annual fundraiser, which last year raised more than $3,000.

"The fair is to celebrate those young at heart," said Lynne Sheridan, the director of the nursery school. She said that all the proceeds go to the school and help feed the scholarship fund. Sheridan believes that the fair is a very positive, family-oriented event and notes that every child leaves each game or activity with a prize or something they made. QuickKava, The Silver Spoon and Kennealey Meats all donated goods for the fund-raiser.

Susan Jaffe, who is on the parents' board for the nursery school and has been helping out with the fair for the last three years, said that each year they add new activities.

"Kids who are not in middle or high school, but enjoyed the fair when they were youngsters, are acting as volunteers and it's fun for them, too," Jaffe said. With the ever-increasing success of the fair, plans are already in the works for next year's merrymaking.

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

Daylight savings time is over, the darkness that creeps in by 4 p.m. is here! The good news is that now everyone is hungry, and cannot wait for a good, hearty meal - one that fills the house with pleasing aromas as well as being tasty and satisfying! The following meal is guaranteed to please one and all!

May I present chicken and pasta provincial:

4 cups canned tomatoes
2 cups chicken stock
1 5-pound chicken (I use a roaster chicken)
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
1 large onion, cut into quarters
1 clove garlic, peeled and crushed
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
2 teaspoons salt
good pinch each, basil and thyme
1 pound fresh mushrooms, sliced and sautÈed
1 cup light cream
1/4 pound grated Cheddar cheese
1/2 pound spaghetti, cooked according to package directions
1/4 pound cheddar cheese (1/2 pound all together)

Simmer 4 cups canned tomatoes and 2 cups chicken stock until liquid is reduced by one half. Season with 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, 1 large onion, cut into quarters, 1 clove garlic, 1 tbsp. Worcestershire sauce, 2 tsps. salt, basil and thyme. Slice and sautÉ mushrooms (you can use canned if desired) in a little butter until golden. Drain. Add to sauce along with 4 cups cooked chicken meat cut into bite-sized pieces. Stir 2 tbsp. flour into mushroom drippings. Add 1 cup light cream and 1/4 pound grated cheddar cheese. Heat and stir until thickened. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Add to the tomato-chicken mixture. You may cool and freeze at this point if you desire; when ready to serve, thaw. Cook spaghetti, toss with sauce. Turn into an 8-10 cup casserole. Sprinkle the top with another 1/4 pound Cheddar cheese. Heat in a 350∞ oven until bubbling, about 45 minutes. This makes 8 servings.

I usually serve this with a salad, crusty bread and Italian green beans.

Make it scary, but make it safe

Halloween is here and what a festive and fun holiday it is.

Pumpkins perch on porch steps, goblins, ghouls and ghosts swing from leafless tree limbs and jack-o'-lanterns aglow, grin and glare at us from neighbors' windows. Families come together to design or purchase the perfect Halloween disguise, and kids collect and consume enough tasty treats to keep their dentists rich beyond belief. What could be better?

I have so many fond memories of the week leading up to the big night, oftentimes even Mom and Dad would get into the act, not only designing but also donning costumes along with we children.

In our community, a separate night — October 30 — was unofficially designated for mischief, so nothing spoiled the sweet fun of trick-or-treating. "Mischief Night" featured shaving cream and toilet paper prominently.

Today's tricks seem more malevolent and because they coincide with the rest of the Halloween night reverie, parents and children must beware.

Several South Shore towns are stepping up police patrols to keep the peace, and communities like Cohasset — where bike patrol officers were egged by a roaming mob of youths last year — is seeking a voluntary community-wide curfew of 8:30 p.m. In Scituate Harbor, the merchants are offering store-to-store trick-or-treating Friday afternoon and Scituate Marketplace is hosting an in-store Halloween party for kids. In Cohasset, the Teen Center is hosting a Halloween dance. But if your kids plan to hit the roads Friday night, make sure you drill them on some important trick-or-treating safety tips;

* Visit only homes you know, accompanied by an adult or older person
* Carry flashlights and when possible wear light colored clothes so that you are visible to cars
* Avoid long, dragging costumes and high heel shoes that could cause you to fall
* Do not carry sharp objects. Cardboard swords and knives work just as well
* Stick to neighborhoods with sidewalks or walk against oncoming traffic if there is no sidewalk
* Choose costumes that use make-up rather than masks that interfere with your vision
* Take off your mask when crossing the street if it inhibits your vision
* Never cross the street between parked cars
* Trick-or-treat in daylight hours
* Do not eat any candy until it has been checked by parents and eat only packaged items
* Don't go it alone. Trick-or-treating is always more fun in a group with friends

Residents should leave outside lights on so children can see where they are walking and remove obstacles from steps, sidewalk and lawn so that they do not trip on them. Greet trick-or-treaters at the door, do not encourage them to come inside.

Good Halloween judgment needed

To the Editor:

Halloween is a magical, mystical holiday. Its appeal is universal.

Unfortunately, the specter of Halloween, 1996, has haunted everyone in Cohasset for the past 12 months. Now, we have an opportunity to bury the ghost of the unfortunate events of last year and recreate a Halloween that everyone can enjoy.

The PSO joins with the Drug and Alcohol Committee, the town's clergy, the police, and all of the residents of Cohasset in urging parents to abide by the 8:30 p.m. curfew voted by the selectmen. This gives the town's trick or treaters plenty of time to haunt their local neighborhoods. It provides an identifiable "end" to outdoor activities and enables residents to pursue their own activities for the remainder of the evening.

For older "goblins and witches," there is a varsity football game under the lights at Alumni Field. What a great opportunity for the entire high school student body to attend and cheer on the Blue and White! The game starts at 7 and ends around 9 p.m. When the lights are out at Alumni Field, it should be a signal that all CHS students are expected to be at home or attending a chaperoned party.

For middle school "werewolves," the Teen Center is sponsoring a dance at Deer Hill from 7 to 10 p.m.

The town has done its part to ensure there are activities for all ages. It's incumbent upon us, as parents, to know which of the activities our children are attending. We also need to reiterate to them that, just because Halloween is a fun holiday, we nevertheless expect good judgment and appropriate behavior to prevail.

Thanks for caring

To the Editor:

It was heartwarming to have received all the comforting, caring cards and letters during this very difficult time for us. We appreciate everyone's expression of sympathy upon the death of William (Bill) Protulis Sr. It is a great comfort to our family to know that Dad had so many good friends and neighbors. True, we have sustained a great shock and a great loss by his passing, but it is comforting to know that he was loved by so many.

Garden help is appreciated

To the Editor:

The South Shore Community Center would like to express their thanks to the Girl Scouts for their work last week in planting hundreds of pink and white tulip bulbs in the "Friendship Garden" bordering the Center. Their efforts will be rewarded next spring as the tulips come into bloom!

We would like to extend a special thank you to Andrea Martone, the many other leaders who volunteered, and Barbara Anglin ("The Secret Gardener") for their supervision and assistance.

We would also like to say to anyone currently wintering-over a garden and dividing bulbs who has any excess plants, the Center would be pleased to use them! Just bring them to us at 3 North Main St. in Cohasset, where they will be put to good use.

Thanks to all for your hard work.

Halloween Fair is a spook-tacular time for all!

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP LEFT—Jesse and Janice Batts enjoy the annual Halloween Fair on Cohasset Common. The event attracted witches, ghosts and goblins of all ages. Two-year-old Jack Kuppens ignores the rules and uses his hands to enjoy the doughnut eating contest at the Halloween Fair on Sunday. Ducks in the foreground appear oblivious to all the excitement going on. The annual event is sponsored by the South Shore Community Center Nursery School. Cohasset man charged with larceny and tax fraud

A Cohasset man could face up to 19 years in prison and $1 million in fines if convicted on larceny and criminal tax charges.

John P. Conroy, 61, of 379 Atlantic Ave., was indicted Oct. 24 in Suffolk Superior Court on one count of embezzlement by a trustee and three counts of filing false tax returns. Conroy is accused of stealing nearly $900,000 from the American Cancer Society and Children's Hospital.

Reached at his Boston office, Conroy declined to comment referring the call to his attorney. Conroy's attorney, Joseph Brodigan, Sr. of Boston said Conroy denies the charges and intends "to vigorously defend himself against them."

He declined further comment.

The charges follow an investigation by the state Department of Revenue's Criminal Investigations Bureau which revealed that Conroy allegedly stole funds he was supposed to be distributing as a trustee for the estate of John Burke of West Roxbury who died in 1993. Conroy was named the executor for the $1.4 million estate, which was to be distributed to the American Cancer Society and Children's Hospital.

Burke, a retired government worker, lived in a modest home and saved his money in a variety of passbook accounts, certificates of deposit (CDs) and Blue Chip stocks, said Assistant Attorney General Andrew Zaikis, who is prosecuting the case.

In the course of his handling of the estate assets, Conroy, an attorney and a CPA who works out of a Boston office, is charged with stealing $888,000 of the estate assets for his personal use without informing either the probate court or the charities, Zaikis said.

Zaikis said Conroy filed $635,000 in executor fees on the estate which caught the eye of an auditor at the DOR. A subsequent investigation reportedly revealed that Conroy allegedly wrote off large amounts in bogus partnership losses on his tax returns.

The two charities only received $200,000 each from the estate, Zaikis said.

The attorney general's office was able to obtain a search warrant for Conroy's office where investigators found the financial records to come up with the numbers in the indictment, Zaikis said.

A former member of the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs, Conroy, who lives in a $1.1 million house overlooking the ocean, allegedly invested and subsequently lost much of the money in the stock market. Conroy's house was sold at a foreclosure auction in 1996, but the assessors' office said the house is in his wife's name.

The tax charges stem from allegations that he failed to accurately report the $888,000 on his tax returns he filed with the state in 1993 and 1994. Conroy also allegedly took more than $1 million in partnership deductions on state income tax returns he filed in 1992-94, Zaikis said.

He said Conroy was a partner with the accounting firm Peat Marwick for 18 years before starting his own business in 1992.

When the charities became aware of the criminal investigation by the Department of Revenue and the Attorney General's Office, they sued Conroy in Suffolk Probate Court to have him removed as executor for the estate. Conroy has been removed as executor and ordered to provide an accounting of his handling of all assets and return all money taken from the estate. Zaikis said Conroy is making payments of $800 a month to the charities.

Conroy has supporters in town.

Years ago Conroy helped lift the Cohasset Community Center out of bankruptcy by helping the nonprofit organization get a small business association loan, according to the center's former director Judy Volungis of Forest Avenue.

"He's a very, very nice guy. I can't find any fault with him," Volungis said.

She also noted that Conroy's house was not worth $1 million plus when he purchased it about 15 years ago. Volungis said the house sold at the time for about $480,000.

If convicted, Conroy faces up to 10 years in state prison on the larceny count, and up to three years in state prison for each count of filing false tax returns. In addition, he faces fines ranging from $25,000 to $100,000 per count.

Zaikis explained that punishment under the trustee embezzlement law is more severe than a larceny charge. He said the law tries to protect the elderly from theft from their estates after they die.

Millard MacNeill celebrates 70 years with church choir

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

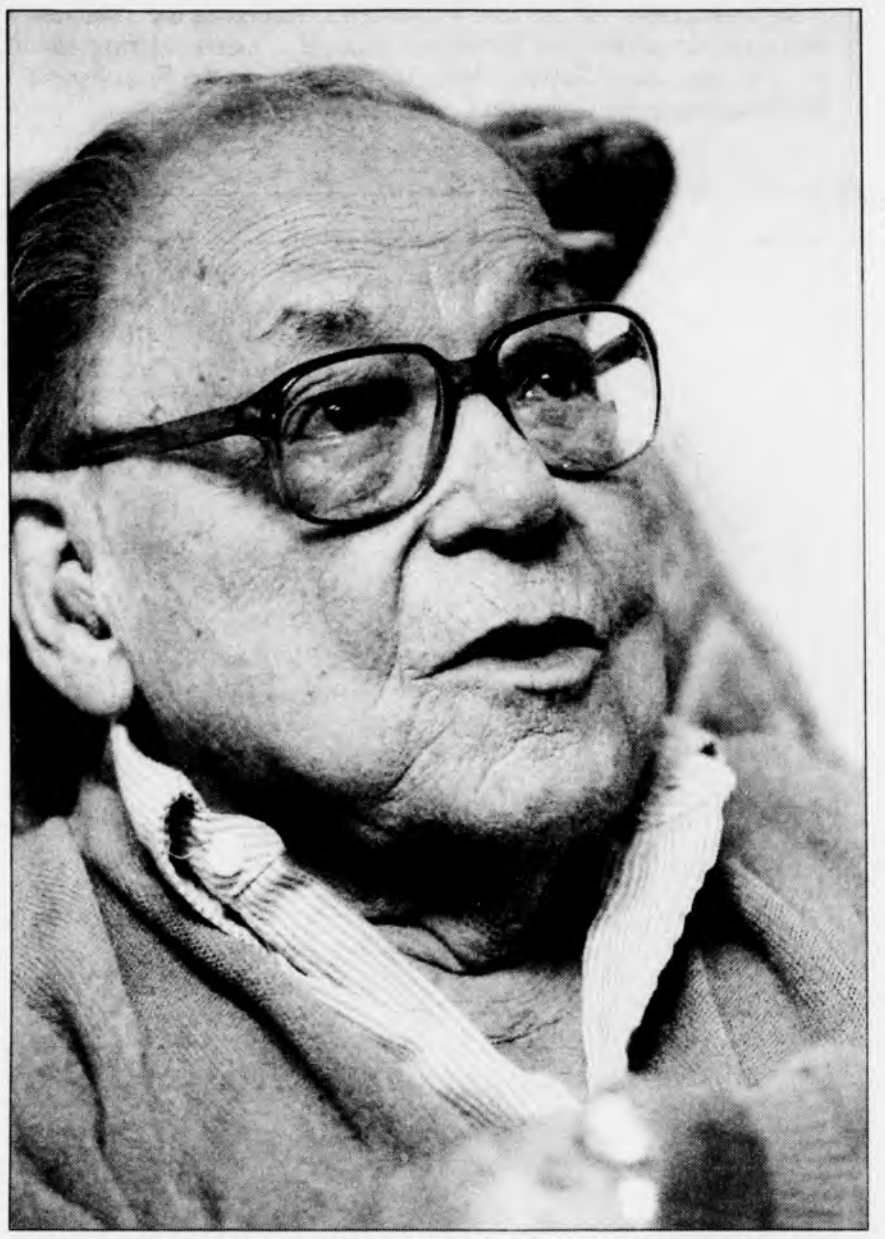
Cohasset resident Millard MacNeill has spent 70 of his 87 years in song. Every Sunday at 10 a.m. at the Second Congregational Church, he can be found contributing his musical talents to the same choir he has been singing in since he was 17 years old.

"I love to sing and I love the people," said MacNeill at his home on Jerusalem Road where he lives with his wife Kerstin.

Granted, many of the faces and voices in the choir are different. MacNeill has seen at least five choir directors and six ministers come and go. He has sung tenor to hundreds of hymns and psalms in two different choir lofts in the same church. A 1928 fire damaged the roof and sanctuary of the church, which was renovated later that year.

"He has a wonderful tenor voice," said the Reverend Gary Ritts, who has stood beside MacNeill in the choir. "He could sing the note almost as he looked at it. He's the one everyone follows."

Now a retired plumber, MacNeill spends his time working in his yard and tending to his health. In the past 10 years, he has had two heart attacks and developed emphysema and neuropathy — dead nerves.



"Even though I lose my voice when I talk, I can still sing," he said. "I'll sing as long as I'm still breathing."

Just last week, a swarm of bees attacked him while he was outside clearing brush. MacNeill is allergic to bee stings.

"I've had just about everything you can have," MacNeill said, smiling. "The human body can put up with just about anything. I've come through very well. I have great faith."

"Even though I lose my voice when I talk, I can still sing. I'll sing as long as I'm still breathing."

— MILLARD MACNEILL

Millard MacNeill reminisces about getting the most out of life.

Born on Oct. 5, 1910 in North Scituate, MacNeill has spent his life in Scituate and Cohasset with his family.

The youngest of four children, MacNeill lived in a house that his father John built — for his arrival into the world — on Grove Street in Scituate, now Mann Lot Road. Because there were no buses or tarred roads in town during his childhood, he walked to Hatherly School on Country Way, which was later torn down.

In 1921, MacNeill moved with his family to Cohasset, where they rebuilt a home on Elm Street to house a hardware store, a plumbing business and a residence.

MacNeill graduated in 1927 from the Osgood School on Elm Street, which is no longer in existence. He received his high school diploma with about a dozen classmates.

At about that same time, MacNeill joined the Second Congregational Church choir. MacNeill comes from a family of singers, all of whom were involved in the choir. His sister Martha also sang solos on the radio.

After high school, MacNeill went on to study business administration at the now defunct Bryant and Stratton school in Boston. He worked as a bookkeeper and teller at the Cohasset National Bank, which later became the Rockland Trust Co.

But he decided he wanted to follow in his father's footsteps and become a plumber.

He joined his father's plumbing business, John MacNeill and Son, which John started around 1915. MacNeill and his brother Fred incorporated the business as MacNeill Inc. In 1951, when his father died.

In 1987, with 35 employees MacNeill lost the business because many of his clients had gone bankrupt. For the next two years, he delivered newspapers to 110 customers on his Cohasset route. He has also been a Mason at the Conahasset Lodge for 59 years.

"I've had a lot of fun," MacNeill said of the ups and downs of his life. "Having a good time is part of being healthy."

"He has a wonderful tenor voice. He could sing the note almost as he looked at it. He's the one everyone follows."

— REV. GARY RITTS

MacNeill's positive attitude has always been a source of admiration for Rev. Ritts.

"I appreciate his attitude about life. It's always been positive even though he's had some rough times," he said. "He's an inspiring, wise man."

And MacNeill won't be quitting the choir any time soon. Churchgoers can still find him standing in the back row of the choir in the tenor's section.

He attributes his 70-year stint in the choir to the fact that he "stayed alive that long."

"I won't miss if I can help it. I still do all right. I still sing on pitch," he said.

In September 1925 at the age of 15, Millard MacNeill (at left) dug in to the ground breaking for the side extensions on the front of the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset. MacNeill, now 87, has been a member of the church choir for 70 years.

Area residents pack train hearing in Hingham

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Some 250 residents of Hingham, Scituate, Cohasset and neighboring communities packed Hingham Town Hall last Thursday. They were attending the state transportation committee hearing to air their concerns and in some cases, support for, the MBTA's proposal to restore rail service to the South Shore. More than 100 of them signed up to speak, although there was not enough time for everyone to voice their views.

Concerns ranged from noise, air quality issues, safety and the amount of cars rail service would take off congested highways leading into Boston.

The anti-train sentiment of most of the meeting's participants was felt from the outset, with opponents gathered outside the town hall holding "No Train" signs.

Most of those in attendance were vehemently opposed to rail restoration, but a handful, including former Hingham resident William Grimes, now of Watertown, spoke in favor of the proposal. It was standing-room only by the time the meeting commenced at 6 p.m., with some seats becoming available as the meeting headed into its third hour.

Rep. Joe Sullivan, D-Braintree, chairman of the House transportation committee, said the hearing was called "to discover firsthand residents' concerns about Greenbush restoration." Sullivan is a staunch supporter of the proposal to rebuild Greenbush.

And although he said residents' concerns should not be taken lightly, Sullivan told the Hingham Journal that he views alternatives to rail service offered by Greenbush opponents as supplements to, not replacements for, rail restoration. Those include HOV (high-occupancy vehicle) express lanes on the Southeast Expressway and enhanced commuter boat service.

Also in attendance were three other members of the transportation committee - Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth; Rep. William Straus, D-Mattapoisett; and Rep. John Quinn, D-Dartmouth. Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, spoke as an "honorary" member of the committee.

Murray quipped to Sullivan, "If you had considered my proposal to put a monorail down Route 3, we wouldn't be her tonight!"

Hedlund emphasized the tremendous impact the train would have on all South Shore communities through which Greenbush would run.

Grimes spoke in place of "Back on Track" president Ross Hall of Hingham, who was out of town at the time of the meeting. The organization has been a supporter of rail restoration for a number of years.

"We can't sweep the concerns under the carpet because we like trains," he said. "There are many problems to be addressed, but many (who now oppose the train) will probably think, 'What was all the fuss about?' once the line is restored." Grimes was a 20-year resident of Hingham and a longtime member of the Citizens Advisory Committee.

A Norwell doctor who handles cardiac patients, Arthur Garceau, pointed out that many diseases are aggravated by stress, including the daily strain of commuting to Boston by car.

"A commuter rail would be the civil way to commute - with riders not frazzled but wearing a smile on their faces," he said. "Greenbush may not take too many cars off the road, but it will take many stressed people off of them."

Hingham resident Ellen Dresser called for the passage of legislation "so not another penny is spent on Greenbush ever."

Although Sullivan has no intention of changing his position on Greenbush, he told the Mariner that the transportation committee "holds the purse strings, so the MBTA will adhere to many of our requests," including not turning a deaf ear to citizens' concerns.

Facts relating to Greenbush restoration

If Greenbush restoration is approved:

•the MBTA estimates a ridership of between 4,100 and 4,500 per day. However, rail opponents claim those ridership figures are flawed;

•About 1,300 cars would be taken off the Southeast Expressway;

•There would be 12 round-trips a day from Scituate to South Station;

•The number of grade crossings could be reduced from the current 43 to about 30 or 32, according to MBTA Manager of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan. He was referring to current plans showing the elimination or consolidation of several of them. With 43 grade crossings, the train would cross a roadway 1,032 times a day without stopping.

•ïThe estimated cost of Greenbush restoration would increase from $215 million to about $285 million, depending on a number of unknown factors. Those include mitigation costs, which amounted to $35-$40 million for the Plymouth and Middleboro lines, which recently began service.

Brennan admitted Greenbush restoration poses a larger challenge than those lines, in part because of the close proximity of many properties to the railroad tracks, the significant amount of environmentally sensitive areas and the number of historical properties located along the line.

•Travel time from Scituate to South Station, where the Greenbush line ends, would be approximately 60-62 minutes.

•The per-passenger ridership subsidy for commuters taking the Greenbush line into Boston is estimated at approximately $3 per rider per trip.

Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, chairman of the committee, is encouraging South Shore residents to continue offering their input about the restoration project so the committee "can make the best-informed decisions regarding rail restoration."

Greenbush timeline is detailed

Plans for the restoration of Greenbush rail service and the related environmental review process have been ongoing for more than a decade but have geared into a higher level in the past two years.

•In 1995, the MBTA submitted an Environmental Impact Statement to the state and federal governments, which was approved by the secretary of environmental affairs. The Greenbush proposal called for an "at-grade commuter rail using state funds only."

•Dozens of community meetings were held concerning a number of issues, resulting in substantive changes brought together as part of the "final" Environmental Impact Report.

ïIn 1996, the MBTA filed for a permit from the Army Corps of Engineers to fill 5.2 acres of wetlands.

•The Corps provided a series of questions to the MBTA following a public meeting this past August, which they were asked to address by Oct. 31.

•The MBTA informed the Corps earlier this month that they might not be able to meet that deadline.

•Next spring is the target date for completion by the MBTA of the full Environmental Impact Report.

•If approved, the project would then move into design continuation and the final design and construction of Greenbush rail restoration.

•Construction would begin in early or mid-1999 and would be expected to go on for about two years.

•By the middle or end of 2001, the first Greenbush trains would begin running.

Train hearing

However, Sullivan feels the regional benefits outweigh the project's negative aspects, including the fact that the train would pass in close proximity to many homes and businesses.

"It's important that we move ahead to the completion of all three lines," he said.

"The impacts there were well beyond anything which was reviewed," she said.

Michael Dick of Cohasset was concerned about wetlands.

"Train restoration will have a severe impact on wetlands," he said. "Most people don't realize how wetlands function (and the purpose they serve)."

He also expressed concern about insufficient noise and vibration mitigation for homes located along the railroad right-of-way.

"The MBTA is doing the absolute minimum," he said. "If the project is going to be done, it should be done right. We're not getting enough in return for the kind of sacrifice we're making."

With the meeting drawing to a close, Sullivan said he would seriously consider the comments made at the hearing in making recommendations to the legislature.

"This meeting was not just window-dressing," said Sullivan, who didn't rule out the possibility of another hearing.

Revenue sharing from lottery boosts town's coffers

New bill would help towns that sell most tickets

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

In Cohasset, as in many South Shore communities, the Massachusetts Lottery has proved to be the proverbial win-win situation. Thanks to the Lottery's $3 billion record sales year in 1997, the Department of Revenue has continued to write fresh checks to local general funds, with another unexpected dividend coming in December.

Moreover, the checks are all profits, with very little overhead associated with the sales of tickets

This September, for specifics, Cohasset, which already banked $318,275 in payouts this year, picked up an extra $11,898, and another windfall is expected to come in December, according to Michael Coffey, a spokesman for the Lottery. Coffey said the brisk sales of lottery tickets and controlled administrative costs allowed the Massachusetts Lottery to grow by an impressive 12.2 percent, and the extra checks reflect the better than expected performance.

As for the downside, there has been little reason to complain here. Though Cohasset gets substantially less state aid from the lottery than poorer communities, it also has little trouble from the sale of lottery tickets. The day of a typical big jackpot drawing by the Massachusetts Lottery in Cohasset looks about like every other day. Last year, the town produced about $2.5 million in lottery ticket sales, and according to police chief Brian Noonan, there's never been a problem with long traffic lines or accidents, due to people rushing to buy a last-minute ticket.

"We have so many spots in town that sell them," the chief said. "It kind of diffuses it."

Amid all the good news, it might be hard to see why some cities and towns in other areas have a question about the way the lottery's profits get divided.

Yet, the Lottery's growth has brought problems to communities near the state border. There, the high stakes prize will attract a procession of out-of-state license plates, clogged highways, and traffic accidents. Up to now, such communities have had no way to offset the local cost of doing the Lottery's business.

But that situation could be about to change.

On Wednesday, Rep. Philip Travis, D-Rehoboth, introduced new legislation on Beacon Hill to sweeten the pot for the communities that produce the bulk of the Lottery's ticket sales. Though the bill, which is co-sponsored by the Seekonk selectmen, will not alter the basic formula used to determine lottery distributions, it would, if passed, divide up 20 -25 percent of revenues due to growth only, to give an advantage to the communities that sell the most chances such as Seekonk where lottery sales last year topped $14 million,

However, if Lottery earnings go flat next year, those communities would not get any extra

But although Cohasset's state aid from the lottery now ranks among the lower third rung of cities and towns, officials here are not sure the new bill is an opportunity, and they are taking a wait and see attitude about the new proposal.

Town Administrator Mark Haddad said, "Any money we get from the Massachusetts Lottery is greatly appreciated."

Haddad also said he wasn't ready to comment on the new bill until he figures out whether it would help Cohasset.

Similarly, town accountant Michael Buckley said, "I think everyone's doing good as is." He was not sure there were enough lottery outlets in town to increase ticket sales.

Despite their satisfaction with the current situation, in discussing the bill's objective Travis said the current lottery distribution is not fair to communities like Raynham and Seekonk which sell more than their fair share of Massachusetts Lottery tickets but are not compensated for their expenses. The representative also said the new bill would not punish communities which failed to sell a lot of tickets. They would still share between 75 and 80 percent of the growth revenues.

Town attempts to stem flooding

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The town took a step toward preventing more flooding this week.

Special town meeting voters approved borrowing $165,000 which is the town's 25 percent share of the James Brook Flood Control Project and spending another $13,500 for an engineering consultant.

A federal grant is expected to pick up 75 percent of the cost of rebuilding the headworks at the cove near Kimballs which will allow more water from the James Brook basin to flow into the ocean during heavy rains and storms. The project includes widening the channel and adding a third 60" diameter culvert under Elm Street.

The engineering consultant will assist the town with the federal grant application and with its coordination with the MBTA relative to construction of the train which cuts through the flood plain.

Former selectman Peter Pratt, who has continued to lead the flood control effort since leaving office last spring, said it is necessary to exit at least 50 percent more water at peak flood stage into the ocean.

A year ago last week, the town had the worst incident of inland flooding since Hurricane Carol in 1955. Dozens of homes and businesses were inundated with water including the post office. Postal workers had to deliver mail in boats in part of the village area.

Later phases of the project, which will cost in excess of $2 million, include dredging and constructing new conduits throughout the center of town. The town hopes to pressure the MBTA to help fund the project as mitigation for reconstructing the railroad through wetlands.

The town will not borrow the funds for the James Brook project if the federal grant is not approved. Cohasset is eligible for the grant because it was part of a state of emergency declared by the federal government.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said flood control is one of the most important projects facing the town.

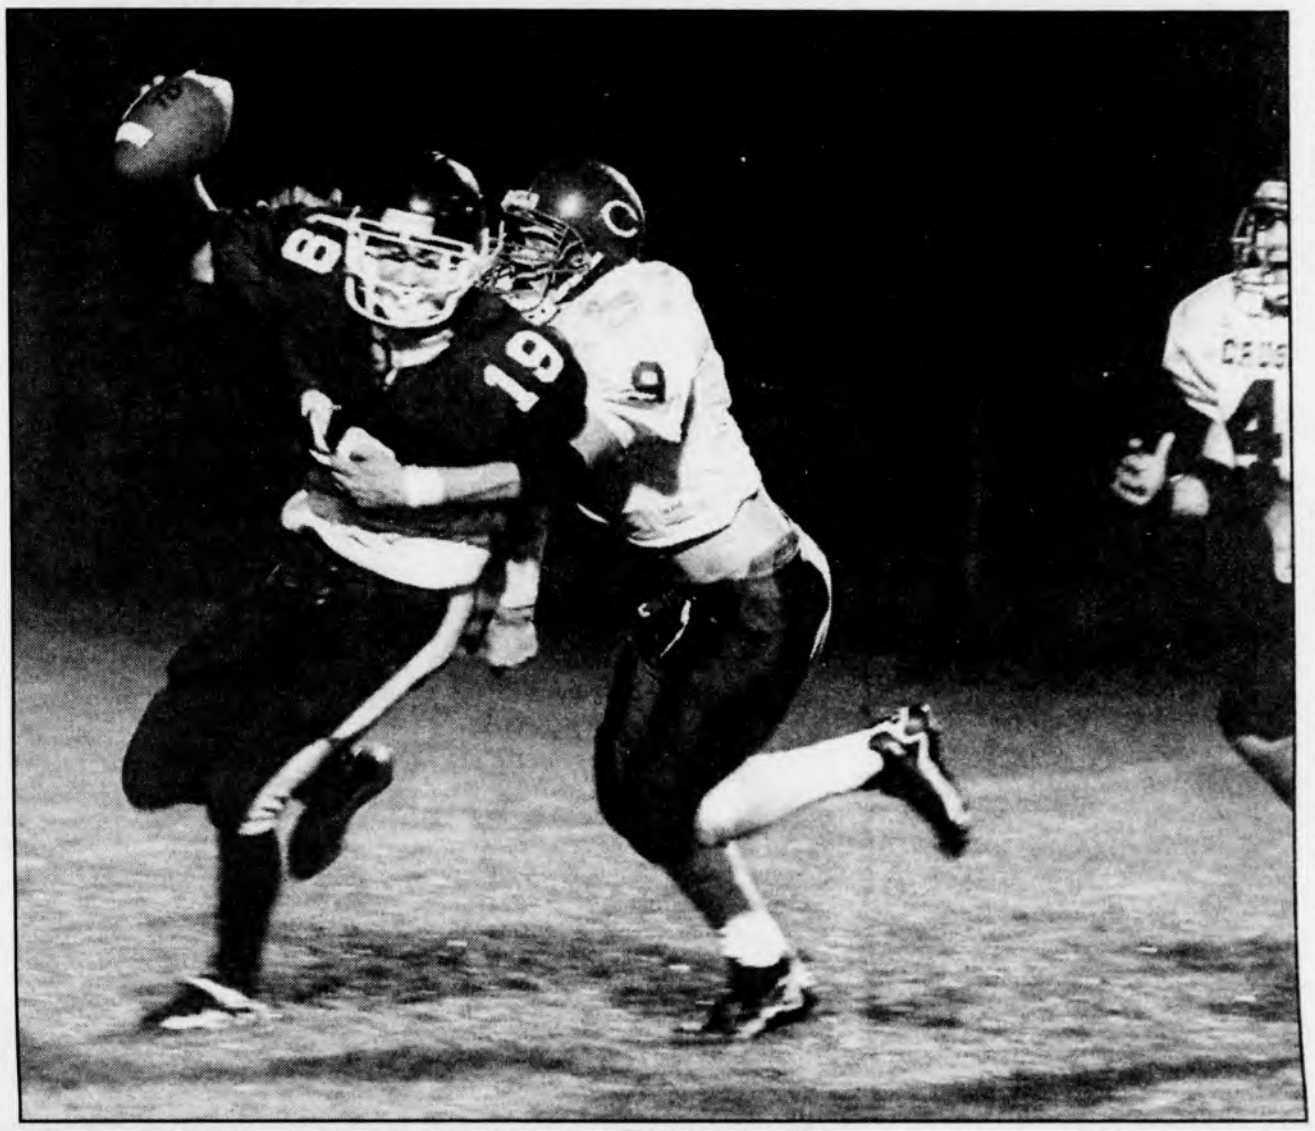
Skippers enjoy their first taste of victory



By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Skippers dispatched the Charlestown Townies, winning by a score of 18-6 last Friday and earning their first win of the year. T he Skippers, still winless in league play, played well in all aspects of the game and were able to chalk up the victory in front of their home crowd. The offensive line dominated the line of scrimmage, the Cohasset backfield was explosive, and the defense was stifling.

The game started poorly for the boys in blue, however. Charlestown jumped out to a quick 18-6 lead, when they scored from 53 yards out. Cohasset's momentary lapse in defense would not occur again, as the Townies failed time and again to gain a first down.

Despite their poor start, the Skippers came roaring back. Fullback Andy "Hammer" Hamilton cruised through the gaping hole created by the line and bulled his way for nine yards. Pat "Hollywood" Hurley fired a strike to Jamie "Snake" Buick for a 17-yard gain. Hollywood had maybe the best day of his career, throwing accurately nearly every time, particularly to Buick, his favorite target.

Skipper QB Pat Hurley is run down by a Carver defender during a recent game. Things went a whole lot better this week when Cohasset got the better of Charlestown for their first win of the season.

Skipper fans held their breath briefly, as Charlestown forced a fumble, but the pigskin was quickly recovered by a hustling John "Kase Closed" Kasameyer. Junior back Justin "Juggernaut" Golden capped the drive by hustling in from two yards out, tying the game at 6-6. The home team would not trail again.

The blue defense solidified on the Townies' second possession. John-Paul Laugelle muscled his way into the backfield and, along with the Snake, wrapped up Charlestown's quarterback for a sack.

Laugelle's play has improved nearly every week, particularly on defense, and he has become a force to be reckoned with on the line.

The defense, helped by excellent tackling by Greg "Stork" Parkinson, forced a punt and Ben "Yoda" Ketchum ran it back to the Charlestown 35 yard line, giving Cohasset excellent field position.

However, Cohasset couldn't capitalize and were once again forced to trade punts with the Townies. The Skippers were able to put together a solid drive at one point, but came up empty-handed. Hollywood salvaged a

Visiting team makes a home at Alumni Field

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

When there's something strange on your football field, who you gonna call? Goosebusters!!

Such are the problems of the modern day high school Athletic Director. Not only does Clark Chatterton have to carry a full teaching course load, arrange sports schedules and deal with the pesky media, now he needs to find a way to get rid of a visiting team from the Great White North that doesn't seem to want to leave.

A flock of Canada geese have recently found an open space to call their own. Normally that's not a bad thing, but when the space in question happens to be fouling up a patch of prime real estate near the end zone, running track and scoreboard in your brand new athletic stadium, you've got to draw the line between enjoying nature and a nuisance.

"They just seemed to have appeared out of nowhere," said Chatterton, who now also answers to the title of chief pooper scooper. "About 20 of them have shown up every morning at about 7:30 for the last two weeks and just hang around for a while. They tend to go to open spaces and I think that they like it here."

Whether it be the lovely neighborhood, affordable rent or the close proximity to the ocean and the schools, this family of geese has landed and they don't seem to be in hurry to go anywhere else but in the south end zone.

While Chatterton does not begrudge this gaggle of fine feathered friends their right to pursue happiness and domesticity, the geese do pose another problem.

Namely, their droppings have become an eyesore as well as a hazard.

The problem is not only at Alumni Field, but also at Milliken Field, the home for the youth soccer program.

"Let me tell you, these geese can make quite the mess," said Chatterton, who has the unenviable task of cleaning up behind the honkers during their most recent stay. "What they leave behind is not a pretty site at all."

Thus, the situation leaves Chatterton on the horns of a dilemma. He in no way wants to harm the geese, but instead, just like any family member who sticks around for more than a couple of weeks, he wishes that they would be on the their way.

An air horn did the trick on one recent one morning, but the group was back for some more fun less than one hour later. As well, the presence of humans in their general area also does not seem to deter the geese from going about their business.

"We don't want to harm them, and we never will," said Chatterton. "We'd just like them to take their business someplace else."

Besides the air horn, Chatterton has also been advised to place a scarecrow, an owl or something orange in the landing area to deter the birds from coming back.

"Maybe we should look into borrowing Scituate's dog," he said with a laugh. Chatterton was referring to Lily, a border collie that patrols the Widow's Walk golf course in search of geese to ward off.

Braintree had a similar geese infestation problem at their public golf course, but handled it in a little more radical of a way last year. They thinned the herd by shooting 25 to 30 birds during the last goose hunting season.

Things looking brighter down on the farm

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

In the very near future, the Cohasset High football team will no longer be at a disadvantage.

Cohasset is one of the few towns that does not have a Pop Warner League. As a result, you might say the high school does not have a "farm system."

However, that's what you might say. Actually, the town started its own version of a farm system last year.

A football program for seventh and eighth graders in the middle school was initiated which should produce great results for the varsity team in a couple of years.

According to Torin Sweeney, coach of the middle school team, a total of 34 youngsters turned out this year, 22 eighth graders and 12 seventh graders.

The team plays a seven game schedule in the Cape Division and finished last year with a record of 2-3-2. The Cohasset team is 0-5-0 this season, and

Reaching for tourney dreams

The CHS girls field hockey team was battling Nantucket in the opening round of the MIAA state field hockey tourney as the paper went to press on Wednesday afternoon.

The Lady Skippers, 6-6-4 on the year, were ranked 18th in the Division II South tourney.

If they were to defeat Nantucket, Cohasset would move on to play at Seekonk Friday afternoon, starting at 2:30 p.m.

This is the first time in three years that the team made the tourney. Look for more information in next week's edition of the Cohasset Mariner.

broken play and took off up the sidelines for 11 yards and Hammer broke tackles for a 14 yard gain, but a Snake reception wasn't enough for the first down and Cohasset was forced to punt. Hollywood kicked a beauty this time, and special teams hero Sean Parkinson downed the ball at the four yard line.

The Townies fell victim to the Skippers swarming defense again. This time, tackle Darryl "Boss" Jones poked the ball loose and Adam "Sasquatch" Sasso pounced on it for the recovery. A series of runs by Hammer and Golden gave Cohasset the ball at the one yard line and Hurley followed his offensive line into the end zone for six. Once again, the conversion failed.

The Townies would get the ball one more time in the half. Sean Parkinson, playing what would turn out to be his best game of the season, dropped the Charlestown signal caller for another sack. The first half would end with the home team on top 12-6.

In the second half, Cohasset's offensive play-calling was again quite varied. Hammer and Golden each carried the ball, and Hollywood picked up five on another broken play. However, the drive would stall, even after an acrobatic catch by Buck.

The Townie offense found no where to run, though, in the face of Cohasset's defense. Laugelle and Sean Parkinson busted into the Charlestown backfield. Each of them turned the play towards the other, with Parkinson finally making the one-armed tackle. Ben "Hitman" Roine stepped in front of a Charlestown pass, then legged it down to the 22 yard line, behind a crushing block from Parkinson.

Once again the Skippers couldn't take advantage of the situation, although they did force poor field position on the visitors. Roine came up from his position at corner to make a stop and Charlestown was forced to punt.

Ketchum had another solid runback, putting Cohasset in a position for another score. Hollywood chucked to Buick at the ten yard line for a first. Golden shook off his defender to get open on third down and Hollywood found him in the flat.

However, Golden still had to go four yards to reach the end zone. The entire Skipper offensive line, showing the hustle that was evident throughout the game, was in position to make blocks, flattening Townie defenders, and paving the way for Golden to charge into the end zone.

This brought the final score to 18-6.

However, Cohasset couldn't help but putting the finishing touches on. Snake bolted in the Townie backfield like he was shot from a cannon, bringing down the hapless quarterback for the fourth time on the day.

Matt Santoro and Daniel Trowers each carried the ball in the closing minutes of the game and Greg "Roadrunner" Boyne sped through the line to pick up a first down.

One unit which deserves special mention is Cohasset's offensive line. John "Crunch" Considine, Kasameyer, Laugelle, Sasso and Alex "Big Daddy" Russell combined to play a superb game. The "Hogs" cleared the way for the Skippers' talented running backs and kept Hollywood free from harm for the whole game.

Their play has improved steadily under the tortuous tutelage of Coach Mark Hall and, with all but Kasameyer returning next year, they should dominate next season as well.

Unfortunately, Cohasset will have a hard time carrying their momentum from last week into the week. Halloween night will find them facing the mighty Hanover Indians.

But, with Cohasset's improved play, Hanover might find themselves a Halloween surprise.

Things looking brighter down on the farm for CHS football closed out their season Wednesday Against Martha's Vineyard.

Said Sweeney, "This is definitely our answer to Pop Warner. Those kids play together for several years before finally making the high school varsity team. Our kids are already showing plenty of promise. They will not have to learn the basics when they reach the freshman team. They can get right into the swing of things.

"The kids will know one another and as a result, be a lot more comfortable as they move to different levels."

Sweeney would not name names, for fear last year's winter hats will not fit their heads this year, but there are seven or eight kids on the middle team that look like tremendous prospects. One in particular, who plays a key position, looks exceptionally good and will definitely be heard from in a couple of years.

According to Sweeney, the Cohasset football program has now grown by at least 15 to 20 percent.

Said Sweeney, "The whole program at Cohasset is getting better and better. The new middle school team will eventually put us on a level field with other teams. The lights at the field have also played a big part. The night games have brought more interest to the team. It all bodes well for the future of football in Cohasset."

While the middle school football program is showing promise for the varsity, the middle school boys soccer program is also showing promise for the varsity soccer team.

Rick Dockendorff, coach of the junior varsity team noted a total of 15 kids turned out for the team this year, 13 freshmen and two sophomores. The varsity topped the jayvees by three kids.

Rick Dockendorff's JV team finished up the season with an 8-5-2 record while the varsity finished one game under .500 and failed to make the playoffs.

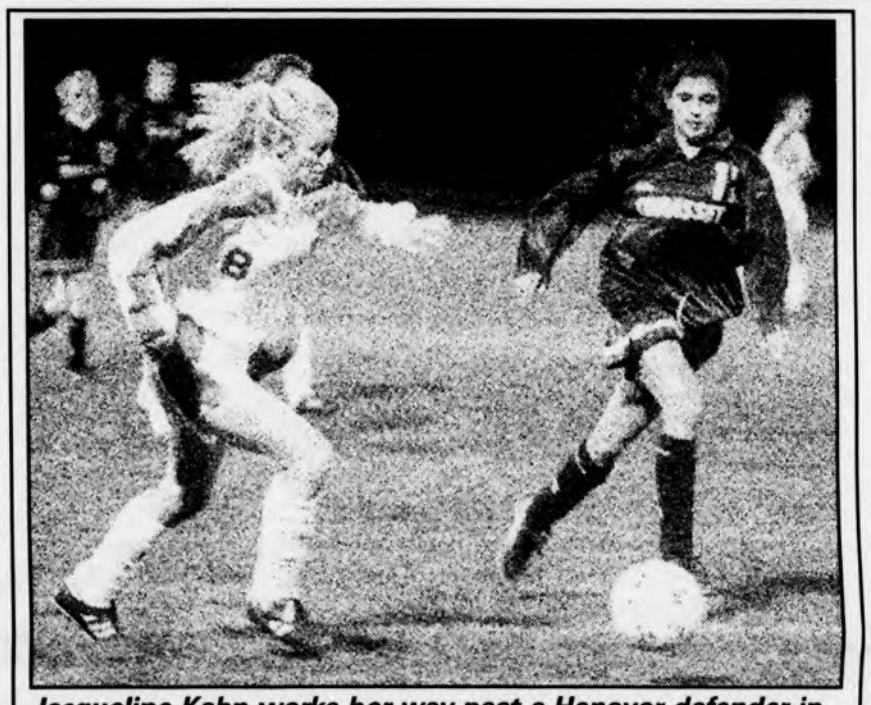
Dockendorff sees things changing dramatically for the good in the years ahead for the varsity team, thanks to the new middle school system.

Said the coach, "There seems to be a lot more interest in the sport thanks to the middle school program. I know we have several players on the junior varsity that are going to help the varsity considerably next year, and two of them are freshmen.

The freshmen players being John Cotter, who was the leading goal scorer on the team and Ben Dixby, who played great defense.

Cotter actually started the season as a goalie/forward. However, it soon became evident that Cotter was a lot more valuable scoring, and the coach had to do something about that.

He soon freed up Cotter with Nick Pastone at goalie, who became the biggest surprise of the season, according to Dockendorff. "He just took over at the goalie position. He kept getting better and better and we were all pleasantly surprised."



Two other players who showed great promise in making the varsity team are sophomores Ben Peterson and Travis Moore. Ben was the captain of the team and played stopper. Moore made his mark on defense.
